SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a new society favorite, suddenly discovers that the Valiant corporation, which he thought was his, of which was the president, actually turns out to be a mere figurehead for the corporation. His entire remaining fortune, a small plantation, is in a state bordering on insolvency. Shirley, the sister, is a young woman of great beauty and charm, but of a temper. She has to be "managed." Her mother, a woman of the old school, lives in the past. The Valiant family, John's father, Colonel Valiant, his mother, Mrs. Valiant, and John himself, are the last of a family of ancient and honorable lineage. Shirley's engagement to Jack Hanson and Valiant's duel on her account with Hanson, the result of which Valiant was disarmed and spared by Hanson, are known to all the people of the town. Valiant loses his job and leaves the city. Valiant goes to the country home of his mother's family, Glen Morven, and falls in love with Judith Lee, a girl of the mountains, of great beauty. Valiant tells Shirley of his love for the girl. Shirley, who has been engaged to Jack Hanson, and without a struggle, broken off with him, tells Valiant that she loves him. Valiant, at his father's request, goes to Richmond to see his father. Shirley, who has been "managed" by her mother, was in love with the victim of Valiant's duel, Hanson, and married him. Hanson, a gambler, is killed by a gambling rival. Shirley, a disinherited outcast, who has followed Hanson to Mex. Dandridge, that is, Valiant's father, has married Judith Lee, Valiant's mother, who has been living in Richmond, has married Colonel Valiant, and writes Shirley that he has married Judith Lee, the mountain girl, and writes Shirley that he is happy.

CHAPTER XXVIII.—Continued.

With unsteady fingers she unwrapped the oilcloth, broke the butler's seal, and read:

"Darling:

"Before you read this, you will no doubt have heard the terrible news that happened this morning. Sassoon—poor Sassoon! I can say that with all my heart—is dead. What this sad fact will mean to you God help me! I cannot guess. For I have never been certain, Judith, of your heart. Sometimes I have hoped you loved me—sometimes—as I love you. Last night when I saw you wearing my pearls (meaning to give them to you myself) I felt sure you did. But when you made no excuse, whatever happened, and to lift my hand against him, then I doubted. Was it because you feared for her life? Would to God at this moment I knew this was not true! For what, ever (to me) I must love you, Judith, and only to me, and alone, as long as I live.

"When she had read thus far, she closed the letter, and pressing a hand against her heart as if to still its throbbing, laid the two written pages in a drawer of her bureau. She went downstairs and made hasten brite, her chair to its accustomed place under the cornice, but she sat there through the falling twilight.

She and Shirley talked but little at dinner and after it, and seemed to come winging from old memories—her own girlhood, the years of her people and harum-scarum pleasures. And there were long gaps in which she sat silent, staring with her napkin, the light color coming and going in her delicate cheek, her lips in revery. It was not till the half-clock struck her usual hour that she rose to go to her room.

"Don't send Sunshine," she said. "I shan't need her." she kissed Shirley good night. "Maybe after a while I will sing for you, if you haven't played your harp for ever so long."

In the room cardinal-light Mrs. Dandridge locked the door of her room, she opened a closet, and from the very bottom of a small hatchet trunk, lifted and shook out from its folds a very vigorous, faded print of rose-colored silk, with pointed bodice and elaborate puffed sleeves. She spread this on the bed and laid with it a pair of yellow satin slipper and a little straw basket that held a sprig of what had once been cape jessamine.

In the flickering light she undressed and, rearranged her hair, catching its silvery darting meshes in a low soft coil. Looking upon herself now and then, as on an alien personality, she dressed and pinned the withered flower-spray in her breast. She lighted more candles—in the wall-brackets and on the dressing-table—and, the reading lamp on the desk. Standing before her mirror then, she gazed long at the reflection—the poor faded rose-tint against the pale ivory of her slender neck, and the white hair. A little quiver ran over her lips.

"Whatever the fact, she whispered, aloud, "you and no other is my husband!"

She unlocked the bureau-drawer and, took out the letter, and sealing herself by the table, read the remainder.

"I write this in the old library and Barbree holds my horse for the ride. He will give you this letter when I am gone.

"Last night we were dancing—all of us—at the ball. I can scarcely believe it was less than twelve hours ago! The calendar on my desk has a mote for each leaf. Today's is this: Every man carries his fate on a rib, and about his neck." Last night I would have smiled at that, perhaps; today I say to myself, 'its true—it's true!' Two little hours ago, I could have sworn that whatever happened to Sassoon would suffer no harm.

"Judith, I could not avoid the meeting. You will know the circumstances and will see that I was forced upon me. But though we met on the road, I kept my promise. Sassoon did not fall by my hand."

She had begun to tremble so that the paper shook in her hands, and from her breast, shattered by heavy pounding, the brown jessamine petals dusted down in her lap. It was some moments before she could calm herself sufficiently to read on.

"He fired at the sand and the shot went wide. I threw my pistol on the ground. Then—whether maddened by my refusal to fire, I cannot tell—he turned his weapon all at once and shot himself through the breast. It was over in an instant. The seconds did not press—do not even now for it happened, but an hour ago. As the note footnote, their backs were turned when the shots were fired. But there were circumstances I cannot touch upon to you when I make them clear prove—which made my facing him the thing I must do. Sassoon, I say in it lifetime's fare, and lifted him the better for it, even while it touched my pride. They could not know, of course, that I did not intend to fire. Well, and they will know it now! And Brinkley has my pistol; he still is and undischarged—thank God, thank God!

"But will that matter to you? If you loved Sassoon, I shall always in your mind stand as the indirect cause of his death! If for this reason I am going away—I could not bear to lose in your acceptance even and loss your right. Nor could I bear to stay here, a reminder to you of such a horror. If you love him, you will write and call me back to you. Oh, Judith, Judith, my own dear love! I pray God you will!

"She put the letter down and laid her face upon it. "Beauty! Beauty! who knows, my dear, what I never knew! I never knew! But it would not make no difference, darling. I would have forgiven you anything—everything! You know that, my dear! You have been certain of it all these years that have been so empty, empty to me!"

But when the faded rose-colored gown and the pearl-and-jessamine lilies had been laid back in the hatchet-trunk, when, but much more now unbuoyed, she lay in her bed in the dim glow of the reading-lamp, with her darling sister's face—crying across the pillow and the letter beneath it, at that the tears came swarming down her cheeks.

And with the loosening of her tears, gradually and softly came joy—infinitely deeper than the anguish and sense of betrayal. It was strange, perhaps a troubling food. Long, long ago she had gone out of the world—it was only his memory that counted to her, how that could no longer spell pain or carelessness or denial. It was spiritized by a new light, and in that light a world was earth and infinitely the end.

She found the slender golden chain that hung about her neck and opened the little black locket with its circlet of traveled pearls. And as she gazed at the face it held, which time had not touched with chance, the sound of Shirley's harp came softly in through the window. She was playing an old fashioned song, of the sort she knew her mother loved best:

Darling, I am growing old
Silver threads among the gold
Shine upon my brow today
Life is fleting fast away.
But my darling you will be
Always young and fair to me.

Outside the house—resting in the trees called and the crickets sang their ending epithalamia of summer night, and on this lone-lonesome bed, she lay cradled tenderly and linearily like a haunting perfume of pressed flowers. She smiled and lifted the locket to her face, whispering the words of the refrain:

Yes, my darling, you will be
Always young and fair to me!

The smile was still on her lips when she fell asleep, and the little locket still lay in her fingers.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

When the Clock Struck.

"Sorrow weeps—sorrow sings." As Shirley played that night, the old Hamlin proverb kept running through her mind. When she had pushed the gold harp into its corner she threw herself upon a broad sofa in a feathery deft of chintz cushions and dropped her forehead in her laced fingers. A gittitrained mirror hung on the opposite wall, out of which her sorrowful drooping eyes looked with an expression of blank and weary suffering.

Her confused thoughts raced bitter and tilther. What would be the end? Would Valiant forget after a time? Would he marry—Miss Fargo, perhaps? The thought caused her a stab of anguish. Yet she herself could not marry him. The barrier was impassable.

She was still lying listlessly among the cushions when a step sounded on the porch and she heard Chilly Lusk's voice in the hall. With heavy hands she rose and put into place her disheveled hair and rose to meet him.

In an awfully selfish to come to-night," he said awkwardly. "no doubt you are tired out."

She discovered the weariness that dragged upon her spirits like leaden weights, and made him welcome with her usual cordiality. She was, in fact, relieved at his coming. At Damory Court, the night of the ball, when she had come from the garden with her lips thrilling from Valiant's kiss, she had suddenly met his look. It had seemed to hold a startled reinvestiture that she had remembered with a peculiar compunction. Since that night he had not been at Rosewood.

Nanston had lighted a pine-knot in the fireplace, and the wells were shadowy with crimson shadows. Her hand was shielding her eyes, and as she stove to fill the gaps in their somewhat spasmodic conversation with the trivial impersonal things that belonged to their old intimacy, the flickering flames seemed to be darting untriendly fingers darting at her secret. Leaning from her nest of cushions she threw the poker into the glowing resinous mass till sparks mounted up the chimney's black maw in a tempest.

"How they fly!" she said. "Ricky Snyder calls it raising a blizard in Hades. I used to think they flew up in the sky and became the little stars. What a pity we have to grow up and learn so much! I'd rather have kept on believing that when the red leaves in the woods whirled about in a circle the fairies were dancing, and that it was the gnomes who put the cockle-burs in the horses' ears."

She had been talking at random, and Lusk became abstractedly conscious of her constrained and absent-minded manner. She had, however, but half defined his errand when he came to it all to a burst.

"I can't get to it somehow, Shirley," he said with sudden desperation, "but here it is. I've come to ask you to marry me. Don't stop me! he went on hurriedly, lifting his hand—"whatever you say I must tell you I have been trying to for months and months!" Now that he had started, it came with a hopeless vehemence that both chilled and thrilled her. Even in her own desolation, and shrinking almost unbearably from the avowal, the hope and brightness in his voice touched her with pity. It seemed to her that life was a strange jumble of unescapable and incomprehensible pain. And all the while in the young voice vibrant with feeling, her strained ear was catching imagined echoes of that other voice, graver and more self-contained, but shaken by the same passion, in that literation of "I love you! I love you!"

His answer came to him finally in her silence, and he recommitted words which he had caught in his own. They dropped, limp and unexpressive, in her lap. "Shirley," he said brokenly, "maybe you can't care for me—yet. But I'll wait! I'll be patient! I'll be content with so little, till—you do."

She stood her hand, her hot burning dim flashes in the firelight. "No, Chilly!" she said. "It makes me wretched to give you pain, but I must—I must! Love isn't like that. It isn't reasonable and orderly. It isn't. I could never give you what you want. You would end by despising me, and I—should despise myself."

He looked on her in sad incoherently. "I can't give up. Not so long as I know there's nobody else. At the porch and she heard Chilly Lusk's voice in the hall. With heavy hands Shirley put into place her disheveled hair and rose to meet him.

In 1463 the English parliament took the matter in hand and passed an act forbidding such shoes under a penalty of two inches in length being worn on account of the great fashion in shoes introduced into England in 1463.

Family Disagreements.

Disagreements often arise from a lack of humility and too much self-conceit on the part of the different members of the family. "The proud in heart stir up strife; wisdom is forgotten for the hasty reply, the unkind retorts that kindle the fire of discord and set the outcome of disorderly minds which are prone to resentment on account of lacking in the gentle grace of humility. Love does not linger in the home where petty pride shows its unlovely qualities. It chooses to dwell in the home where the spirit of unselfishness, of self-control, of tender-mindedness and of charitableness makes the atmosphere sweet.

Grievance of Suffragium.

One of the grievances of suffragists is the inferior position occupied by women as parents. A couple of days ago a woman, whose husband had, so far as she knew, gone over to the Empress of Ireland, applied to the Willesden magistrates for a vaccination exemption for her infant son. She was informed from the bench that the exemption order could not be granted until the father's death was legally proved, as the law did not recognize her as the parent of the child. If law does not enable a woman to rank as the parent of her children it must be "hard" of the most sublime type—London Globe.

Needless to say, the sight was cold. Brrr!

"We have used up the last stick of wood to the house," said the young artist to the brooding poet as they sat beside the embers of a fire. "What shall we do? Must I sacrifice my last canvas?"

"Hold!" said the poet. "I shall bring my rejection slips.

And they kept the fire going all night.

STOPPED LOSS OF PENNIES

Newsman's Peculiar System of "Balancing His Books" Proved Most Effective.

It was after the rush hour on the subway. The ticket-chopper had retired to his booth, the newsman had finished lying up his unsold papers, and save for the stagnic clamor of a departing train and the click, now and then, of a late coming ticket-puncher, quiet reigned.

The commuter was wondering exactly how long he would have to wait before he caught the first and good green lights of a Bronx express, when he was startled by a loud pounding noise in the direction of the newsstand. The newsman was the source of and leaping over the sloping top and banging the boards with might and main. When he had pounded awhile in one section he went to the next and repeated the performance. The commuter approached and ventured a question.

"What's the matter, my friend," he said, "was business so good today?"

"Business poor? Not on your life. Sales was fine. Why d'ye ask?" Then the newsman, Mr. Aston, laugh on the eighteenth century minuet. "It was not every one who felt qualified to make this public exhibition, and those fellows who intended to dance minuets used to distinguish themselves by wearing a particular kind of slipper on their headdresses. I have heard also of another curious proof of the respect in which this dance was held. Ladies immaculately clean were considered unfitted for its due performance while glove a little soiled were thought good enough for a country dance; and accordingly some prudent ladies provided themselves with two pairs for their several purposes."—London Chronicle.

Rubber Corks.

In making bottles in rubber corks much annoyance is caused by the punch making imperfect holes and "sweating the sides." A little ammonia water poured on the rubber and the mortar thereafter causes the hole to become of uniform size at every point and the operation is soon followed with much more ease.

MANY ODD MAKES OF SHOES

Interesting to Note the Evolution of Footwear Through the Centuries of Use.

In the ninth and tenth centuries the greatest princes of Europe were wooden shoes. In the reign of William Rufus of England in the eleventh century a great duke Robert the Horsed, used shoes with sharp points turned up, which he called "the raven's horns. The Romans made use of two kinds of shoes, the soleas or sandal, which covered the sole of the foot and which was worn at home or in company, and the calceus, which covered the whole foot and was always worn with the toga when one went abroad.

Greek shoes were peculiar to reaching in the middle of the leg. Slippers were in use before Shakespeare's time and were originally made right and left. Those worn by rich shaund length to the pictures of his father. The face showed sad and confused, but he knew should her mother carry in secret the measure of the man who had killed—

An acquaintance of a merchant who is engaged in a large business recently recommended an attractive young man who at the time was looking for a clerkship.

Not long after the merchant met his friend, and was asked by him if the selection of the young man in question had proved a thoroughly wise one. "Well," exclaimed the merchant, "Why, man, haven't you heard what has happened?"

"No, I haven't, sorry if he has turned out badly," said the other. "It was my firm belief that he would have suited you through and through—he was full of go."

"Full of go," was the response. "I should think he was—far too full of go for me. Why, he's clean gone, and there's a thousand dollars gone too."

"Never," cried the man who had recommended the brisket young clerk. "Really, I thought he was just the fellow you were looking for."

"So he is," declared the merchant emphatically. "So he is. I'm looking for him now."

To Dodge Lightning Strokes.

Every year people are killed or injured by lightning because they did not know what to do in a thunderstorm. Many think it is safer to be indoors than out. Most persons are killed when in the open. If you are caught in a thunderstorm don't be afraid of it, but act sensibly. Do not put beneath you have heard that it is dangerous. It is dangerous to shelter under a tree because lightning likes to strike the highest point as a rule for safety. Keep away from the open and from the edge of the woods. Do not

COMMITTEE PREPARING PLANS

Special, Aug. 26th. The executive committee of the Western Michigan Development Bureau is in session at the Pantlind. The purpose is to consider plans for the coming year and the ways and means for carrying out such plans as may be made. The bureau will make an apple exhibit at the Greater Michigan fair. It has several reels of very interesting films for the movies and these are to be shown. A series of exhibits at different points is proposed. The bureau spent between $8,000 and $10,000 last year in carrying on its campaign and the estimate for the coming year calls for about $15,000. The transportation companies were feeling hard up last year and did not contribute to the fund. These companies are represented at the meeting and it is expected they will make announcement of what aid they can give to the good cause the coming year. Among those attending the meeting are President D. H. Day, Glen Haven; Secretary, John I. Gibson, W. H. Ulmer Traverse City; Joseph Gerber, Fremont; A. S. White, Grand Rapids; Hugh J. Gray of the Pere Marquette; D. S. Payton, Charlevoix; R. B. Riedel and F. A. Mitchell, Manister.

Jos. Shores, with a force of men, has begun clearing a 30-acre tract of Charlevoix Lumber Co. cut-over hardwood land on section 25 in Marion, which will add that much to the productive area of that progressive town-hip.

On Friday, August 28th, a very pleasant beach dinner party was given Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Fitch, of East Jordan, by a few of their intimate Charlevoix friends. The delightful weather and the congeniality of the guests made the day most enjoyable.

It was a great victory for Frank Scott, and it taught a lesson to a certain class of newspapers and would-be politicians. The returns from Alpena city and county tell the story. The distinct opposition that Scott encountered was in Charlevoix city.

The exodus has begun, but is proceeding slowly. There are a good many people here, and will be during the month, many remaining until well into October. The season's resort business has exceeded that of last year, notwithstanding the war scare took some of the capitalists home in a hurry about August 15th.

The largest and finest showing of apples yet made in the state of Michigan is being planned by the Western Michigan Development bureau for the Greater Michigan fair scheduled for Grand Rapids for the first week in September. Between four and five hundred bushels of the best apples obtainable in the western Michigan orchards will be secured.

Last year several lots of apples were inspected by the Western Michigan Development Bureau and the packages labeled with the "Sunny-ripe" label. In consequence the fruit growers were induced to market their fruit at a better price than was paid for ordinary stock. This year it is expected a larger number of growers will take advantage of the inspection service.

In 1880 there came a man to Norwood (Charlevoix County) by the name of George H. Van Pelt who immediately began to talk and preach and write about good roads, and for many years he went by the name of "Good Roads Van Pelt, and why this name is not now more frequently used than it is seems rather strange for after 31 years of this road warfare and constant agitation for good roads he should be as well entitled to this title as he is to the one he is so well known by in the Chicago Association of Commerce, namely Uncle George. We speak of him here as "Our George." Verily he is known by his works, as well as his words which some times are pretty strong and emphatic. Late find out what his plan is—read his letter in this issue.

The Lamphere have the frame up of their new ice cream factory. It occupies a lot on Clinton street in the rear of the County Bank building, and is 18 x 50, one story.

The locally celebrated motor racer Mary Loe, owned by Mr. Thompson of the Belvedere contingent, last week Monday morning left Lake Superior at a point fifty miles above the Soo. Her crew had dinner at Mackinac and supper in Charlevoix the same day.

Last Sunday night the outgoing Pere Marquette Lake had 362 through passengers, besides several for way points, including Grand Rapids. The through passengers reached Chicago and Detroit on time. This is the biggest train and the best service in the Northern Michigan record of the Pere Marquette.

Two reels of Western Michigan movies, pictures are now being shown in the larger cities throughout the state. The entertainment is entitled, "Touring Western Michigan." Among the scenes shown are views of the "Harbor Celebration at Ludington," "Burning of the Steamship Manistee," "Elks' Convention at Petoskey," and views in number of the larger cities in the Western Michigan country.

It is a mistake to think that we can find happiness without incurring the secret of happiness. It is the privilege of every man to be "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." There is no happiness to be compared with the happiness of saving others from unhappiness. It is a mistake to think that we can find happiness without earning the secret of contentment. Half the sadness and misery in the world comes from a senseless ambition to have what others have and to live as others live. Happiness has little to gain from external circumstances, for it is a state of the soul. Only the contented are happy. It is a mistake to think that we can find happiness without learning the secret of humility. It is fatal to happiness to think of our office more highly than we ought to think. In lowliness of mind we are to esteem others as better than ourselves.

The same weather conditions that led up to the recent outbreak of the army worm have favored the development of the hessian fly. For identical reasons, the parasites of the "fly" have failed to keep pace with the pest and the "fly" is increasing in numbers, especially in the southern part of the state. Now when the wise man sees trouble in the distance, he takes all the precautions possible and then takes what chances are necessary to get his crop. In the long run late sowing of Fall wheat escapes the attacks of the injury during "fly" years, because the late sown wheat is more thrifty and grows up after the flies that lay the eggs are through working, then that which is sown early. If we could always foretell the weather and could tell beforehand just how long the flies are going to stay this Fall we could set the date with certainty. Lacking this information, the best we can do is to decide on an average date which is as late as we dare sow and yet which has been early enough in the past to get a stand which will come through the Winter. September 20 has proven as good a date as any in the past. Of course it is impossible to guarantee a crop under any conditions but late sowing seems advisable this year, especially in the lower third of the state.

REPORT OF CHARLEVOIX-PETOSKEY PARKWAY ROAD

September 7, 1914.—Since last week's report, I wish to acknowledge as received from E. C. Waller $50.00 E. F. Sloan $10.00 and on one $25.00 subscription $5.00.

There still remains unpaid one subscription of $25.00, $22.00 on one $25.00 subscription and one subscription of $10.00.

When these amounts are paid, the money will be spent on filling in holes and with the work promised by the farmers of Hayes township this ought to make a good road for everybody. The owners of town automobiles who have not contributed, ought to do so as every one of them will get the benefit of the road. The report shows many name, conspicuous by their absence in this work and it is safe to remark that they are the losers.

As a City, we must grow in promoting and assisting all laudible good work. Remember the closed hand can neither receive nor can it give. For my own part, I feel that the work which has been done is very satisfactory and must prove of great advantage to everybody. No one has been made richer, nor none are poorer if this is a law of good.

Once more, to the friends who have helped and enabled us to do this piece of good work, I wish to extend my best thanks for without their help it could not have been done and in the meantime do not forget that there is a place whereby thousands and thousands of additional resources can be brought to Charlevoix County and that this County can be made the Mecca of America and become as famous as any of the great slow resort places of Europe.

The dreadful war now going on has and will continue to devastate countries and places which here taken an average of $300,000,000 of our own people's money for resort purposes for a good many years. This country is the richest in the world and our people will continue to spend just the same. Charlevoix County wants and will get this lion's share just as soon as we prepare for it. The opportunity is ours. Will we scoop it and take advantage of it? Answer echoes "Yes! we!!" and adds "We will, for where there's a will there's a way."

THE NEW PRIMARY LAW

It Failed to Meet the Expectations of Those Who Secured Its Passage

Returns from the recent primary election should go to show the politicians of the state that the primary law has not as yet been developed to a point where the people can express a free choice in the selection of candidates for public office. The next step that is needed is the abolition of the partisan fixtures and the introduction of the short ballot. The voters of the state have reached a point in political understanding where they object to being hedged about by party lines in selecting their candidates for office, and until this restriction is removed there will be a light attendance at the primaries. It may not be possible at this time to secure such a radical change in the primary system, but it is only a question of time before the legislature will have to pass a law embodying such a feature. Free government means the guarantee to the individual that he can exercise his right to free choice at election time without having to restrict his selection to any given party or ticket. It means the breaking down of old customs and traditions that have long had root in this country, but it is the inevitable outcome of the demand for a larger freedom on the part of the individual citizen. Proof of this condition can readily be found by comparing the results from the primary elections since the system was established in this state.—Record-Eagle.

BAYLISS IS A GOOD LOSER

Joseph E. Bayliss, of the Soo, in conceding his defeat for the Republican congressional nomination by Hon. Frank D. Scott, of Alpena, issues the following statement to the voters of the district, which has a manly ring and shows that Mr. Bayliss is a good loser, the kind that wins the admiration of every red-blooded citizen:

"The election returns indicate Senator Scott's nomination, which will also mean his election. From all reports the entire Republican ticket will be a strong one, and there will be no question as to its success this fall.

"The people have spoken and I accept their verdict, feeling that their will has been reflected in the returns. Senator Scott and the balance of the nominees will have my loyal support.

"While to have lost in the recent contest brings some measure of personal disappointment, there is much satisfaction in the knowledge that so many splendid men throughout the district were with me in the contest. In fact I have been as anxious to win for their sake as my own, and it is impossible for me to thank them fully enough. I take the means of conveying to them my deep appreciation of their confidence and their earnest unselfish support.

"I have received a majority of more than 1800 in my own county, where I have lived for thirty-six years, is especially gratifying, and brings some assurance to the voters in the southern part of the district where I received such magnificent support, although they did not know me as well as my home people, as to the measure and quality of service I would have tried to give had I been successful."

Very sincerely,
Joseph E. Bayliss.

ONE OF THE WORST PESTS

Look For Army Worm Moths With One Colored Wing

Everyone interested in the destruction of the army worm pest is being requested by the United States Department of Agriculture to look out for army worm moths with one artifically colored wing. The department entomologists are catching army worm moths where they are plentiful, coloring one wing of each, and then liberating them in the same territory, so that they may determine whether these moths fly directly west or north, and how quickly and far they will spread. A better knowledge of the habits of this pest should enable the department to control its spread. The moths are to be let loose where their liberation could possibly add to the natural control.

The moths are already showing themselves in Virginia and in Maryland, and the departments agents are catching specimens at Portsmouth and Charlottesville in Virginia and Hagerstown in Maryland. The agents at Portsmouth are applying a red stain to one wing of each specimen caught, those at Charlottesville a black or yellow stain, and those at Hagerstown, a violet color. Then the moths are left to follow the natural course they would have pursued.

"Look for the army worm moth with a colored wing during the coming month," the department's bureau of entomology is advising its agents east of the Mississippi. Any one observing a marked specimen will aid in the campaign by reporting the fact to the bureau of entomology, Washington, D. C. When its presence has been noted, the moth should be destroyed.

SOLDIERS GUARD FAIR

Co. A the Police Force of the Charlevoix County Fair—Scribe Spends Day and Night as Their Guest

The Charlevoix County fair at East Jordan is under martial law. There are no drum-head courts martial and nobody is shot at sunrise, but sentries walk their beats with Lee Remington rifles at right or left shoulder. There are no cartridges in the regulation belts, but there are bayonets carried in scabbards at the hip, and every soldier in the command is invested with police authority. The party who does not observe the rules of ordinary decency will be cautioned; if that fails you will hear the hail—"Corporal of the guard post, nowhere one," and mighty soon after that, if necessary, a detachment from the guard reief comes down on the double quick, and matter man gets a taste of military rule.

The writer spent Saturday night and Sunday as the guest of the company, in Capt. Winters' headquarters tent. Sunday and Monday was practically a camp of instruction, with 45 men in the ranks. Co. X has not been mustered into the National Guard, and is classed as an independent organization. But it has been recognized by the Federal war department by the issue of sixty Lee-Remington rifles and their necessary equipment. It has been officially recognized by the State, several officers of the brigade staff having inspected it in every detail the company is qualified for admission into the National Guard, but for the present there is no vacancy for it. The organization of a 4th regiment, would, in our opinion, put Co. X in as Co. A.

The company is splendidly commanded by Capt. H. L. Winters, a Spanish war veteran, ably assisted by Lieutenants Spring and Balch. The drill in manual of arms and field movements last Sunday afternoon, embracing guard mount, inspection and platoon formations, were admirably executed, and would have done credit to any National Guard company. The personel of the company is all that could be desired. Company X is the only military organization between Cheboygan and Manistee. East Jordan people are proud of it—indeed, in a sense, it may be classed as a Charlevoix organization. To-day (Thursday) the company is pulling off a sham battle and giving other evolutions of its skill in tactics. It is a great attraction.

A CONVINCING SHORT BALLOT LESSON

The following from the Chicago Tribune fits the Michigan case to a dot. The present primary election law is an abomination:

The value of an ounce of fact, as compared with heavy issues full of theory, is proverbial. What shall we say, then, of the pounds or tons of fact that serve in this month as the object lesson in the need of a saner and shorter ballot?

Large, unwieldy ballots "commission" to study the primary ballot and recommend changes to the legislature and the framers of the next constitution of Illinois—for, of course, a constitutional convention is unavoidable—are of doubtful utility. In the time a small, strong, and representative body will make the necessary studies and recommendations. At this time every citizen, every voter who thinks at all, is a member of the great body politic that should ponder the proposed primary ballot, resume the utter impossibility of supposing this a fair or rational choice as to certain offices, and determine to use his or her influence, in and out of politics, on the side of the short ballot.

The prediction that "there will never be another such primary election" is too sanguine. Intolerable and absurd as the situation is, there are political machines and political adventurers that profit by the long and mysterious, the confused and bewildering ballot. We shall have to fight hard for the abolition of various elective offices and the simplification of primaries and elections. Each voter should resolve to work for organic and statutory changes that are essential to decent government in Illinois, and especially in Cook county. The present present ballot and the laws back of it spell the breakdown of responsible administration.

THE SCHOOLS

The Charlevoix Public Schools will open Monday, September 14th. Although many teachers of the old staff will be in their accustomed places, some new faces will be in evidence.

Supt. I. M. Devoe's place will be filled by H. A. Craig. Mr. W. A. Ewing who made such a fine record here last year will be principal of the high school. Among the new high school teachers will be Miss Helen Cone, who will have charge of the English department. Miss Cone is a graduate of Olivet and comes to us highly recommended for character and scholarship.

Mr. A. R. Mayhew will be at the head of the Mathematics department. Mr. Mayhew is a graduate of Alma college and has taught in Alma high school. Prof. Kinsworth, of Alma, has only praise for his ability and scholarship.

The high school athletics will be ably taken care of by Mr. W. A. Vogt, who has made an excellent record on gridiron and diamond. He will teach science in the high school.

The grade schools will witness only two changes, Miss Beatrice Allen 6th grade and Miss Madge Allen 5th grade, both are teachers of ability and experience, and will be a valuable addition to the teaching staff.

The school board has made extended improvements in all the schools, and the building are now in excellent condition for beginning of school. Books will be handled this year by the school board, and will be on sale in the main room. This method results in a saving of about 25 per cent to patrons of the schools.

The high standard of Charlevoix school will undoubtedly be upheld by the corps of teachers for 1914-15.

Following is the list of teachers for the coming year:

A. A. Crisp, Superintendent.

High School—
W. A. Ewing, Prin. History.
A. R. Mayhew, Mathematics.

HAIL STORM FOOLS FIRE DEPARTMENT

A terrific thunder storm accompanied by hail, in which hail-stones, an inch and more in diameter fell, called out the fire department at five o'clock Sunday morning.

Following a startling lightning flash and a thunder crash that seemed to crack the firmament, the heavens poured forth tons of hail stones. At the Mesch residence, adjoining the Dalton greenhouses, a loud cracking sound created a panic, and an alarm of fire was sent in. The fire department promptly responded, but no fire was found. It was discovered that the noise was caused by hailstones falling on the glass roofs of the greenhouses, with which the store stayed horse, breaking glass to the value of $300.

It is said that the hailstones were as large as crab-apples.

MICHIGAN A GOOD STATE

Land Productive and Very Best Opportunities for the Young Man Also are to be Found

Michigan could exist as an isolated empire while her people enjoyed all the reasonable comforts and luxuries of life, with the exception of cotton, which is not produced within the state. This would be possible because of the state's wonderful and greatly varied natural resources, numerous industries and varied possibilities of production from the soil, which exists in numerous types under a wide range of climatic conditions, due to peculiar environment and geographical location.

Michigan agriculture is but one of a group of five great industries in the state; agriculture, manufacturing, lumbering, mining and marine. These industries are sufficiently developed so that all are important to the nation as the commonwealth; none are incidental, all having been developed uniformly.

In addition to the very favorable place Michigan occupies regarding her industries and agricultural products, there is still greater opportunity for development, for as yet only 21.5 per cent of the total land area of Michigan is included in farms, with enormous areas of good land remaining to be reclaimed.

Michigan ranks twenty-first in land area among the forty-eight states in this country, and eighth in population with 2,810,173 inhabitants. The approximate land area of Michigan is 36,797,000 acres and of this amount 18,940,514 acres only are included in farms, while 12,832,078 acres are classified as improved lands.

The position of Michigan in relation to her sister states is really unique. Though not a new state, in the sense of those to the westward, there still remains great possibilities for agricultural development in the state, in addition to the improvement of those portions long ago reclaimed. It would be easily possible for citizens of other states, and perhaps some of our own, to assume, that because settlement began at an early date in the state, that all the good land had already been occupied, and that the portion not under c

JOHN D. HOPES TO BE CENTENARIAN

Oil King Wins at Golf on Seventy-fifth Birthday.

MAKES MANY HARD SHOTS.

Shakes Hands With Workmen on His Estate Who Offer Their Congratulations—Apparently Rugged and Well. His Sports Run High During Game. Mrs. Rockefeller an Invalid.

"Well, it takes us young boys to win," exclaimed John D. Rockefeller as he and Frank O. Foger, president of the Standard Oil Company of New York, defeated Elias Johnson of New York and A. L. Gifford of Tarrytown in a foursome game of golf.

Mr. Rockefeller was extremely happy, because he won the game on his seventy-fifth birthday.

A beautiful day greeted him when he rose at 6:30. He had breakfast at 7 and then spent an hour reading the telegrams from their 8 telegrams of congratulations began to pour in. They came from all parts of the country. More than a hundred were received.

Reading these messages from old friends put Mr. Rockefeller in particularly good spirits, and at 9:30 he started to dress for his game of golf. At 10 Mr. Foger and Mr. Johnson arrived at Tarrytown from New York. A little later Mr. Gifford and the Rev. Arthur Ridgeway, head of the Rev. Gordon Lang, Mr. Rockefeller's pastors, reached the house.

Mr. Rockefeller was waiting. When they showed congratulations he said: "Boys, Foger and I are going to beat you today. We will pay the ministers in a twosome and let them fight it out. I don't like to be near a minister when I play one foursome."

Wins Birthday Game.

Mr. Rockefeller never played a better game. His whole interest was in winning, and he often made difficult shots that were needed to win a hole. After the party had been playing an hour the Rev. Mr. Ridgeway complained of the heat and had one of the caddy boys run to his house and get an umbrella. During the rest of the time the boy held the umbrella over his head. The game was over about 12:30. When it was announced that Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Foger had won both smiled scrupulously.

Mr. Brooks beat Mr. Lang 8 up.

"Gentlemen, I'm sorry we had to defeat two such good players, but on my birthday this is excusable," said Mr. Rockefeller. "I want you to come into my golf room, and we will have golf over lunch."

Mr. Rockefeller then escorted the party into his mansion. He did quite fresh the array of chicken sandwiches and crackers formed part of the luncheon.

Mr. Rockefeller did not mention his birthday during the luncheon. Instead, he spoke of how he hoped to play as well when he was a hundred.

Although Mr. Rockefeller's score was not given out, it was said he played an exceedingly fine game. He locked rugged and well, and his spirits ran high.

Workmen Congratulate Him.

After the guests departed he went to bed and took a short nap. At 5 o'clock he was out again in his car driving around the estate, superintending new roads and particularly the work of a new lake which he is building in the Buttermilk hill section. This lake is needed for his new fountain. A fifty ton stone for the fountain has just been put in place. Mr. Rockefeller now has 500 men at work on his estate.

As he passed the workmen they offered congratulations. Mr. Rockefeller shook hands with many that he knew.

There was no celebration at night, as Mrs. Rockefeller is ill and has to be wheeled around. Her sister is also the disposed.

"As long as I can play as good a game of golf as I did today I will never get any older," was Mr. Rockefeller's reply to one of the friendly visits called to congratulate him.

"Arithmetic," said Tommy Tubbs, "I study here nights."
"What for?" he was asked.
"Want to get a lot of money."

She Got Even With Him

By EDITH V. ROSS

I was studying art in Italy in the hope of being able to return to America and set up as a portrait painter. My headquarters were Florence, where I lived in a room looking out on the river Arno. Being a woman, I had been careful to find a private family who would take me in. One day I saw a little Italian boy about twelve years old playing on the Arno embankment in whom I recognized at once an artist's model. I asked him where he lived, and he took me to his house near by. I made a bargain with his mother for him to come to my room and pose for me at a francs sitting.

Little Luigi had a pair of eyes the expression of which I could not catch, besides other features which were complementary to that expression. I worked over him for half a dozen sittings, then determined to give up the matter of trying to paint his portrait. But on this day I came to this resolution my landlady told me that a gentleman had taken one of her rooms who, she thought, knew a good deal about art and expressed that I get some points from him.

I showed him my work and my model, at the same time asking what prevented me from catching the boy's expression. He showed me certain lines that I had drawn too heavy, others that were too faint and still others that I had left out entirely. I made the corrections, and the picture was improved, but was far from satisfactory. Mr. Warfield told me that I had been working too hard and recommended the invites if I should take more rest.

I followed his advice and, since I saw some little of the environs of Florence, concluded to go where a bit. The next day I made an excursion to Fiesole, on an omnibus several miles from Florence and reached by trolley. When I returned in the evening I met Mr. Warfield on the entrance. He asked me if I did not feel refreshed, and I admitted that I did. "I think," he said, "that if you look at your work after a day of rest and refreshment you will be better satisfied with what you have done."

True enough, my portrait struck me as being far less imperfect than before. The next morning I took up my little model before me again and worked industriously during a whole sitting. Then I put one portrait away, that I might not see it till ready to resume my work on it. When I looked at it the next day I found that I had rather improved upon it. Impatient, however, I resolved to spend the morning in the Bobeli gardens and working, work that I had thought I would not need him, left the house.

When I came in for luncheon the portrait was on my easel where I had left it. Again I was surprised that it looked so much better than when I had put it in the second, that I said one's physical condition affects one's appreciation, especially of one's own work.

But I injured my work again—that is, in my own eyes, for Mr. Warfield assured me that the picture was growing better every day. And so it was notwithstanding that it seemed to me I could not touch it without marring it. Finally one day on returning from sightseeing the picture seemed to me to be simply perfect. It was not only Luigi, but Luigi living. I showed it to Mr. Warfield, who did not dare to touch it again.

I was sadly in need of money and took it to a dealer. He seemed very much pleased with it and told me he thought he could sell it for a good price if there was one in the name of a well known artist. I had not put my name on it, since I was unknown, and thought it better to leave the public in ignorance of the painter. I left the picture with the dealer, telling him to sell it if he got any offer whatever for it. In a few days he wrote me a note saying that he had sold it for 2,500 francs.

Astonished, I hurried at once to the shop and asked him how he had sold it. I wanted to make so ready a sale and for such a price, but his only explanation was that it was a fine bit of work. I returned to my quarters hoping to get a better explanation from Mr. Warfield, but found that he had left Florence.

I took my landlady of my good fortune, but she did not seem to be much surprised. I began to think I had underrated the artistic ability that was in me. The landlady's daughter, though she rejoiced with me, did not seem to wonder at my good fortune.

I sent for Luigi to make him a handsome present in addition to 10 francs I had paid for his sittings. When he came I gave him 25 francs.

"Grazia, signorina!" he said. "Now I have 50 francs to spend."

"Not 50, Luigi—25."

"No, signorina; it is 50. With the 25 francs Signor Warfield paid me!" He stopped short.

"What! Signor Warfield paid you 25 francs?"

"Yes, signorina. But I was to say nothing about that."

"What did he pay you the money for?"

"For sittings. He painted in the picture, very day when you were away."

For a moment I was too astonished for words, then I exclaimed: "What a fool I have been! But I'll be even with him if I have to follow him to the ends of the earth."

I sent my word. I married him six months later in Switzerland.

Heart to Heart Talks

By CHARLES N. LURIE

FROM AN INTERESTING PART OF THE NEWSPAPER.

Some folks turn first to the sporting page of the newspaper. Some women—not many—want to read about the fashions before they turn to the other pages. To many readers the political news is the most interesting.

There are confirmed and experienced readers of newspapers who believe that the real "meat" of the paper is to be found in the "letters to the editor," wherein readers of many shades of opinion express their views.

It has been the habit, especially in city newspaper offices, for parts to poke fun at "Constant Reader," "Pro Bono Publico," "Subscriber" and the others who use such hackneyed signatures. But it is the writings of these folks that throw soul, searchlight rays on the workings of the public mind. They are valuable indices to public opinion.

In a Philadelphia paper the other day a man gave his opinion on getting full value out of life. "In all the phases of life," he wrote, "things are not pushed as they should be. In the various spots some of the abilities do not work hard enough to get the value they want. In mode some do not make things more along to reach a thrilling climax as things should be moved and the effect is spoiled.

"The fact that all people do not push themselves is the reason why men with good judgment and the skill try to push others are picked as leaders."

What per cent efficiency is yours? Are you a distorted solution of energy, or, contention and efficiency or both?

To acquire the ability to push one self, and to put that ability into full, effective operation, forms the greater part of the secret of success. You can't succeed to the top of the mountain if you pay only part of your attention to the task. You've got to push on!

There's a pretty general impression that American work too hard in the effort to secure success. It is not true. It takes an effort of the mighty to reach any winner of distinction in any line of effort who died young as the result of overwork.

And among the generality, of Americans and others, underwork is the rule rather than overwork.

"LAYING OFF" IN HAWAII

By KATHERINE POPE

READY TO LEAVE TOWN FOR THE ISLANDS

ON A COMMUTER BY THE MOUNTAINS

ON THE TROLLEY AT THE SEASHORE ALONG THE SEA

THE GARDEN AT THE MOUNTAIN COTTAGE

A SEASHORE RESTAURANT NEAR THE SEA

JAPANESE SERVANT AND THE VINE-HUNG IN THE MOUNTAINS

A MOUNTAIN NOOK

HIL planters use the term as freely as the dinner-pail men in the states, and it is easy to adopt it presently and think of no true substitute.

Hawaii is a wonderful land in which to "lay off." I can only name a number of more desirable places in which to labor, but the islands are the "great good place" in which to refrain from labor. And this is evidenced by the presence here of "retired" folk who are taking up residence here; though witnessed much more emphatically by the Hawaiians, who have come from more to more remote-full, superior, truly aristocratic beings. "Poor people," they say, "have to work for money, but the unsearchably superior souls are the native-born, the native race, who, aloof from the harried bustling hasten (whites), walk in unmoved calm and philosophy. And this air of large leisure worn by a goodly part of the population the "low latitude" of the islands, with other temptations of nature, invite all to loitering or play.

For play, too, is one of the persuasions of the land, and though at sea-level the temperature remains over at summer reading, the uplands are far heights are brisk and breezy, and every one of the eight islands is mountainous. Hawaii has the highest mountains of any islands in the world, and her lesser ranges, also, offer to the mountain climber no little of hazard and excitement, as well as infinite beauty. Certain persons return year after year to the little island world, in the ambition to explore still unknown valleys, scale unforgiving baffling cliffs (precipices), or say aesthetic sight to a pathless summit.

On the largest island, Hawaii, there are three mountains, one of which is over eight thousand feet in height and each of the others more than twelve thousand. On the much smaller island of Maui, old Haleakala bulks large and towers high; few grander sights are to be studied than the view from the top of this mountain; the battlefies of the clouds below; the narrow isthmus of Maui lying on to those West Maui mountains that upraise a noble wall opposite the greater island; the deep crater, the dreamer of the flower; the distant islands floating in the water. On a clear day from the summit one can see Mauna Kea, and Mauna Loa, through distances of a hundred miles; the entire island of Maui lies revealed.

"Two weeks who say one can "do" Hawaii "in very short order, are very likely the people that declare the Hawaiian language is easy to learn. To "do" them takes considerable time and considerable effort. But they are well worth the effort. Very few are resorters at the race whose name they bear—one who hears their name Seashore or mountainside, bridle path or reef trail the tourist cuts for himself, auto highway or cowpath on the wide-pasture lands, all lure and give rich returns to those that respond to their call.

The horse not so very long ago was king in the island, and some, rickshaw, the poorman, beggar man, thief, all were dependent on equine carriage "everyday from the cradle, overbody and a horse, planter and Fake (Chinaman), meeting in the "Hawaiian Hotel" this new day are frozen and another, horses are getting scarce and cost a good deal more to keep than they used to. And with the decrease of riding has increased, the pleasure has decreased—owing to automobile and motorcycle. But for mountain trips the horse still holds its own, and I know no better way to take in the island than to travel (make a circuit-ward) with a willing steed, climbing up and up and up to where "the trail is narrow and the sky is dim" where no "passter" clings to the ankles limb." The mountain forests are of much beauty and interest, both the redwood-Nolphts and the alpine still in possession of the native trees, dwarf pines, gnarled, sometimes vine, wild bananas and tall shrubbery, help make a tropical jungle, though the cool air, the energy of hands and rides, do not banish the tropics. Birds are few, but one would rather see none than be accompanied by the bold, raucous, insolent, rudimous myna(s) of the lower levels. These pests, as one accosts the mountain, give place to an occasional shark, whose song and soaring fit in well with a holiday mood. Occasionally in the wilds the little native dove-green bird bestrains itself from the protecting foliage and one a white and other an of the soil, a rose-colored songster, is heard and seen. But bird life is not a feature of the island, the forests are almost silent, almost destitute of animal life.

Wild flowers are as scarce as native birds. One occasionally comes upon the kukui blossoms, drooping, large-petaled, pink and gold, very lovely. Sometimes the bloom of the jasmine shines out white and starlike and sheds its fragrance far abroad. The flower of the ohia lei, one kind more white, the other a creamy yellow, fill the air with intoxicating sweetness. But the flowers, generally, are not gathered from the greenery; perhaps from the trailing mauki, a very lovely creeper of which the Hawaiians are lamentably fond; perhaps it is the wholesome scent of the eucalyptus trees, which, straightness, slimness and pervading spiciness remind one of the pine woods of the North; perhaps there is but a lush ferny smell.

There is one native tree growing in the mountains (the koa) bears a blossom very unique and delicately fragrant, the chua. In its time of full blossoming the tree's often stocky form presents the appearance of a huge crimson bouquet, there are such myriads of silky pompon flowers. Perfect, poisonous flies are, and very wall made, such silken thread about as hard to pull out as a thread of manufactured silk from a millinery creation. The flowers are woven into beautiful garlands, or leis, as the natives call them, and the streets of Honolulu the stranger always carries to look aloft at a wreath of lehua blossoms, the deep crimson, the character of the flower, being so unusual. And a still more beautiful monstrous lehua, the ohia lei, which is made of the richest crimson. A party descending from a trip made with this wreath upon their hats is all of one ohia, fail very lucky indeed, proudly display this trophy of ascent to and dalliance in a real mountain paradise.

In Hawaii one need not go to the states to get the taste of the cold, one can walk to a snow bank and in mountain life arrive at invigoration. I write at this moment from a mountain cottage located at an elevation of 2,000 feet; dressed in khaki and sweater, and with a great gray woolen blanket, embracing my chair and enwrapping my feet. Evenings the household indulges in a fire of crackling, and pungent, early in the morning and nights I lie on my bed from four to six blankets! This abode and the acres about, are already known as a certain ranch on the slopes of the mountain of Haleakala, and I can but wish that the "Hawaiian boy" who saw my son and my son's friend, and I, on our way to this ranch, and who said, yet with wonder, "Ladies and gentlemen, I know a place where you can get a good deal more to keep than they used to. And while the expense of riding has increased, the pleasure has decreased—owing to automobile and motorcycle. But for mountain trips the horse still holds its own, and I know no better way to take in the island than to travel (make a circuit-ward) with a willing steed, climbing up and up and up to where "the trail is narrow and the sky is dim" where no "passter" clings to the ankles limb." An Illusion Dispelled

By JOHN Y. LARNED

When my mother, a widow, died I was twelve years old and was adopted by a lifelong friend of hers, a Mrs. Archibucles. There was something very romantic in this friendship which I could not understand, but I never saw Mrs. Archibucles till after my mother's death. I remember when I went from my modest home to live in her mansion on the day, I found her reading over some of his letters with dimmed eyes. I made no complaint. Indeed, I did not refer to the matter except to speak a word of sympathy. She seemed to be ashamed of her weakness and putting her arms about my neck, kissed me. The next day I saw some unburned scraps of paper in the fireplace and knew they were Gregory's letters. This seemed to be a turning point in the matter, and to me, whatever may have been Delia's feelings, I experienced no unpleasant of them.

Eighty years passed. Delia and I lived in our home alone with our children, while Mrs. Archibucles lived in another. Indeed, she refused to live with us from the day we were married. One day when I went home from business Delia told me that her mother had telephoned a desire that we should dine with her that evening. We never thought of continuing a relationship of kind from the good lady and at the hour appointed repaired at her house.

We found Mrs. Archibucles in the drawing room entertaining a man. Both arose as we entered, and our host introduced the man as Mr. Gregory. Delia was in a fretful pet out and darted a look of reproach at her mother for inviting her to meet her old lover. But the old lady's reason for the dinner was apparent. Gregory had deteriorated. He was the same man in spirit, but in his eyes, they that Delia had looked upon through the romance of nineteen had been replaced by an unrefined, rather disagreeable looking man whose head was as rugby as a pumpkin vine.

Poor Delia! I pitied her having to sit opposite this faded dream through a course dinner. Soon after it was finished she pleaded a headache, and we went home.

I didn't blame her mother for bringing her and Gregory together. I simply wished to kill any germs of disturbance that might be left in my wife.

It takes more than hot air to kill the germ of sympathy.

An Up to Date Medieval Tale

By RUTH GRAHAM

I am a wireless telegraph operator in charge of a station situated on a lonely coast. I have an assistant who takes my place at night for a week, then I take the night and give him the day. There are one or two others connected with the station wig are not operators. One of these is a fine chess player, and having him with me enabled me to while away many an hour when I had nothing to do.

Now, what I am going to relate I don't ask anyone to believe. I should certainly not believe it myself if any one told it to me as a bona fide experience. I do not say that I didn't dream it—that I did not experience it when unconscious. I make no explanation whatever. That you are at liberty to do for yourself. I only assert that to me it was an actual occurrence.

One night when I was on duty alone I was myself at the instrument and receiving a message working out authentic prophecies on the chessboard. Presently I heard a football behind me, and a man stepped into the operating room. The moment he did so I heard the sound of distant thunder.

"We're going to have a storm," he said. "I prefer sparring the time while it lasts to here than outside or you don't mind."

I assured him that he was welcome, though I confess he was not. I did not like his looks; there was a sinister expression on his face. There was no "how's-your-wife" and I rather objected to being alone with him.

"I see you play chess," he said. "I'm very fond of it myself. We might have a game while waiting for the storm to be over."

"Are you not afraid to be in an electrical place like this in a thunderstorm?" I asked.

I shall take that chance."

"A fool!"

"A fool!" sneeringly. "Young man, do you know what electricity is? No? Well, I have always known what it is. Perhaps you think this towering affair of yours something wonderful. It's very clumsy. But I'll admit it's an improvement on the old system of wires. You don't feel the electric waves rolling around the globe. Do you? I do. They are dashing against me all the while.

"This is a bad go, I thought—alone with a madman a storm coming on. There only remains to get an "S O S" call to make the situation diabolical.

"Of course," said the stranger, taking a seat facing me and pulling the chess board partly on his knees, "let's have a game."

A vivid flash of lightning and a simultaneous crash sent a thrill of horror through me, but seemed to have no more effect on the stranger than if it had been struck a note on a musical instrument. I feared for the operators towering over our heads. My visitor, having placed the men, moved a pawn. I was too bewildered to play. He spoke to me again.

"Come, come, Mr. Operator," said the stranger. "I don't be frightened at a little thing like that. You'll get something more exciting before long. There's a ship due off there and I shall a hundred miles. She's running at full speed into a fog bank. Her captain thinks he's safe. If you wish to know who was aboard the ill fated ship, the steamship company up to trying to get on with a refined force. That did the business, there."

I suppose I had played mechanically and without knowing it, for the word "check" woke me up to the fact that my pieces as well as the stranger's had left their original places, and, collecting my rattled faculties, I took in the situation, which was that my king was in check.

I thought if there is anything except chess that under the circumstances would have kept me, my faculties nearly, I have a passion for chess problems, and despite the storm and the strangeness of my situation I entered into the game with all my mind. I moved my king out of check but in another moment he was checked again. I heard the instrument click, but at the moment saw a chance to checkmate my antagonist, and, fearing the combinations would leave me if I delayed, I went on with my move. But my antagonist stood up and I was brought up with another "Check!"

It was evident that I was in a hole that would require all our brain power to get me out of it, and, though I was conscious of the rattling of the instrument, I did not know what was being transmitted. I got out of this hole only to be led into another, with an occasional chance to checkmate my antagonist, such opportunities always ending in "Check!"

Time came a break, and the next thing I knew I was lying on the floor and my assistant at the instrument. The stranger had gone.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"Matter? Why there has been an S O S call rattling on the key for more than an hour. The Atotis of Blue Anchor line has struck an iceberg and now down with all on board. We are the nearest station and the only one she could reach."

I relapsed into an unconsciousness, from which I did not emerge for some time. When I did I was told that I had been struck by lightning. Was the strange a dream or a reality?

An Inference.

"I suppose she's as nice as another. Why I think more of the girl whose hands are rough."

Local and Personal Notes

F. L. Bartholomew, of Chicago, is here on business all this week.

Mr. Ira Adams, of Bellaire, spent Friday, Saturday and Sunday in town.

W. D. Parmer left Thursday with the Chaloupka brothers for Oregon.

Mrs. A. J. McLeod and her two daughters left Thursday for their home in Detroit.

Geo. Long, a pioneer resident of Bay township, had a second stroke of paralysis last Friday, and died Monday.

The Ladies Aid Society will have a chicken pie social Tuesday evening Sept. 15th at the Barnard M. E. Church. Everybody invited.

Now lets get down to business. The summer solstice is slowly vanishing into autumn chills and we are entering upon the period when "boots" should be the watchword. The "Committee of 21" or a society thereof, should emerge from its summer lethargy and get a wiggle on itself.

A week ago Sunday the large schooner yacht Juanita came into the port short one spar and its sails. The owners went home by rail, leaving the crew here with the boat. A temporary spar was shipped, and last Thursday left for her home port in charge of Capt. Sam Hamilton.

The new city chemical engine was out Friday noon in answer to an alarm from W. C. Bellinger's store. Children dropped a lighted match in a barrel of rubbish in the rear of the place. The fire was extinguished before the new apparatus could get into action. The outfit is said to be very efficient in case of incipient blazes, and prevents destruction of property by water and the firemen's axe. It has hose that can reach the distance ordinarily required. Chief Marshall is proud of the new engine, and predicts a great saving by its use.

People in this country who are fond of the succulent oyster will be able to receive their full supply this year as the European war has cut off the foreign demand and the supply will have to be placed upon the domestic market. For many years Europe has taken the choicest product of the oyster beds while the poorer grades have been sold at home. The crop will be the largest in the history of the country and even had there been no war the prices this year would have been very moderate. This is one cheering piece of news for the people of this country who are facing war time prices in every direction.

Though perhaps few citizens of the county are aware of the situation the directors of the County Young Men's Christian Association have for some little time been confronted with the fact that unless further financial aid was forthcoming within a short time it would be necessary to discontinue active work for an indefinite period. At this time industrial and financial conditions are such as to increase the necessity for this action. The respective M. A. B. Ball, who has been in the county nearly two years as the representative of the County Committee takes effect September 15th.

Poor Teacher!

A teacher, noticing the boy's interest in the study of insects, and somewhat given to encouraging him to find a book in the library upon the subject of moths, said to him, after school:

"What was the name of it?" she asked.

The boy answered scornfully, "Advice to Young Mothers."—Philadelphia Record.

Let women vote, and trousers wear,
And carry canes, and crop their hair,
And play on drawing gum and jews,
And copy all our swagger airs,
And all our ancient glories usurp
And say "Ha, ha!" What do I care?
The strongest of our sex is gone
Who will carry our hats well compare
In competition free and fair,
For we are the only ones there strong—
They cannot wriggle on their chins.

HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Henry Russell Miller, the young Pittsburgh lawyer-novelist, who is known for his political stories which have appeared during the last few years, has distinguished himself again through the production of another story, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt"—a story of social and industrial Pittsburgh—which critics say is far better than either "The Man Higher Up" or "His Hat in Power," his two earlier political stories. We have secured this story as our next serial, and the first installment will appear in an early issue.

For a number of years Mr. Miller has exhibited a great interest in the steel industry. He has made the acquaintance of many of the big men as well as the laborers in the mill towns, and from them has learned a great deal about the game.

"The Ambition of Mark Truitt" is a story that is not only tremendously interesting but one that will cause readers to stop and think.

Michigan growers of sugar beets are preparing to reap a big financial benefit as a result of the general European war. With the American sugar market generally demoralized because of the world conflict, American producers of beet sugar believe an excellent opportunity lies at hand to stimulate the growing of the beets and to make the domestic sugar market less dependent upon foreign producers. With importation of the foreign product practically shut off, the American growers are preparing to monopolize the domestic market, and there is every indication that Michigan farmers will do their share toward the upbuilding of the industry.

The Michigan duck shooting season opened September 1st. Advices reaching the offices of the state game warden indicate there has been a rush upon country circuits in all sections of the state by persons seeking licenses for the fall hunting. The licenses now being issued permit the holder to hunt, in season, all game except deer. The state law provides that every Michigan resident who desires to hunt in any county other than his place of residence must be similarly equipped. From September 1st until December 10, according to the Michigan game law hunters are free to shoot ducks, wild geese and brant. The season for shooting rouse and grouse, also opened September 1st but closes November 30—15 days earlier than duck season. Black-breasted and golden plover Wilson or Jack snipe and yellow legs may be bagged until September 15, but all other shore birds and wood duck are protected until 1918.

Osborn Leads by Good Figures—Dickinson Wins Second Place

Complete figures on the recent primary election tabulated at the state department for the state governing board which met Monday give Luren D. Dickinson of Charlotte, a plurality of 5,000 over David H. Hinsman of Detroit, for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor. The total vote cast for the three candidates for lieutenant governor was 135,997 of which Luren D. Dickinson received 60,410, David E. Heinsman of Detroit, 59,507 and Edwin J. Curtis of Flint, 56,080.

The total votes polled by the candidates for the republican nomination for governor was 202,175. Despite claims of a right vote the recent primary was in 1906 when Warner, Hendey and Earle poled a total vote of 202,901.

Chase S. Osborn's plurality over Frederick C. Martindale, who gave the man the hard race, is 10,651 and Martindale leads Groesbeck by 4,866. The vote on governor stands: Chase S. Osborn, 56,489; Frederick C. Martindale 47,912; Alex J. Groesbeck, 43,137; Wm. S. Linton, 19,135; George E. Ellis, 2,602.

Gov. Ferris, who had no opposition on the Democratic ticket, polled 31,299 votes. Two years ago Ferris was opposed and he received 39,427 votes in the primary. Henry R. Pattengill, National Prohibition candidate for governor, received but 6,988 votes in the primary, while in 1912 L. Whitney Watkins, the last prohibition candidate for governor, received approximately 10,000.

BAD RUNAWAY ACCIDENT

A runaway on Belvedere avenue Saturday resulted disastrously for Anthony Culmer and daughter of Marion.

They were driving into town, when near the Belvedere the horses became frightened and ran away, the wagon colliding with a tree. Both were thrown out. Mr. Culmer had an arm broken, and the daughter suffered the fracture of a leg and an arm. The wagon was totally wrecked.

The couple were cared for until Dr. Wilkinson arrived with his car, when they were taken to the doctor's room and cared for.

THE IRONTON FERRY

During the summer special deputy collector of customs Phillips, of Grand Haven, within on an official trip to East Jordan, discovered a new luminary in the marine constellation.

It was the Ironton ferry, operated by the county. Under a strict interpretation of the law the craft was subject to registry, and as Mr. Phillips got busy, the case was reported to Detroit and orders came to make the necessary survey and admeasurement for documentation.

This week the deputy collector at Charlevoix received orders to perform the official act, and Friday afternoon the craft was introduced into the official routine for registry. She will be duly licensed as the "Pioneer of Ironton" and the present custodian, Samuel Alexander, will be duly licensed as master, with supervisor McDonald as "husband of the ship," or managing owner.

Mr. Alexander has operated the ferry for twelve years, and has proven himself the right man in the right place. He is not only popular with the traveling public but keeps the plant in excellent condition.

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY

Our president charges all citizens to avoid partisanship in the discussion of the European war, in accordance with the official declaration of neutrality. This is proper. We should carefully avoid taking sides in this matter. We are all sorry and anxious to do so pray for peace. We should speak no word that can be construed as favorable one belligerent as against other of the belligerents.

But we cannot forbear expressing the desire that the result of the war will be the end of European militarism. There is no one way to bring about this result, and that is the suppression of Kaiserism. Therefore, here's hoping that the allies will lick the socks and kick stuffing out of the Kaiser, and do it thoroughly.

But the president's injunction should be respected.

GRANGE HISTORY

Mrs. James Williams Writes of East port Grange Since It Organized in 1874

Central Lake Torch

Patrons and Friends, this is the 40th year of the existence of Eastport Grange. We had several ups and downs and when looking back over Grange life I sometimes think more ups and downs. In 1874, Michigan State Grange appointed a brother by the name of King as deputy to visit this part of the state and organize Grangers in as many neighborhoods as he could. At that time there were five dollars for the men and two dollars for the women. That amount of money then seemed more hard days work than it does now, because we had to depend on lumbering and cordwooding to earn what money we got, as farming was not much of a business. Our cordwood was 75 to 85 per cord on the stump, and lumber $1.50 to $3 per thousand on the shores of Torch Lake and contracted at $1.25 per cord on the shore, was very small pay for a hard day's work, and board yourself, but with this added to what we could raise on our small clearings, we lived after a fashion.

We mention a little prepared for Grange work beforehand, having read something about the Grange in the papers, so when we heard there was to be a lecture on the Grange a certain night in Eastport, the whole neighborhood went, pretty much in a body. Our evening's entertainment at that time were few and far between and it was quite an event. The evening was a warm pleasant one in May. Mr. King stood on the platform in front of Daniel Blakley's hotel that was located where Mr. Gates' front lawn is now. His hearers were sitting on benches in a wagon, on stumps and where they could look the best. He gave us a good talk, explained the benefits of the Grange in a social way, in an educational way and in a financial way. The financial way seemed to impress us at that time as the most special one, so of us adjourned to Mr. Blakley's hall upstairs to organize. We worked under a dispensation until our charter came, dated August 4, 1875.

THE FAIR

The annual fair of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society at East Jordan eclipsed any previous exhibition in the history of the Society.

Thursday the crowd was undoubtedly the largest that the grounds ever held. The military exhibit of Company X received a star attraction and the race programme, including several very exciting events.

The exhibits in the various buildings were far ahead of any previous showing, the fruit especially, being the chief attraction. It was worth the time of any citizen of Charlevoix county to view the magnificent display.

All other features were a great stride ahead in the showing of our agricultural and pomological progress.

The fair management is to be congratulated upon its splendid management.

HIT BY TROLLY CAR

Mrs. George D. Swinton Badly Injured in Collision on Way Home From Ohio

Mrs. George D. Swinton, of this city, accompanied by her husband, her son Roy and her daughter Ione, narrowly escaped death in a collision with a trolley car near Toledo last Tuesday. Mrs. Swinton had her collar bone broken, right hip and shoulder dislocated and otherwise badly bruised. No other member of the party suffered serious injury.

The party went to Ohio from here lately in the Swinton automobile and had been visiting relatives and friends in Ohio. They had started for home in the car, and at a point a few miles out of Toledo at an interurban trolly car crossing, they were struck by a trolly car, completely demolishing the body of the auto. It was a marvel that all were not killed.

Lisle Shanahan, attorney for the Swintons, was called to Ohio by wire, and an investigation proved pretty conclusively that the railroad company is responsible for the accident. At the crossing, and on the side of the road from whence the trolly car came, were several car kettles and other impediments, besides a number of trees that completely hid the road from view on that side.

After the necessary surgical aid had been given, the party left for home on a special, arriving here Sunday evening.

The railroad company practically acknowledged its responsibility in the matter by sending the auto to the factory for a rebuild.

Mrs. Swinton is doing well at her home.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION

The Democrat County Convention was held in Boyne City Tuesday. The convention was held in the Quick hall, corner of Water and Park streets. After the convention was called to the election of committee officers resulted in the selection of Dr. E. A. Bisk of East Jordan, chairman; H. J. Quick, of Boyne City, secretary; H. A. Carney of Boyne City was chosen temporary and legal permanent chairman of the convention.

The attendance was very satisfactory to the most exacting, a full delegation being present with the exception of the townships of Chandler and Norwood.

Besides the routine business of the convention resolutions were adopted endorsing the administration of President Wilson and the management of state affairs by Governor Ferris. Another resolution embodied instructions to the delegates to the convention, which is substance of which was the recommendation that they work in harmony with the state wide progressive democratic league.

The delegates elected to the state convention to be held in Detroit Sept. 30, were: H. J. Quick, H. A. Carney, Boyne City; Chas. Hudkins of Wilson; Dr. Auld and Hershel Miller, Charlevoix; Frank Pierce of Boyne Falls.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION

At the republican county convention held in this city Wednesday, Sept. 9th the following delegates were elected to the state convention:

Harry Nicholls, O. Nordeen, Charlevoix.

J. M. Harris, Frank Thompson, W. H. Griffin, Boyne City.

R. I. Mallman, F. A. Kenyon, East Jordan.

W. J. Gallagher, Beaver Island.

W. J. Pearson, Boyne Falls.

Boyne City Journal—The boats which are now loading at the Boyne City docks have attracted a good deal of attention, many thinking that at last the shipping was to be resumed. This, however, is not the case. The Reynolds will take about half a million feet from the Boyne City Lumber Company docks and the same from the White Company. This would give space for the present and but a few days run in the mills and as there are no other prospects of other boats being in it proved it cannot be held out that there is any hope of the mills starting up at once. The schooner which is loading is not taking on lumber and the situation has not changed since the mills were closed. The boats will take on a considerable amount of dollars and when it begins to move, which it will eventually, Boyne City will see an era of prosperity. The price of lumber are bound to go higher for such prices as lumber standing. There will always be a demand for it although the tightness of the money market may affect it temporarily. While the lumber stands on the docks it is steadily increasing in value with always the prospect ahead of a rapid movement when the market opens up. Though present times are hard and citizens have every feel pessimistic, it should be remembered that it is only temporary and a brighter industrial era will result. Everyone, pull together and the storm will be weathered without great damage to the city. There is a future ahead for Boyne City which will survive more than one dull season and because of reverses this year we should not allow ourselves to think the city is slipping backward.

DRYS MAP CAMPAIGN

Crusade For State-wide Prohibition in 1916 is Now Well Under Way

According to plans outlined by Grant M. Hudson, superintendent of the Michigan Anti-Saloon League, local option campaigns will be staged in 22 counties next spring where saloons and breweries are now doing business, and in addition vigorous fights will be made to retain the "dry" counties where the "wets" will take the offensive.

The counties now "wet" where local option will be made a issue are as follows: Ontonagon, Houghton, Iron, Keweenaw, Baraga, Menominee, Menominee, Delta, Alger, Schoolcraft, Luce, Mackinac, Chippewa, Berrien, Kalamazoo, Jackson, Mason, Manistee, Emmet, Grand Traverse, Tuscola, Ionia, Crawford, Leelanau and Lapeer.

Although it was reported that the anti-saloon league would attempt a campaign for state wide prohibition in 1916, Superintendent Hudson says that the league has no definite plans along that line, but he says that a statewide campaign will not be attempted until the league is reasonably sure of success.

ANOTHER AUTO ACCIDENT

Boyne Journal—Yesterday morning Mrs. Thompkins of Grovland street, wife and two children, L. D., seven years old, Harry, nine years old, motored to Petoskey, mother of Mrs. Thompkins, and G. Thompkins, aged father of Mr. Thompkins, started from the city's end log in Mr. Thompkins' Ford car. They had planned on driving through Petoskey and Harbor Springs, but at the last minute, but an accident, a few miles out of Petoskey sent them all to the Petoskey hospital. They were speeding along at a fair rate when a dog ran into the road ahead of the machine. Mr. Thompkins, who was driving, swerved the car to avoid hitting the canine and the car turned over into a ditch, pinning the occupants beneath it. It happened that another car was behind them and they were soon rescued from their position. It was found that each one had received some or less injury and the car was quite to use. The rescuers conveyed the party to the Petoskey hospital, where they received medical attention. Mr. Thompkins, senior, suffered a dislocated shoulder, L. D. received a broken collar bone, and J. Thompkins was hurt internally. The others were all severely bruised.

Boyne Journal—There will be but two more editions of the Evening Journal, Monday and Tuesday. Henceforth The Journal and Citizen will be combined and delivered to the subscribers of each paper Tuesday and Friday, being a semi weekly. This arrangement is planned as only a temporary one, the publication of The Evening Journal will be resumed as soon as conditions in the city warrant it, which we trust will be soon. The decision to publish twice a week was arrived at after carefully going over the situation. It costs a considerable sum of money each month to publish a daily newspaper no larger than the Journal, and although the venture has proven successful it promises to be a financial loss the coming winter with conditions in the City as they are at present. It is the hope of the management, and the belief that within a few weeks Boyne City will again be in the list of cities supporting a daily newspaper.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

This story of a man, in the life of one big man, his big foes and big friends, the strife, the hopes, and the aspirations of modern America. Involved with his ambition is the ambition of the laborer, of the capitalist, of the progressive, of the humanitarian, of the socialist, of the society woman, and of the woman who gives all for love.

CHAPTER I.

Dreams.

He drifted into the delectable land that lies between sleep and waking, tasting the fleeting savor of his dreams—the epic visions of full-blooded youth. They had passed just beyond memory, leaving a contented, yet glowing sense of sharp conflict waged, of victories won. A golden haze enveloped him. Through it filtered a delicious resonance, as of some noble processional sung by a dispersing far-distant choir.

A wave of delight rippled over him. Then the thought that, not sharing his slumber, had petted his colorful dreams, worked to the surface.

"Ely! last day here!"

He awoke slowly. Intore him, seen through the unshuttered window, lay world sunlit enough to one tugging against the restraints, lovely when it was to be left behind. He saw the September sun peep over the hills at the head of the valley, rise majestically and swing clear, a golden disk flung in the sky, symbol of the reward of men's struggles, its radiance, streaming into the little room, dispelled shadowed sleep with a mellow glow he could almost feel. The matin sounds arose, according finally with the lingering echoes of his dream music. He revelled in a new perception.

He was twenty years old.

He was not one to loll. He sprang from bed and stood naked; supple beautiful youth, too slender for great strength but with the unconscious grace of the wild animal.

He frowned and stood by the window in the at inside of a listener. Intently he sought to define the faint other world resonance that still seemed to vibrate about him. But the theme eluded him.

His illusion was effectually shattered. Into the subdued melody of the Sabbath morning thrust a profane interpreter, the jerky strumming notes of a cabinet organ in the day's hymns, played by some one who aspired beyond endowment.

He frowned, then laughed. Back his head and laughed aloud—a trick he had sometimes—at the absurd antithesis.

"I'm still in Bethel. It's a long way from here to—there." He drew a long deep breath.

A question hailed him. "There—where?"

He shook his head vigorously, as though to throw off the query, and went down to the kitchen.

The odor of frying ham assisted his rebirth; he was hungry. Mark's man, apparently old, was placing heavy, chipped ironware on the table. He nodded briefly in response to the youth's little greeting.

"I'll be ready," he said in a dull flat voice. "Have you hitched up the stable," and continued his slow precise setting of the table.

In a few minutes the other returned, the horses fed and his own hands and face scrubbed in cold water from the cistern. They sat, down without speaking. The youth ate sparingly, eagerly.

When the first keenness of appetite was gone, turning to taste of the great hour at hand, he broke the silence. "Well, father, this is my last day in Bethel."

The old man merely nodded, keeping his eyes on his plate.

Hoyleably the son began to eat forth his plans and hopes and expectations; they were to Bethel. But the old man maintained his silence. The youth conceived it to be an unmerited slur on his science.

"Guess you're not interested," he said a trifle sullenly.

"Yes, I'm interested, Mark," the father answered, "but there ain't anything to say." He raised his glance to the window. "Guess I couldn't say anything that'd help much."

The sweep of Bill Truitt's anticipation followed before a quality in the old man's words. Old, "old bummer," so his neighbors called him. Yet he was not really old, but in the decades of life very far from the prime of manhood. For he, too, had dreamed his big golden dreams. Dreams he had chased to dismantled rotting forge, monument to their futility. After half a lifetime had returned to his shop and trade, shoeing his neighbors' horses, mending their wagons and plows, a dull-eyed, taciturn, spiritless plodder.

Slowly the boy rose and began to clear the table. The son moved toward the door. There he paused, vaguely sensible of a sorrow to which some soothing word was to be said. But poor the word would not come to this unschooled to such tender office. He was slowly out into the sunshine.

In the stable he carried the horses, lingering over the petting brown mare—latest and finest trophy of his horse-trading—and her great shoes eating. This layer of love ended, he lighted a pipe and sat in the stable doorway.

He sat there until from across the town came a dull unmusical clamor, the cracked church bell calling the faithful—that to to say all Bethel save one—to worship. He was reluctantly. Soon he emerged from the little house, shaved to the last degree and clad in the discomfort of Sunday clothes.

Always on warm Sabbath mornings Simon Truitt was to be found sitting on the stoop, old always facing the north; the dismantled forge lay to the south. He was that one for whom the cracked bell tolled in vain; he was supposed to be an atheist.

"Going to church?" he asked in the extremely polite tone that was his habit.

"I guess so," answered Mark. "Unless," with sudden understanding, "you'd like me to stay."

Simon hesitated, then shook his head. "No, you'd better go same as always. Courtney'd want you to."

"I was thinkin' of him."

Simon nodded. "More'n to—anyone else here. Thinks a good deal of him, don't you?"

"Yes. Sometimes he's kind o' queer, though."

Simon nodded again. "Dya," he asked unexpectedly, "dya believe what he preaches?"

"Why, yes!" said Mark. "Yes, I s'pose so," he amended.

The dull glance momentarily sharpened. "Not very much, I expect. Bet ye believe it hard—or not at all. It's most time fur church."

Mark swung heavily down the path. The father's face followed him wistfully.

Mark joined the straggling procession that moved, stilty decorous, toward the house of worship. Quick, during the short journey, a spring season overtook and passed blue, a girl in the hat under the trimmed and nodded. A wave of red surged into his dark face. Until the wagon drove into the churchyard, his glance clung to the mass of yellow hair under the pink hat. Unconscious by his step quickened.

He found an empty pew near the door, and settling, issued back, half closing his eyes. He followed the congregation as it rose and sat in hymn and prayer and lesson; but he moved mechanically, without thought of worship. His glance sought the far corner where a shaft of morning sunshine had lit a mass of yellow hair softening the slight and his dreams gave him a new and daring resolve. The hour sped swiftly.

He went quietly from the church; in the yard he took a station by which the former folk must pass in their withdrawal and there, as he had resolved, boldly, in the eyes of all, he waited for her.

She appeared, a slender girl who, as she moved slowly around the church, wore a spell over the betrousered portion of Bethel, even where she had not the gentle aid of dreams. She was not small, but, neatly made, gave an effect of daintiness not characteristic of the maids of that valley. Unity was supposed to be "delicate," hence was spared the arduous tasks that leave so little time to study of beauty hints and fashions. If there were some to suggest that Squire Martin's family let little pass for "delicate," at least no males were among these critics.

Sufficiencies in the finger-tips but not betraying it, she picked her dainty way among the gossiping groups, losing any little smiles to this and that intoxicated youth, hopelessly dead to an occasional resentful titter in her wake.

She came to a halt beside Mark, looking up with a smile that made him forget curious observers.

"Good morning, Mark!"

"Unity!" His voice was low, tense, as though he announced some tragic happening. "I'm going away tomorrow."

The vivacity fell from her face, leaving it very serious.

"To the city? For good?"

"To the city. For good."

"I am glad."

He stammered, "I thought—I wanted you to be sorry."

"I am glad," she repeated emphatically. "I'm glad—for you, she added more softly.

He remained silent, as unreasoning, indefinite disappointment fell upon him. Something he wanted—he could not say what—was lacking in her words.

"Aren't you glad?"

"Yes, but—" He dismissed the Bethel, little suggestive returned. "Yes, poor driving this afternoon."

She became girlish again. "Is that an invitation?" with a demure little smile.

"If you want to go."

"Of course, Mister Solemn! Aren't you—" She stopped, apparently over come with confusion for her boldness.

"Say it!" he hoarsely thirstily.

There was a delicious moment of uncertainty, a breathless little heart-throb, then the girl, with a little laugh, turned the street past the point where it returned to its native state of dusty, weed-flecked country pike. He knew a place where the road rose sharply and fell again. Mounting to the crest, he threw himself on the roadside and waited; father Richard Courtney would come on the afternoon service walk that was his custom.

By the rise, village-bred, insurgent, creaked an ancient top buggy. In it sat a middle-aged man upon whose face were written honor and patience, qualities of which he had great need just then. His horse labored heavily at its task, head hanging low, and the hollows in Simon Truitt's stubby puffed louder or harder. At the crest it stopped without urging. Mark frowned impatiently. Then he noticed the sad state of the horse and a grim displaced the frown.

"Here you're going away," "Doc" Hodges remarked. "For the good of the town?"

Mark nodded, the grin widening. "Maybe you'd like to help pay my fare?"

"I have helped," the doctor rejoined drily. "Going to get rich, ain't you? They all think that.

"It happens sometimes."

"You might, though. Any man ought to get rich who could sell me this—would you call it a horse?"

"Hmm!" Mark considered the animal judicially. "Well, it has four legs."

So a tilty goal," drawled the doctor. "Good be more use to me, too." "What d'you buy it for, then?"

"I ain't squealing. Pretty slick customer, ain't you?"

The girl returned. "I can sell half your horse," Mark modestly admitted, "to some people."

"Humph! Only a fool'd buy 'em of you," the doctor agreed. "What'll you take for the brown mare?"

"The brown mare isn't for sale."

"Any horse is for sale," the doctor insisted, "at the right price. Give you a hundred and fifty."

"I wouldn't sell her for two-fifty."

The doctor sighed and clucked to the weary horse.

Out of the dusty cloud trailing behind the creaky buggy emerged a tall stooping figure, clad in the rusty black of the country clergyman. He walked slowly, and when he came to the rise, with a slight effort; evidently or was a frail man physically. At the crest he stopped, breathing hard.

"Until this morning!" in some alarm.

"Then it seemed kind o' cosy and—and peaceful. I hate to leave it. I hate to leave you, Unity."

"And I'll hate to have you go. But, of course, you must. And then, before very long, you'll come back—and take me away with you."

For a while in silence they gave themselves to the consolation thus served. Then:

"Oh, Unity, how can you love me so?"

She was able to answer him on this dangerous, unsteady ground. "I guess I couldn't help it. It's what I wanted you to have."

Mark stared. "I—I'm afraid I don't understand."

"And," Courtney cried, "I can make you understand! But you will come, when it comes to you." The fire began to die from his eyes and voice. "If it comes," he added.

For a while Mark considered perplexedly this outlawed. Then he dismissed it as one of the incomprehensible moments of a man whom, despite odd qualities, he liked very much. He returned to the thought that had led to the moment.

A little timidly he made the offer. "I'm going to make the home for you with you, if you'd like her."

"It's good of you to think of it. But you can sell her well. And you'll need the money."

"I know. But I want you to have her. I tended to get her for you."

Courtney would not permit the pleasure. "Of course, I—I—I shall miss her very much."

Mark shook his head. "I want you to have her."

"He needs a good horse. The one he has—"

"It was a fair trade," Mark asserted defensively.

A turn of the road brought them within sight of a great hill that stood across the valley. Over its level top swept breezes fragrant from passing many leagues of forest. Feeding hill the village called it, finding humorous matter therein.

Courtney pointed. "That is where the doctor wants to build his sanatorium for consumptives."

"I know. He's cracked over that. He'll never do it."

"Perhaps not. It would be too bad." Courtney added quietly, "as his life idea."

Mark looked long at the hill, remembering what he had read of the sanatorium in Spain might be gleaned some fact of the measure of his friend's faith.

After a while he said slowly, "Would you really rather have it have the mare?"

CHAPTER II.

The Path of Youth.

Mark Truitt's mother had thought to love back to his ancestors, he might have understood his father.

Mark, whose life, the preacher supposed, was to be made over by mechanically, without thought of worldliness and clean living, "was to have sealing a church of quality, conservative in unfold within him.

Compulsorily, once sought, had suddenly become distasteful. He was happy only when exercising close in the woods, the sun on shoulder, or drifting lazily in his canoe.

After a period, during which his body shot up to its full height, whose sons toil and study beside his thoughts and Richard Courtney began to perceive vain hopes, occurred an event of no small importance to many young gentlemen of Bethel. Unity Martin, proud possessor of a diploma declaring to those who cared to peruse (and she had constituted certain of them, looking down at him. The glory of the sunset was still upon her; in her eyes was another glow, from within, for him.

She measured the distance to the place—it was almost her own sight—then with a gasp for her daring, she sprang into his arms. He caught her and held her, kissing her again and again, thrillily. She began to respond; her arms tightened around his neck; she clung very close.

"I love you," huskily, "Oh, Mark, you won't forget me—out there. I—I couldn't bear that."

"I will not forget."

A last bright shaft reflected from the crimson west touched their little clearing, fell upon her. And that was the picture of her he carried away with them—Unity in the sunset glow, eyes and cheeks aflame with love, desiring him only and not that he would win.

"Little late, ain't ye?" Simon greeted them gruffly as they came hand in hand in the words, and no question; he assumed no right to pry into his son's affairs.

"I've been taking a drive," Mark said.

Simon rose and went into the parlor. He returned, carrying a pitcher of milk and a plate piled high with cold meats.

"I kept this ready for ya. Thought ya might be hungry."

Mark was not hungry, but he ate with a show of good relish. Some instinct told him not to decline this little service.

"Glad ye're party glad to get away from here."

"If you do not mind chasing state with me, I would appreciate it very much," hesitatingly replied the man. The draft is not very good for my cold."

ECZEMA SPREAD OVER HANDS

101 s. Beeds St., Marion, Ind.—"First the eczema started on my fingers, then it spread all over my hands. It broke out in tiny blisters, then would get dry and crack and scab so I could not have a clean place to wash water they hurt me so badly. I could not do all my work. They itched and burning were terrible. The more I scratched the worse it made them. They were so bad I could not help scratching them and would walk the floor they caused me so. I could not sleep, lost many nights of rest on account of the eczema. My hands were not fit to be seen and I kept them wrapped up and were mittens that I made out of linen.

Then I bought one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment. I saw the second box of Cuticura Ointment was healing my hands. And that we have remained well ever since." (Signed) Mrs. G. HISTORY A TURBULENT ONE IN ENGLAND'S DRINKING AGE

Since Its Freedom From Spain Mexico Has Passed Through Many Revolutions.

Primate Asks Why Old-Time Drunkenness, According to Records, Is Not Wondered At.

Mexico's history as a "republic" began almost one year ago, when Gen. Iturbide, who had been chosen emperor of Mexico and had taken the title of Augustin I, was forced to abdicate. The war for freedom from Spain had lasted from 1810, and after a struggle of eleven years Iturbide decided the conflict in favor of the patriots and made a triumphal entry into the City of Mexico. The leaders decided to form the country into an empire, and Iturbide offered the crown to Spanish princes. The offer was refused and Iturbide himself was elected by purpose, unwarmed by inspiration. After ten years he was timed as Richard Courtney had found him.

"I have scoured the windows, I cannot give the light," thought the preacher sadly.

He became aware that Mark had broken the silence. "I—I owe you a ride," he had said.

"Not very much," Courtney sighed. "I wish it were more—much more."

"Oh, yes, it is much. You've taught me to read and talk and—and think." Courtney repressed an unhappy smile. "You've made me—see big. You've got me ready to go away from here—I appreciate it."

"I'm sorrier you could see that. But must you go?" The plea was without spirit; he knew its uselessness. "There's a life I've lived here, even by a man who sees big. I wish you would stay, at least for a while."

"No, I must go now. I've a reason you don't know."

The preacher felt a jealous pang. After a while he said, "Did you by any chance hear my sermon this morning?"

Mark looked away, uncomfortable. "Only part of it. I was thinking pretty hard."

"Of yellow braids and a pretty complexion," courtesy said to himself silently.

Mark was frowning in an effort to recall and piece together detached phrases that had floated to him during the exercise and then, finding no welcome, floated away. "It was about," he said hesitatingly, "it was about a man finding his big idea."

"I am flattered." The dry droll inflection was a concealment.

"The big idea," said Mark vaguely. "Does it mean—God?"

"It's the joy of lifting the world forward. It—" Courtney stopped abruptly, with a hopeless smile. He looked away across the hills.

Suddenly, with an oddly appealing gesture, he turned again to Mark. All the intense hunger of the man that he dreamed and failed and yet clung to in tatter fragments of his hope, painting his vision, breathed in his words.

"Some day you may remember I told you. It's the big purpose that sometimes comes to the big passion in man, to accomplish some work in its own sake; that grips him, drives him, makes him ruthless to his own desires, forgetful of his failures and blind to everything but his task; that transforms him into a narrow zealot, a fanatic, but a power—always a power—because he has his purpose to narrate. It is that without which the wagons make regular trips, that habit having been acquired through service for the hundreds and thousands of rancheros that spend every summer on the peninsula. Daily trips are made, to the great convenience of farmers and resorters. Most of the deliveries are now made in automobiles instead of wagons.

TO ENCOURAGE FARMERS.

The Alpena chamber of commerce is trying to encourage the farmers of that part of the state by sending out this note:

"One of the things which means much to Alpena county, bigger land values and more prosperous homes to the city has not been cared for as great as it should be—namely, the condition of young cherry and apple orchards just coming into bearing, and of the fruit growers' trees that can show conclusively the adaptability of our soil and climate for the very choicest fruit, ought to bring about a largely increased acreage of orchards. The newspapers have recently told of carloads of cherries from the Grand Traverse district, where cherry raising is carried on so successfully. Our own land and locality are proved to be just right for the raising of sour cherries, and it is believed that the conditions for this or for commercial purposes would prove fast as profitable here as it has proved across the state."

TO BRIGHTEN COUNTRY LIFE.

As a move toward solution of the problem of making life in the country more attractive the Michigan agricultural college will this fall inaugurate an extension course whose purpose will be that of showing every farmer in the state how he may secure the convenience which make life more tolerable in the homes of his city brothers.

This newest plan of the college will be known under the general name of "agricultural engineering," and through it the M. A. C. men will strive to simplify for the farmer problems of home sanitation, water systems, sewage disposal, lighting and related subjects. Men expert in this work will personally visit the counties, districts, and will talk with rural dwellers face to face.

The drudgery of the farm and the absence of conveniences which the city woman looks upon as natural are potent factors in bringing farm life into disfavor, declares Superintendent Robert J. Baldwin of the M. A. C. extension department.

With a view to meeting these needs that the new course is designed.

He aim will be to improve rural farm and home conditions by giving assistance with the mechanical problems arising out of the building of farm structures, installation of conveniences and equipment, and the operation of modern farm equipment.

"Men who have been trained in engineering will be applied to agriculture and home problems, and who are familiar with rural conditions and needs will be employed as field representatives to give assistance and advice to rural communities on all rural problems related to the farm and home.

"Community interest in various phases of the work will be promoted by means of lectures and demonstrations, but the specific problems of farm life, which will also be given special attention.

ENLARGE EXPERIMENT FARM.

The state board of agriculture met last week in the village hall in Chatham and made provision for the clearing of an additional 160 acres of land at the experiment station in connection with the farm. The clearing will be commenced immediately. The board also made provision for the purchase of several head of cattle to add to the eleven head of fifteen thoroughbred Holsteins now on the Chatham farm.

Two hundred and fifteen head of sheep also were purchased recently by the board from the Chicago stock yards arrived last week from Washington. A new sheep barn will be built this fall to take care of the flock.

The members of the board were much pleased with the progress which is being made at the Chatham farm and predict that the introduction of cattle and sheep raising on the farm will prove to the farmers of the section of the state that this country is peculiarly adapted to stock raising.

"I was especially surprised to see how green everything is in the upper peninsula," said one of the board members whose home is in the lower peninsula. "Down in our country everything is dried up for want of rain and the farmers are hard put to it for pasture."

WHEAT GROWING IN MICHIGAN.

Restoration of Michigan to prominence as a wheat-growing state has become a foothold as a result of the yields returned by a new variety of wheat, which has been developed by Prof. Frank A. Spragg of M. A. C. and tested out by state farmers. The new variety was sent out among state farmers a year ago by the college and the crop produced from this seed has averaged from 30 to 40 bushels to the acre, while some average is but 25 to 30 bushels.

This wheat, which is yielding so phenomenally, is a variety known as "Red Rock." It is a winter wheat, which was developed by Professor Spragg to withstand Michigan's severe seasons.

"In the past few years wheat production in Michigan has fallen off 50 per cent," declared Dr. Eben Mumford, head of the farm management department of M. A. C., "but general adoption of this new variety may restore our standing. Such a restoration is scarcely to be hoped for with the ground varieties, which yield but 17 or 18 bushels to the acre.

"Our county agents have reported that farmers who have harvested the new wheat have had yields averaging 35 to 40 bushels to the acre, while their neighbors could get but 17 to the acre.

Some of the counties from which these agents have reported were St. Clair, Branch, Hillsdale, Antrim, Newaygo, Saginaw and Kent.

CHOLERA FIGHT A SUCCESS.

The fight against hog cholera in Branch county this year has saved the farmers of the county $25,000, according to an estimate by the head of the bureau of animal industry, which has had charge of the work. Last year $40,000 worth of swine was lost through this disease and it was through the efforts of the county farm bureau that the government sent an expert here to stamp out the disease.

Counties where no bureau exists have no such severe losses, which could have been avoided by systematic and intelligent treatment. Serum for the treatment can be obtained any time from the agricultural college, and while not all swine are saved after they have once been attacked the herds regain their health and stand out among them did not take it. This is only one of the many good results that accrue from a farm bureau in a county.

OIL CRAZE DIES OUT.

The oil craze which swept Michigan during the winter of 1911-12 has died down, according to State Geologist Alfred C. Lane, professor of geology, but with little success.

The oil craze cost the prospectors many thousands of dollars. It is said that the Saginaw Valley company alone lost $85,000 in its efforts to find oil in paying quantities. As about every county in the state had several of the enthusiastic boosters, the loss must have been the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Although there are many veins of oil in Michigan, it has been found impossible to find it in paying quantities and the state has been drilled for oil and found that pays as a lubricating oil.

The late oil craze proved a fertile field for sharpers. Many a worthless oil-dripping apparatus was unloaded on to an old-land community at a handsome profit. Oil smellers with magic wands also reaped a harvest.

MAKE RECORDS IN CUCUMBERS.

Some record yields of cucumbers are being made in the new salting station in Durand, and of them that of Mr. Berlin of near Duffield is the top land to date. Off of three acres he had taken 1,100 bushels of cucumbers and had only five pickings. This is particularly good, considering the fact that the real season is not supposed to be on until the close of August. These are other good yields and a large average for next season is assured.

Jackson Baxwell's Farm.

In the northern county of Emmet one of the prosperous farmers who need make no excuses because his farm is in the north, where land is not supposed to be worth much, is Jackson Baxwell, whose farm is one of the best kept and well cultivated, and are managed on the modern methods of crop rotation. The farm is thus kept up well continually. He helps do that with a few head of good stock. This year he raised twenty acres of barley, for which there will be an unusual demand this fall.

Hero Falls Three Stories.

New York.—Hanging by one hand and with the other clinging to window sills burning home in Brooklyn, John Sarakon expected to be with his wife and other are until the mounting flames reached his flesh. Then he dropped and the women fell. But Sarakon was caught by men in the street below, who had watched his perilous climb in order endeavors to save his wife, but Sarakon sustained a fractured leg and was taken to the Kings County hospital in a critical condition.

Grieving Dog is a Suicide.

Bangor, Me.—From Mount Desert comes a story of dog suicide. A dog sent there from New Hampshire, after the death of his master, showed signs of grief and homesickness from the first, refusing to eat. Consequently he would sit out to the sea wall and looking out at sea, would howl dismally. One day, taking his way to a rocky point, he stood looking seaward for a few minutes and then plunged among the breakers. He was never seen again.

Fragment of concentric rings, taken from the heart of the Charter Oak, fell January 21, 1913. Above, one hour after being placed in water; below, after four hours later, showing the growth produced by the water. The fragment of the Charter Oak is in the lower picture is in reality about one-fourth size.

old and found after 48 hours that "the tissue which had become adapted to the lime water had increased much more rapidly than the fresh tissue."

"The experiment proved," concludes Doctor Carrel, "connective tissue cells, like colonies of infusoria, may profitably be multiplied."

This is by far the most remarkable contribution to the science of life outside the body that has yet been made, demonstrating that cells, at any rate, of the cells that make up the bodies of animals have in themselves the power, under the influence of proper conditions, not of independent life, but of drawing from a suitable medium the material necessary for their growth and thus of reproducing themselves for a seemingly indefinite time.

FROM AN OLD RECORD BOOK

Interesting Data on the Cost of Dying 100 Years Ago in Old Kentucky.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—At the term of court held here December 14, 1801, we find the following on record:

"Ordered that John Clark be allowed for boarding and finding and attending upon Prather's coffins when sick, 27 days, the sum of $10.

"For keeping a horse, drenching and doctoring of him when foundered, 49 days, $12.

"For writing 3 days on Leathias business, $3.

"For paying the doctor for writing, $1.62.

"For finding for the doctor, 50c.

"For all the trouble in burying of him, finding planks, getting the coffin made, and for flowers and attending the burying the sum of $17."

ABLE EXPERIMENTS

Dr. Alexis Carrel's Wonderful Progress in Research.

Clever Physician of Rockefeller Institute Tells of Keeping Cells Alive Two and a Half Years Out of the Body.

New York.—Dr. Alexis Carrel, of the Rockefeller Institute, has, from time to time, told of the progress of his experiments in keeping living tissue alive in glass jars.

He describes some connective tissue derived on January 17, 1912, from the heart of a chicken embryo seven days old. This is still living and growing, though it is now two years and a half since it was taken from the chick.

"The fragments of heart pulsated for 104 days and gave rise to a very large number of connective tissue cells, wrote Doctor Carrel. This means that it not only lived but grew. "These cells multiplied actively during the last two years," continued Carrel, "and produced a large amount of connective tissue. At present a great many cultures are obtained from the strain established.

"Doctor Carrel measures the growth of a piece of this tissue by removing a fragment from a culture, washing it in Ringer solution, placing it in a new medium, and after 48 hours measuring the ring of new tissue that has formed around the fragment. "Periods of cleaner," he says, "usually double in 48 hours. The rate of growth varies with the medium, but under favorable circumstances the ring of new tissue has grown from one-twelfth to one-tenth of an inch in 48 hours.

"An extraordinary fact noted by Doctor Carrel is that the amount of new tissue produced in a given culture of disease strain today is almost double the amount produced a year ago. In other words this tissue is stronger than it was originally.

Doctor Carrel compared the rate of growth of this two-and-a-half-year-old tissue with that of fresh tissue from the heart of a chick embryo eight days old.

WOMEN WHO ARE ALWAYS TIRED

May Find Help in This Letter.

Swan Creek, Mich.—"I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. Words through neglect or overwork I got run down and my appetite is poor and I am so tired and weak, languid, always tired feeling. I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it bounds me up, gives me strength, and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a great blessing to women, and I cannot speak too highly of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others."—Mrs. ANNIE CAMERON, R.F.D., No. 1, Swan Creek, Michigan.

WANTED TO EXCHANGE SEATS

For inquiring as to Presence of Chorus Girls.

Dr Henry Moskowitz, president of the New York civil service commission, tells this story.

It happened at the state convention of the Progressives at dyrscuse.

"A quintuplicate man near one of the doors arose and inquired if there happened to be a Christian Scientist among the assemblage.

"In answer to his question a lady left her seat and wended her way to the man.

"I am a Christian Science teacher," she said. "What can I do for you?

"If you do not mind chasing state with me, I would appreciate it very much," hesitatingly replied the man. The draft is not very good for my cold."

Water Is Good Medicine

TO PREVENT PLANT DISEASES

Bordeaux Mixture Is Best Spray Material Now Available for Control of Certain Insects.

The best spray material, and almost the only one, now available for use in the prevention of plant diseases in the garden is bordeaux mixture, easily made by thoroughly dissolving a pound of bluestone (copper sulphate) in ten gallons of water, then slaking one and one-fourth pounds of best stone lime, and dissolving this in two gallons of water, and finally, and most of concentrated stirring, pouring the two mixtures together into a third vessel. This mixture is a bluish liquid which, when properly strained, and used at once, will work through the finest nozzles without clogging or other difficulties. Arsenate of lead, at the rate of a pound of the paste, or a little less of the powdered, may be added to the Bordeaux if desired, and the mixture will then be good for the control of leaf-eating insects as well as fungous diseases. Its sure to have its advocates and opponents by the addition of water or a little soda, and by thorough shaking or stirring before it is added to the other mixture.

A NIGHT OF TERROR

Peculiar Experience With a Deadly Mexican Tarantula.

PENNED IN A DARK BEDROOM.

The Trying Ordeal Through Which a Woman Tourist Passed in a Hotel at Vera Cruz—Awaiting the Bite That Meant Madness and Then Death.

The tarantula is much larger in Mexico than in Italy. His four pairs of hairy legs, his speckled bulging belly, his abnormally fat head, armed with vicious nippers and equipped with eight eyes arranged in transverse rows, suffice to fill you with a wholesome desire to give him the right of way without ado.

Owing to the fact that he has an unwelcome habit of serving his own realm in the tropical vines to make scientific little visitations to the corners of your bedroom it had always been my custom to search every nook and crevice of my sleeping room before retiring for the night. Twice had I seen native laborers, prone, in the agony of death due to a tarantula bite. So it was not surprising that this creeping thing headed my list of the many dangers to be shunned in Mexico.

I had just reached Vera Cruz from Mexico City, very tired, and decided to seek my room early in the evening, which, indeed, is the only safe and proper thing for an unaccompanied woman in Mexico to do. That part of the diligencias in which my room was located was evidently undergoing repairs, for a pile of timbers was included in the furnishing of my apartments.

No particular reason occurred to me why I should investigate this lumber, and little wondering that it might shelter lurking danger, I flung my weary head on the dirty pillow. But as I lay quietly dozing off to sleep I suddenly heard a soft little noise, which one might describe as a cross between a hum and a buzz.

As a precaution against the many venomous things that creep and crawl even in the well beaten paths of Mexico, I had made a careful study of the arachnids, to which class the tarantulas belong. I recognized that soft unostentatious warning that announced a roommate as unbearable as one could well wish.

Cautiously I stretched out my hand to see if by chance there were some matches on the little stand near my bed, with the result that I knocked the unlighted candle upon the floor. That was enough for my mettlesome roommate; he had been personally insulted by the noise, and suddenly in the utter darkness, that black stillness which one feels in a strange room, I detected a sickening odor, the warning of the angry tarantula.

I strained my ears to detect the soft, characteristic click that the male, the destroyer of the species, employs as a fancy frill to his malicious song. My blood chilled as I heard his muffled ham-click, ham-click, ham—apparently not three feet away. I held my breath, instinctively my nose, and lay wondering how long it would be ere I should feel his big hairy foot touching my face, or my neck or before he soft woolly body would light upon my face. It was not at all pleasant to remember that one of a tarantula's ancestors had fed his way to a friend quietly dozing in imaginary repose in the court, "Gentlemen of the jury."

A bitter thirst ran through the sudden dryness arrived to heighten his unhappiness; and the obnoxious odor fell from his lips again. Then he gathered himself together and launched into a prevarication so brilliantly bold and impassioned that it carried the house, by storm and told the coroner stone to his future greatness, his free, easy coming to him as a result of this speech, which some consider the finest he ever made.

Knights Templars.

The name "Knights Templars" was first assumed by a semireligious, semimilitary order founded in the twelfth century for the commendable purpose of protecting the scattered and disbanded crusaders. At first they were merely a band, but after they were assigned quarters at the palace in Jerusalem called Solomon's temple they became known as Knights of the Temple, or Knights Templars. The ancient order finally became so powerful that it was suppressed in the fourteenth century, and the continuity or chastity of the modern with the ancient one of the same name has been warmly disputed.—Philadelphia Press.

Story of a Church Sign.

In New York city alone more than 200 electric signs are used by the churches. Perhaps the earliest illuminated church sign was a cross placed over a Lutheran church in lower Manhattan, nearly forty years ago. Lewis and Lewis, flowery painters and sign makers, were the men who made the first shaft of my article.—New York Sun.

A Billion.

Great Britain clings to its own numerical system and considers a billion as a million times a million. But America differs, a billion in the United States being only a thousand millions. This is perhaps the only instance in which a thing is larger in the old country than in the new. One can go on going a little way from England—to Calais—to find the billion lessened, for France divides a thousand millions with the name of billion. They are nearly even in Prussia, by the connection, however, inasmuch as there is always a word, milliard, which is used to designate this number.—Chicago Herald.

Passenger Applause.

"What was you expecting for? said the bus driver to the most prominent of the persons absolutely the worst.

"Why, I was expecting to get a tip, of course, sir, and I'm not proud at all."

"Well, I'm sorry, but I am that the economic down at most," replied the stout person, and he ran fast for his life.—New York Post.

STORIES OF LISZT

How the Famous Master Played to a Hidden Audience.

A SURPRISE AT THE FINISH.

For a Moment It Filled the Hostess and Company With Dismay, but Proved a Case of All's Well That Ends Well—A Snub For a Tactless Baroness.

Liszt resented people coming on his playing. When Baroness R. invegled him into promising to take tea with her, because he knew her father, also on his accepting, invited a lot of friends, holding out hopes that Liszt would play. She pushed the piano into the middle of the room—no one could have possibly failed to see it.

Every one was on the qui vive when Liszt arrived and breathless with anticipation. Liszt, who had had many surprises of this sort, I imagine, saw the situation at a glance. After several people had been presented to him, Liszt, with his most captivating smile, said to the hostess:

"Madam, where is your piano?" and looked all about for the instrument, though it was within an inch of his nose.

"Oh, monseigneur! Would you, really * * ?" advancing toward the piano, triumphantly. "You are too kind. I never should have dared to ask you." And, waving her hand toward it, "There is the piano!"

"Ah, yes," said Liszt, who dearly loves a joke, "I wished to put my hat on it."

Very crestfallen, but still undaunted, the tactless baroness cried, "But, monseigneur, you will not refuse, I hope, to play a scale—merely to touch the piano?"

But Liszt, as subtle as she was tactless, answered, coldly: "Madam, I never play my scales in the afternoon," and turned his back on her and talked with Madam Heine.

On another occasion Liszt wrote to me that he would bring some of his songs (if my over at 5 o'clock. I le close his letter. What a chance, thought I, for me to give pleasure to some of my friends who I knew were longing to see him. Although he had sold entre nous in his letter, and I knew that he really wanted to look through the songs alone with me, I could not resist the temptation—though it was such rank disobedience—and said to them:

"Liszt is coming to me at 5 o'clock. If you would like to hear him, and promise to be hidden behind a door, I will invite you."

They all accepted with rapture and were assembled in the little salon before the time appointed. The door was left open and a large screen placed before it.

Johan fetched Liszt in our carriage, as he always does. I received him and the book of "Lieder" which he brought with him. (Only Johan and Nina were present.) He opened the book at "Mein liebster Herr" one of his most beautiful songs, and he sang it exquisitely but very difficult accompaniment. He played with fairy fingers, and we were in paradise for half an hour, when he closed the book and, without a word, left the room.

I stood as one stunned. After "Rigoletto" he played "Les Bas—Bas Vienne," and this time the—ally did people over and expend to view the group of tactless friends who had hid behind it. I shuddered to think how the master would take this hoax of mine.

He took it better than I expected—in fact, he laughed outright. The tableau came to life and were presented to him and we were delighted. I am now glad that I was, too, at my ease, he laughed so much at my ease and my confusion. He was rolled down his cheeks. He wiped them away with his pocket handkerchief, which had an embroidered F. L. in the corner. This he left behind, and when I ran after him—Mme. de Hozeemann-Lindecrone in Harper's Magazine.

A Woman Executioner.

It will be a surprise to most people to learn that there has actually been a woman executioner in this country. In olden times few cared to undertake the office of executioner, and occasionally some adventurer was required on condition that the criminal should perform his office. A case of this sort occurred in prerevolutionary days, when a woman was sentenced to death for a murder. She had committed the crime in Virginia. The death sentence was reported as her difficulty to become public executioner, and, known as Lady Betty, she lived among the tribes for five years. She officiated on the scaffold without any mask or disguise and dogged criminals through the streets with vigor.

He is before us in his whole career, in his loves and hates, from youth to later manhood. He labors in the mills. He fights for wealth. He struggles for place, battling against other men and his own soul's weakness. He marries. He suffers and sins, but never cringes. And he emerges in the end chastened, strengthened and ennobled, but not unscarred. He realizes something of his great visions, and with the woman who has been a part of his dreams finds peace and happiness at last.

THE FIRST TEACUPS.

They Had No Handles, and Saucers Were Used as Covers.

In the middle of the seventeenth century tea was introduced into England and with it came the Chinese or "chi na" teacup. Strangely enough, the tea was imported from the orient but did not themselves understand the method of its use.

The Chinese put a pinch of tea into a large cup without a handle, filled it with boiling water and then inverted a saucer over the receptacle, within whose rim it closely fitted. The object was partly to retain the best, but chiefly to prevent the escape of the fragrance of the tea, which the Chinese found most delicious. The infusion was permitted to stand for five minutes, when it was decanted into a second cup without a saucer and daintily sipped.

Into this Chinese conception of tea drinking the English introduced a fashion. He liked the appearance of the ceremonial wares upon the table, but he insisted on placing the cup in the saucer, like a miniature flowerpot, and used it exclusively to drink from, preferring the beverage in a common mug of an inferior quality.

In course of time England began the manufacture of cups and saucers, and patterns which have been preserved from the days of the Stuarts show the Chinese cups, both inclosed in cups with saucers less than three inches in diameter. By degrees one dwindled and the other expanded, until in the middle of the nineteenth century the opposite extreme was reached, and fashionable tea services had cups only an inch and a half in diameter, accompanied by five inch saucers.

The handle of the teacup came from Mediterranean lands. Originally it was made of thick and strong earthenware and applied to heavy jars and lamps. Its decorative possibilities popularized it with Greek and Roman potters, who extended its use to small amphoras and finally, as the word "amphora" indicates, the handle was double. Single handles crept into use by now degrees and were probably applied to drinking cups about the time that coffee came into vogue in southern Europe, the beverage being taken almost at the boiling point, so that a device for lifting the cup without burning the fingers was found desirable.—London Tatler.

SECRET OF THE PARIS HAT.

The Magic but Deadly Needle That Hails Its Spirit.

An American milliner seeking to learn what it is that makes the Paris hat so bewitching sought work in Paris and found it easily enough in one of the largest exporting houses, a name to conjure with. One afternoon saw her seated upon a bench with her companions who radiated her and sparkle on every side of her. Soft fingers flew with chattering tongues, confusing her by the dazzling creations coaxed into being with breathless haste.

When night came the loneliness she dreaded did not come, as filled was her solitude by thoughts of all she had seen and heard, and she lay down with her brain work to digest all the wonders. Would she ever be able to stand for five minutes, when it was decreed into a second cup without a saucer and dainty sipped.

Into this Chinese conception of tea drinking the English introduced a fashion. He liked the appearance of the ceremonial wares upon the table, but he insisted on placing the cup in the saucer, like a miniature flowerpot, and used it exclusively to drink from, preferring the beverage in a common mug of an inferior quality.

In course of time England began the manufacture of cups and saucers, and patterns which have been preserved from the days of the Stuarts show the Chinese cups, both inclosed in cups with saucers less than three inches in diameter. CLAY'S FIRST SPEECH.

It Began In Confusion, but Ended in a Brilliant Triumph.

Henry Clay as a young man was at twenty years of age a remarkable specimen of uncommon brightness of intellect and fascinating address, without offending the little he knew was for men more than twice his age. In the part of his career he settled in Lexington, Va., where he found the society most congenial, though the clients were somewhat recalcitrant to the young lawyer. He tried a debating society at length, but for several mornings he remained a silent listener.

One evening after a lengthy debate the subject was being put to a vote, when Clay was heard to observe softly to a friend that the matter in question was by no means exhausted. He was at once asked to speak and after some hesitation rose to his feet. Finding himself thus unexpectedly confronted by an audience, he was covered with confusion and began, as he had frequently done, in imaginary speech to the court, "Gentlemen of the jury."

A titter that ran through the audience only served to heighten his embarrassment, and the disastrous phrase fell from his lips again. Then he gathered himself together and launched into a harangue so brilliantly bold and impassioned that it carried the house by storm and told the cornerstone to his future greatness, his free, easy coming to him as a result of this speech, which some consider the finest he ever made.

TIME IN PALESTINE.

It Is So Erratic That Making a Train Is Quite a Feat.

In Jerusalem form time and train time are different. Forty minutes difference, not both are reliable. Train officials say the train leaves for Jaffa at 6:30 o'clock in the morning, but don't crack to be there in time to 7:30 o'clock by town time. One morning when we were starting for Egypt we ordered our carriage for 7 o'clock. Arriving at the station at 7 o'clock, we found the train gone and the station empty. At last we noticed our coachman.

"Where is the train?" we demanded.

"Gone, monsieur."

"Gone! You've changed the hour of the train, then?"

"Non, monsieur. The train leaves at the same hour always, but the time has changed. Yesterday the train leaving at time was 7:20 o'clock town time. Today 5:40 o'clock train time is 7 o'clock town time. Yesterday the train stopped intermediately—the train always stops at the same hour; our train is never change—it is the time that changes itself, and the train moves accordingly."

"Do the steamers arrive in Jaffa," we directed. "Almost never. Cancel passage on boat for Egypt. Wire date of next sailing for Port Said." This was turned into flowery Turkish and sent, in only ninety words.

"Plenty of time. Your boat will wait till tomorrow afternoon. Be sure wire is so rough the owner had her passengers and carry today. Plenty of time if you take the train tomorrow."—Atlantic Monthly.

Impudent Thieves.

The lepers of Mexico is reported to be one of the remarkable and most impudent thieves in the world. Brazia Mayer tells of an English traveler, who, within an hour or two, in the principal streets of Mexico, had first his hat looked from his head by a line from an upper window, and was then accosted by three lepers, who divested him of his coat. The three made him a bow and within a few minutes one returned and handed him a pawn ticket.

"We wanted $20, not the coat," he explained. "Here is the money, and—such you can redeem it for that sum."—London Mail.

DO YOU USE FACE POWDER?

If You Do Be Careful to Keep It From Getting In Your Eyes.

Face powder has the features the same as gunpowder. For several years occasional cases have come to the notice of oculists in which a little powder has lodged in the lachrymal ducts, leading to the eyes for any length of time and severe inflammation of the lids. These cases have frequently sometimes a scarred condition of the eyes by only conjunctivitis the lining. In severe cases the lids are frequently swollen and inflamed, and if there is a discharge, elastic secretion which, when removed, pulls out in long strings.

Microscopic examination of the secretion shows a number of white spots or epithelial cells. Dull recently no satisfactory explanation of the reason why the lachrymal ducts of the eye are based action. Secretions taken from the eyes of such patients have been found to be quite contagious were submitted to the microscopic examination of one of the prominent medical schools, who found that the epithelial cells came from face powder. Powder is a dentia in which no some sensations and microscopic medium were found at all and have no use.

When the powder is applied to the face it rises off a part of the fine dust is driven forward and lodges on the conjunctiva of the eyes. The presence of the tears then becomes conjunctivous is excessive and is not washed from under the eyelids. The powder produces the irritation, which is aggravated by rubbing. Those who use a chamois skin in applying the powder should be careful to clean the fine dust to stay, which probably accounts for the condition not being seen in every person using face powder. The condition is quickly relieved by bathing the eye with boric acid solution. The irritation rapidly disappears when the eyes are kept washed with a weak solution, one week.—From Journal of the American Medical Association.

Ancient Cloisonne enamels.

The ancient artists who made those beautiful cloisonne enamels which bring such high prices made them by the following laborious method: The outline of the design to be executed in enamel were cut out in the metal plate in such a manner that between the limits of the colors in the enamel a narrow metal ridge was left visible. The space within the outlines was worked out with the engraving tool, the surface left standing being made as rough as possible. In the hollows the artist then put a thick paste with large color of ox water, and placed also fused fast in the metal, the process being frequently repeated. Finally the surface was ground and polished.

Grass.

"Really, Louise, this bill is outrageous. You must not go so dress extravagantly."

"My dear Ned, control yourself. I am only trying to appear as well dressed as the sheepgirls."

OUR BATTLESHIP MASTS.

Perilous Perches For Range Finders Strapped to Their Tops.

A smudge of smoke on the horizon, then two skeleton towers of steel lattice work pierce the sky like a battleship! A United States battleship!

Why? Because United States battleships are the only ones that have masts of lattice work, towers whose that look as if they were meant to train crimson rubber roses and a trellised or more tight high.

Fighting tops are obsolete in the United States navy. The men who do carry the masts at the top of the ship, usually are married. Their sole usefulness to the ship consists in finding the range for the gunners down below.

The towers are made of the latticed steel so they will remain upright although riddled with shots from a rifle. Shells may not pass through the network of tubing until every bound is secured and still the tower will stand.

The old stays steel masts with a single support could be cut in two and not crashing to the deck would fall from the enemy's gun. The new masts are used as wireless towers and for searchlights and signal platforms as well as for range finders.

The range finders, usually three men, rear cross bats around themselves in order to keep from falling off. Sometimes they are allowed to some sudden lurch. Top of the "mastodonic" mast is like the lower end of a cool pendulum when it comes to swaying. The ship may be rolling four or five feet to the mast six or a dozen feet.

When the gunner sits three below the gunners sets the steel tubes vibrating like a suspension bridge with a crowd crossing. Sometimes the vibration is so strong that the range finders can't work. Then the guns are silent for a minute.—Kansas City Star.

The Alexandrian Library.

There were two great libraries in Alexandria, the one in Brucheion and that in the Serapeion, the former containing 400,000 and the latter 300,000 volumes of rolls. The Brucheion library was accidentally destroyed by Julius Caesar when he burned the shipping fired in the harbor B. C. 48. The Serapeion library was destroyed as described by an edict of Theodosius, 391 A. D. 640, ordered the destruction of all the books in the Alexandria library, with the statement that if they agreed with the Koran they were useless, and that if they disagreed with it they were pernicious," and followed by many high authorities with suspicion.

The Genevieves I Know

By Helen Help

THE JAMES WHO HAMPERED HIMSELF.

James was a prominent citizen. He had been a prominent citizen for a considerable number of years, having risen to that proud eminence by his own exertions.

This was perfectly true and very beautiful. James said so himself. And if James didn't know about it, who did, I should like to know?

Genevieve had started out a sweet little thing with blue eyes. She was still little, but had ceased to be sweet. That is, the outward and visible signs of sweetness had, as it were, moved forward into the everlasting whence, or perhaps, been dropped on the road back into yesterday. Yes, that is it. They were lost on the road to yesterday.

The road to yesterday accumulates quite a lot of lost junk like that. In this case it had not only all visible traffic on the part of Genevieve to be considered a sweet little thing, but it had the light of her blue eyes when she looked at James, and in the song in her gentle heart when she thought of James, and even the pride she used to thrill with when James first began to be a prominent citizen.

At first when they were married, James used to tell Genevieve how hard he meant to work and how high he meant to rise. And Genevieve, looking in his gray eyes of him felt sure he would succeed and was so glad about it. If she had looked also at the thin lips of James' mouth which strongly resembled a steel trap to a thirsty power of observation, and also to the fact that it had no lips whatever, maybe she might have noticed a bit, but that James would rise high—may say. But just how far she herself might accompany him on his upward shoe. But, being very much in love with James, and being a sweet little thing, she never noticed.

James did not go into politics. He had the gravest doubts as to the stability of our institutions unless bolstered up by a sound financial policy and supported by our money people. He famed with Morgan, Rockefeller, Weyl and became, after a considerable period, one of our Steel Magnates. This is quite laudable enough for all practical purposes, because we have a great many steel magnates, the entire country, west of Pittsburgh, being full of them. And it is also true, in that case, he could without an a, otherwise.

Well, James became a magnate. He acquired, by earnest and honest labor, certain valuable properties, and he achieved, in terms of equality with millionaire owners, and in the course of time, with multimillionaire proprietors.

Where was Genevieve. Well, Genevieve was at home. James could not take her to directors' meetings, could he? No indeed, he could not, you know. And besides Genevieve could not understand what they were talking about. And if she could, it mightn't be so very good for her.

As I stated, James began by telling Genevieve how high he meant to climb. It was the thing he used to say. "I can see just how this and that and the other thing ought to be engineered." And the perfectly strange thing was that it was true. He had.

And Genevieve would say, "I know you can, James, and I am just as sure as can be that some day you will do it. Just what you want." And that was true, too. He did.

Then, after a while, James would say, "Genevieve, I am called out to a meeting tonight—don't wait up for me."

And then "Genevieve, I am going to New York this afternoon—pack my grip because I will not have time to come home before train time."

And then, after a time, he would simply call up over the phone and say he'd send a boy for his things. And then he didn't do even that. He just sent the boy.

Genevieve and James had been married very snippy. Their first home was very simple. And, engrossed as James was in the business affairs of a prominent citizen, it remained so. He traveled a great deal and sometimes he was in the business department at all and her home looked pretty good enough to her.

But, in the course of time, James acquired enough money to be interested, in, I mean cities where he met other prominent patriots—or near-patriots. It was worth say to his wife, "This man from the West is coming and he is important. Better have him to dinner." Hence, James, being observant—as he had to be in his business—got a dress suit and manners to match. He learned all about that fork to use, and vinegar wines. And Genevieve didn't know the difference between a vintage wine and sweet cider and a fork reached the height of her social development when she put on an extra fork for the custard pie. Both their fathers ate their pie with a knife and were not ashamed.

But one day James woke up to the fact that their house really would not do.

"Genevieve," he said, "we must have a proper place. I will see the architect about it and I think that out on the avenue on a lot I bought there some time since would be about the proper place."

Genevieve has felt so lost and left out and forgotten that she cheered up amazingly at this intelligence—till she noticed that she is moving out of her old neighborhood and so far away from the First Baptist church, of which she has been a member all her life.

That seems almost too much, but she comforts herself with the thought that now she will sometimes see James about the new house. She having had no children, and being merely a sweet little thing with blue eyes, has failed in all these years to build up much of a sense of her own importance in the scheme of things. So she says, "The house is very pretty, James" and creeps into her sorrowful rooms, that an upholsterer has planned for her, as lost as a little gray mouse in a feather bed.

James had about forgotten Genevieve in the grand house. In the new house—which was a peach—he began to be ashamed of her. And when everything was perfect, the palace complete to its last frill and bit of elegance, and they gave the housewarming, he actually blushed.

James had invited several of his friends from the East to stay in the house. They stuck off Sunday and they moved and their wives were Paris gowns. To save her life Genevieve couldn't keep from showing how scared she was. And they, looking at what was left of the sweet little thing with blue eyes whom their associate had led to the altar in a rite taken moment of early youth, whispered among themselves, "What a pity Jim should hamper himself with such a woman."

And, being a prominent citizen, awake to all that was for his own best interests on that climb of his to the heights, in time James took their view of the situation. And when he did, with his famous business promptitude, James ceased to hamper himself.

Genevieve has all that heart can wish and is amply provided for. And dear, fat, jolly little cupids are lifting all about the Genevieve's house, who is shortly to espouse the lovely daughter of one of our most prominent families.

MOUND OVER MARATHON DEAD

Place of Sepulcher of Brave Athenians Has Been Better Beyond All Dispute.

A great Grecian landmark is the Soros, the mound erected over the graves of 192 Athenians who fell in the battle of Marathon, August 12, 490 B. C. The mound is about forty feet high and 300 yards in circumference. Underneath the tombs the heroes who died in this most decisive victory which prevented the Persians from invading Europe.

The battle had hardly begun when the Persians in immensely superior force, doubtless ten to one, pulled themselves together and by sheer mass broke through the Greek center. But this had been calculated upon beforehand. Miltiades employed strategy, making his line weak at the center, and allowed the Persians to break it. Then with its heavy masses at the ends he ground the Persian wings to pieces and fell upon their rear. The most stubborn fighting apart from the battle itself was at the Soros. At this spot, half a mile from the shore, fly thousand Persians had fortified themselves in a little grove and stubbornly held out against the victorious Greeks, who finally had to burn them out. Of the 192 men of Marathon lay wrapped in glory on the field.

It was long suspected that the heroes of Marathon were buried under the mound; but Mr. Stais, one of the Greek school of antiquities, studying the plain, came to the conclusion that the surface of the soil had been raised by alluvial deposits eight or ten feet above the level of 490 B. C. In 1890 he drove a trench with a drawn sword into the center of the mound, and found the bones of the heroes with their weapons beside them.

Bushes Not Loaded With Money.

"The away-from-home American sometimes gives a too glowing impression of the quantity of money to be found in this country," said the manager of an employment agency. "A case in point is a young man who came to me in the early days from Panama, and arrived in America with the idea of getting rich in a year or two. Now all the money is gone, and any kind of work would have to be done by him to Panama he saw Americans who were employed on the canal, have thrown their heavy right ball. He thought that a fair example of how things would be in New York and never woke up from his dream until he got here and were out a good deal of the bubble he had blown up with big wages."

Time to Scurry.

"Clear the floor," shouted the dancing master.

"What's going to happen?" asked a visitor.

"A couple whose combined weight is 450 pounds are getting to do some of the latest glides."

A Lax Age.

"You say Dobbs is an old-fashioned man?"

"Yes. He thinks the days gone by when there wasn't much talk about sex, control and efficiency."

Cape for the School Girl

THE simplest of wraps both for children and grownups happens to be the strongest feature of the new fall styles. This is the cape. It was inconceivable that it should be developed to so many variations of shape and combinations with other garments until the fact was apparent. Now we have long plain capes covering the figure, half length and three-quarter length capes (some of them in combination with other wraps and nearly always detachable), and others that are short and used as a touch of style on coats. So that the cape may be accented and used in any way the individual chooses.

A pretty cape for a school girl is shown in the picture. Such a simple garment is easily made at home, and nothing could be better for the cool days of autumn and the long Indian summer. This cape is made of a rather heavy woolen fabric in a fancy weave which looks like a wide wale cheviot. Any of the standard woolens are appropriate for these capes, and we shall see them in serge, broadcloth, cheviot, Scotch mixture, homespun and various novelty weaves. The collar is of velvet and is finished with two tassels.

Tires at Before-War Prices

Goodyear Prices
It is Folly Today to Pay More

30 x 3 Plain Tread	$11.70
30 x 3½ " "	15.75
34 x 4 " "	24.35
36 x 4½ " "	35.00
37 x 5 " "	41.95

There exists now a new, compelling reason for buying Goodyear tires. It results from War conditions.

These leading tires—built of extra-fine rubber, in the same way as always—are selling today at June prices.

You will find today a very wide difference between most tire prices and Goodyears.

Due to Quick Action

Early in August—when war began—the world's rubber markets seemed closed to us. Rubber prices doubled almost over night.

Men could see no way to pay for rubber abroad, and no way to bring it in. We, like others—in that panic—were forced to higher prices. But we have since gone back to prices we charged before the war, and this is how we did it.

We had men in London and Singapore when the war broke out. The larger part of the world's rubber supply comes through there. We cabled them to buy up the pick of the rubber. They bought—before the advance—1,500,000 pounds of the finest rubber there.

Nearly all this is now on the way to us. And it insures practically all of the extra-grade rubber obtainable abroad.

Today we have our own men in Colombo, Singapore and Para. Those are the world's chief sources of rubber. So we are pretty well assured of a constant supply, and our pick of the best that's produced.

We were first on the ground. We were quickest in action. As a result, we shall soon have in storage an almost record supply of this extra grade of rubber.

And we pad about June prices.

Now Inferior Grades Cost Double

About the only crude rubber available now for many makers is inferior. In ordinary times, the best tire makers refuse it. Much of it had been rejected. But that "off rubber" now sells for much more than we paid for the best.

The results are these:

Tire prices in general are far in advance of Goodyears. And many tire makers, short of supplies, will be forced to use second-grade rubber.

Be Careful Now

In Goodyears we pledge you the same grade tire as always. And that grade won for Goodyears the top place in Tiredom—the largest sale in the world.

And, for the time being, our prices are the same as before the war. We shall try to keep them there.

We accept no excessive orders, but dealers will be kept supplied. And we charge them, until further notice, only ante-bellum prices.

That means that Goodyears—the best tires built—are selling way below other tires.

AIRSHIPS AND SUBMARINES WASPS OF WAR

Both Are Getting Their First Real Test in This Conflict in Europe.

MAY FIGHT ONE ANOTHER

Each Invention Now Is Prepared to Pull the Other's Sting, but Their Actual Value Is Yet to Be Determined.

Every modern war has been fought with new weapons, and for the last century there have been countless inventions for the carrying on of warfare in a particularly destructive manner, with the hope that perhaps this war was fast becoming so horrible and terrible that it must soon put an end to war. This is the idea, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Unfortunately, however, as soon as a particularly horrible contrivance was invented and introduced into warfare and naval inventors immediately busied themselves by effecting an antidote to its probable effect. Consequently war not only has not passed away, but we still have it with us. Thus it is that each big war, after being heralded as the world's last conflagration, is found upon examination to be false, and the end of war is not yet arrived.

Trying Out Inventions.

In the present war in Europe there are being tried under the conditions of actual hostilities many improvements and inventions that previously have been tried only under laboratory conditions. Their real worth still only be discovered at the close of the conflict.

No army or navy engaged in the present conflict in Europe but what is possessed of nearly all of the modern improvements made since 1870. The perfection of workmanship. Thrust through the centuries from hand to hand a coronet of the daintiest of leathers, known as the Numidi, furnishes the finest leather for the seamy of the shoe.

The third hat is a straw shape faced with chiffon to blend. If the latest movement toward wider brims and picturesque shapes be returning one side of a spray of autumn flowers, posed in the bandeau and spurned below at the left side, and a similar spray at the right. The chrysanthemum and the hydrangea or small fruits, with foliage, may be selected for this model.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Putting On, Taking Off.

Do not forget the old rules for putting on and taking off gloves. When putting them on, do not try to get the whole glove on at once, but first work on the fingers, taking care to have the seams exactly even and to gently draw the glove over the hand and then put in the thumb, but keep the fingers in their places, and then the center. Remember that a glove once put on wrong can never be worn with the right shape again, so it is well to take the little care at the start.

One of the features of the season is the use of velvet in millinery today. Sometimes this touch is in the form of black velvet.

WASTE LAND MADE FERTILE

Remarkable Results Have Followed Experiments Only Recently Undertaken.

As an indication of the ultimate outcome in the great delta of Egypt, where 1,500,000 acres of wash salt land awaits fertilement, toward the end of 1912 about 800 acres of absolutely sterile land at Malk were taken in hand. The land was so heavily impregnated with salt that for agro-soil-building had grown in it. A scientific system of drainage and irrigation was carried out, under direction of Lord Kitchener, at a cost of $60 an acre, and it was then handed over to the fellahen in five-acre plots for cultivation. Last year this land was tested, and a crop of rice was grown, giving a satisfactory return. After the first year the salt distribution was measured, and the percentage was considerably reduced. The great establishment of the fellahen cultivators, a permanent result had been achieved in one year.

DEFINITE PURPOSE IN LIFE

Something That Should be Adopted by Every Woman Who Has Place in the Business World.

It is a fact that many women have no definite desire to get anywhere in the world they are doing. They consider their job as the least important thing in their lives and rarely have a plan tending toward ultimate expansion and a time when they can feel

AEROPLANE STABILIZER INVENTED AT LAST

STABILIZER SHOWN UP LONGER FOREGROUND

LAWRENCE SPERRY, SON OF THE INVENTOR

EXPERIMENTING WITH ANOTHER MODEL OF STABILIZER

LAWRENCE SPERRY of New York city has given aviation a new start. Inasmuch as he has provided a way to rob it of some of its insidious perils. His apparatus is an automatic stabilizer, which maintains the equilibrium of the flying machine no matter how fickle may be the condition of the air slot. Don't let this term stabilizer puzzle you a bit; you can best as well substitute the more familiar word "balancer."

If you happen to have access to a list of aeronautical accidents during the last two years, especially where the heavier-than-air flying machine is concerned, you will find that the majority of the catastrophes have been attributed to "loss of control." Loss of control is merely another way of saying that the air pilot was caught napping or taken suddenly unaware, and before he could apply the usual remedies to right his machine the air craft was dashing earthward and utterly beyond human arrest. Perhaps it was a sudden gust of wind, the sweep of a cross current, or even an "air hole" that started the upsetting of the machine, which ended in disaster. The outcome is not difficult to explain. If one half realizes the situation.

The aviator, when once afloat aloft, has a last pretty much akin to that of the shackbrained fortune-hunter. He has real from side to side or up lengthwise with the utmost ease, especially if the supporting cloth underneath that weight and of the racing type. From the moment the pilot takes the seat, if he wishes to avoid accidents he has to juggle continually with his wings or ailerons to prevent too much lateral rolling, and to a lesser degree, he has to manipulate the tailpieces to check any pitching or lunging on the part of the head of the machine. The lateral control he exercises by shoving his body sidewise against an extension yoke, and the longitudinal correction he applies by means of a lever which he either pushes away from him or draws toward his chest. Perhaps, by the time the skilled airman does this more or less involuntarily, depending on the motion of the craft. Unhappily, however, his corrective efforts are relatively sluggish, and they are applied only after the movement has obtained a considerable angle of heel or chuck.

It is perfectly plain that the aviator, at best, when depending upon his own initiative, has precisely no chance if a gusty wind, which can maintain its poise steadily even though the wind be fitful and the change of direction tremendous. Apparently, the bird does this without rocking violently in its endeavor to hold itself balanced, but simply because the eye cannot trace the sweep of its wing-tips, we do not see how it keep itself poised. Mr. Sperry, by his stabilizer, has made this secret of natural flight clear to us. The bird is sensitive to the disconcerting disturbing currents and instinctively acts to offset it. By catching the upsetting force in its wing-surfaces, it has the ready facility of the wing-tips to necessary to meet the contingency. In other words, the bird instinctively uses the wind to get the upper hand of it—it meets the approaching menace, so to speak, with a counter menace. The tip of the bird wave as relatively insensitive as the aviator, the changes of wind are gusty and currents would be a great danger to it that they do to the pilot.

Mr. Sperry has substantially engaged all this by his gyroscope stabilizing apparatus, and how successfully he has achieved it he will prove to the winning the $10,000 prize offered by the French aviation commission. There were 57 competitors entered in that contest of aeroplane safety devices, and the American victory is one to which we should take a good deal of pride. By that success aviation already acquires a new element of practicability, and the flying machine will have far wider fields of daily usefulness open to it. We are now within reach of that state of the art where flying will be as safe as parachute, the air pilot will have little more to do than simply to steer his machine to right or left, up and down, as he may desire—the stabilizer will keep him from upsetting and will even check his flight in the direction toward the hazardous in some wilful movement.

Now a gyroscope will ordinarily react against the external disturbing force, no matter in what direction it may attempt to deflect it. How then does Mr. Sperry make use of the gyroscope in stabilizing the aeroplane, and, especially, how does he produce the automatic effect, so that the machine the air craft was dashing earthward and utterly beyond human arrest. Perhaps it was a sudden gust of wind, the sweep of a cross current, or even an "air hole" that started the upsetting of the machine, which ended in disaster. The outcome is not difficult to explain if

ECCENTRIC CHESTERTON.

He Doesn't Mind How He Dresses, and His Wife Is His Guardian.

There is one English author at least who seems quite frankly that he is practically a cipher on his side, and that is big G. K. Chesterton. Like most geniuses—and G. K. C. is generally admitted to be one—Chesterton is too much absorbed in the details of his creative work to bother much with mere business and social ones, and how many of his commissions would be executed and how many of his appointments kept if it were not for Mrs. C. goodness only knows. He acts as his business conscience and goes with him on almost every journey.

It is on record, however, that once when Chesterton had a journey to make visitors arrived, and Mrs. Chesterton, being called upon to play the part of hostess, was unable to accompany her husband. However, she started him off with the words, "Now, Gilbert, you know where you are to lecture and what your subject is," and Chesterton went to the railway station. Arriving there, he begged down a message at the booking office and said, "A ticket."

"Where for?" asked the astonished clerk.

"Free Trade hall," replied Chesterton.

"Oh, Glasgow, then!" said the clerk and Gilbert, assenting, received a ticket for that station.

Hopping into the street at Glasgow, he was hailed by a friend: "Hullo, Chesterton! What are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm lecturing at the Free Trade hall."

"Oh, no, you're not," said the friend.

"Oh, yes, I am," protested Chesterton. "I booked the engagement some months ago."

"But you cannot be," maintained the friend, "for the place is being renovated and the painters are in."

It slowly dawned upon Chesterton that he was at the wrong place, and he, further to justify his claim to greatness, sent a telegram to his wife: "I am here. Where ought I to be?"

Even Mrs. Chesterton, however, apparently cannot always prevent the feat of having her errand husband consigned according to Hoyle. I remember quite vividly a soiree which I once attended at the Chesterton flat in Overstrand Mansions, Battersea, and quite much vividly now G. K. C. was dressed. Part of his costume consisted of trousers and waistcoat of a brown mixture and a dark red tie, and with these he wore—it is almost incredible, yet true—a dinner coat! He was in great form that evening and had an audience well drilled and entertained. I don't suppose he had the faintest idea what he had on!—Harry de Windt, in Philadelphia Ledger.

An Embarrassing Moment.

"There are moments when a man would sooner be any place than where he is.

Take the case of the young man who was talking with an heiress who was write-sick with fine fiction.

"When she pointed out the most conducive to laughter, Mr. Gibbon, with money to burn," she said, "what would he say?

"He would say, in plain at the lawn permits between us."

If the young man said "bosh" they lady would be offended. If he said "bosh" she might consider it a proposal.

Then he relied.

"It might happen," he said, "it rain or not be quoted." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

TRUE CULTURE.

Culture means full development. If a man's intellect be continually enlarged by study and thought and his heart remain indifferent and unfilled he is still a boor in the highest reaches of his nature. Culture means the perfect and equal development of man on all sides.

ELBA AND ST. HELENA.

Napoleon's Comic Opera Empire and His Grim Island Prison.

An "empire" eighteen miles in length and twelve miles in extreme width, such is the Mediterranean isle of Elba, to which Napoleon was consigned by the victorious allies and where he received the homage of his new subjects. Elba, long a place of pilgrimage for tourists from all nations, lives chiefly in the memories of that ten months of comic opera, when the man who had all but mastered Europe aped his vanished royalty and, like a child with a new toy, instead foolish decrees which bored "Napoleon, emperor, sovereign of Elba, to his people."

Utterly devoid of a sense of humor the emperor must have been to take his new position so seriously. It was a huge joke that the powers piqued upon the Corsican by permitting him to retain the title of emperor and awarding him a "kingdom" that placed him on the same footing with the sultan of Zulu and the king of the Cannibal Isles.

If Napoleon had remained there he would doubtless have become what his enemies intended he should become—an object of derision, the butt of the world's sneers and jeers. But he did not stay, and the story of the "hundred days," the brave carnage of Waterloo, the exhilarating tragedy of St. Helena restored Napoleon to a place among the world's heroes.

St. Helena was grim and terrible. There humanity pictures Napoleon "with his hands crossed behind him, gazing out upon the sad and solemn ocean in casual ken, fenced by all the world. Elba was trifling, pitiful, petty, insignificant, and there Napoleon was a caged monkey to be laughed at. —New York World.

A Caustic Critic.

The Paris critic knows one only had taken his chocolate in a place other than the Cafe Foy, and he then found it not good. This happened at the Beaulieu, and the young woman at the desk, to whom he returned his displeasure, said: "You are the only one who has spoken to us of the quality of the court who come here and it goes!

"They also say, perhaps, that you are pretty," he replied slowly.

How to Win Beauty.

Full of good advice comes in the supposition in the Journal of the American Medical association that one has to be beautiful, giving the face a good color." The expert says, "Get one pot of rouge and one satchel's food. Hang them two miles from home and walk out and back once a day to see if they are still there."

The Least Hope.

"Ah," he sighed, "if you only gave me the least hope!"

"Gracious," interrupted the hard hearted lady, "I've been giving you the least I ever gave to any man!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

East Jordan Enterprise—As an example of the unreliability of public opinion and its rank injustice, we would cite the case of Louie Galinsky. Several months ago a fresh deputy prosecuting attorney dropped down on Boyne City, and arrested Galinsky, a hack jobber in fresh meats, charging him with selling "hog cholera" pork to a local market man. All once public opinion damned Galinsky and he was pilloried by the state press, and local opinion would have almost justified lynching. His trial came off this week and the jury find him "not guilty." There are several lessons in this incident, but the most vital one is its showing the absolute unreliability and viciousness of public opinion. Public opinion has changed not a little but for the better since it was crying "Release us to barabbas" the robber, and at the same breath, referring to Christ, clamoring "Crucify Him!"

A BRIDE FROM THE TOMB.

Odd Romance of Benedetto Marcello, the Venetian Composer.

Benedetto Marcello, one of the most famous Venetian composers, fell in love with a beautiful girl named Leonora Manfredi, who married Paolo Tiepolo, a Venetian noble. She died a short time after her marriage, a victim to the harsh and jealous treatment of her husband.

Her body was laid out in state in one of the churches, and her lover actually succeeded in stealing the corpse and converting it to a veiled crypt in one of the islands near Venice. He spent night by the lost love, singing and playing to her, as though by the force of his art he could recall her to life.

Leonora had a twin sister, Elisabetta, who was so like her that her closest friends could scarcely distinguish them. One day Elisabetta heard a singer in a gondola singing so exquisitely that she traced the gondola to the deserted island, and there she learned later the fate of her sister's corpse and the identity of Marcello. Aided by a servant, Elisabetta substituted herself for her sister's body, and when Marcello returned and called Leonora to awake he did not ask in vain, for apparently she rose alive from the coffin. Marcello whom he found out the delusion was quite satisfied and married Elisabetta, but his happiness was short lived, as he died a few years afterward.—London Tit-Bits.

Damp Room Test.

To ascertain whether a room is damp or not place a wetted quantity of fresh lime in an open vessel in the room and leave it there for twenty four hours, carefully closing the windows and doors. At the end of the twenty-four hours weigh the lime, and if the increase exceeds 1 per cent of the original weight it is not safe to live in the room.

The Atmosphere.

Up to twenty years ago it was usual to estimate that our atmosphere was not forty miles deep. Its depth is now put at from 187 to 216 miles. Its thickness is judged by the incandescence of meteors.

Boyne City Special— A new idea along development lines is being worked out here. It is in the nature of an affiliation. So far as is known, the Boyne City bee is the first in the state. Forty acres of land about five miles out of the village was selected, and then a date announced for the bee. Arrangements were made to have the teams and men who were able put now because of a hill in the lumber business, team to the forty and the load plowed and sown to alfalfa in a single day. Business and professional men also took part. It is believed by the Boyne City people that a forty acre alfalfa field will be a splendid advertisement for the region and that it will be something that every farmer into the section will go out of his way to see.

HIS RECORD OF ACCOMPLISHMENT

Few Governors of Michigan or any other state have more genuinely constructive and beneficial legislation to their credit than Chase S. Osborn. Here is a partial list of his work while governor. Is there a single act that you as a citizen would want expunged? Is there a single act that any politician of any party in the state would dare ask to have repealed?

As State Game Warden

He secured the first laws giving adequate protection to the wild life in Michigan, and the first rigid enforcement of those laws.

As State Game Warden

(1) He secured the first proper and complete taxation of railroads, which had previously been undertaxed.

(2) He stood inflexibly for grade separation for all railroads.

(3) He first secured the reduction of fares from the three cents to two and a half and two cents per mile.

As Governor of Michigan

(1) More efficient and economical administration of the state government, particularly great economy in the management of the state institutions, and a low tax rate.

(2) A high standard of efficiency in all the state departments, due to his invariable appointment of men who were equipped for their duties rather than men who had rendered him some political service.

(3) Laws that made the taxation system of the state more equitable and more just.

(4) An employers' liability and workmen's compensation law, the best of its kind in the country.

(5) A presidential primary law, opposed by political bosses and machine leaders, but passed at the instance of Governor Osborn in response to a widespread popular demand.

(6) A law prohibiting the ownership of automobiles by bosses, the greatest victory ever won over the corrupt liquor interests, whose political domination had long been the shame of the state.

(7) A concurrent resolution submitted to the people the question of permitting women to vote.

In addition he recommended the legislature laws providing for the initiative and referendum, and the recall. The initiative and referendum were established two years after the recommendation.

"CHELSEA 7750"

Henry E. Dixey, the famous "festival-mate" star, one of the foremost favorites of the musical stage, distinguishes "Chelsea 7750" by his convincing characterization of an eminent, shiv and unconscious detective.

The play sounds every depth of the underworld, discloses its secrets, its methods and motives, and penetrates the intricate labyrinths of the submerged half. In a relentless pursuit of a trained and resourceful gang of confederates, which later develops into an intense mental and physical contest, with many impending difficulties and heart-breaking disappointments, but which eventually culminates in a complete and decisive victory, Mr. Dixey is provided with one of the strongest parts which in all his memorable and extended career he has ever portrayed. Startling revelations, ingenious machinations and surprising climaxes repeat the thrilling succession; and through it all the mystery and fascination of the world that lives under cover. At the Majestic Saturday evening, Sept. 26th.

METHODIST CONFERENCE APPOINTMENTS

In the assignment of Methodist pastors for the district Charlevoix gets Rev. Quinton Walker again.

Norwood gets Rood; East Jordan gets Bennett; Boyne City gets Duffey.

All re-appointments.

County Normal Notes

WARD GENETT

The County Normal opened Monday, September 14, with a membership of twelve.

Miss Caroline Miller was a visitor in the County Normal last week.

Bessie Alles taught Commercial Correspondence, Commercial Arithmetic Book-Keeping, and Pen Gregory taught Penmanship two days last week on account of the illness of Miss Lomas.

The picture and pennant presented by the class of 1914 are highly appreciated by the 1915 class.

HIGHER DEGREES

Charlevoix Odd Fellows Climb into Higher Sphere of Fraternal Effort

A fraternal event of more than ordinary interest occurred in Charlevoix last Saturday night when Encampment No. 19 I. O. O. F. was duly instituted by Grand Scribe John B. Penfield, acting as Grand Patriarch. Large delegations were present from Petoskey, Boyne City, Cadillac and other points. The Encampment is an advanced grade in the great Order of Odd Fellowship, and corresponds, probably, with the Royal Arch Chapter in Masonry.

A delight banquet was given, and in all respects the event was most notable and enjoyable.

Following is the list of officers:

Chief Patriarch—A. A. Hanshaw
High Priest—A. L. Fitch
Senior Warden—Wm. Higman
Junior Warden—E. F. Vought
Scribe—A. J. Brown
Financial Scribe—F. E. Bettes
Treasurer—Geo. F. E. Wood
Inside Sentinel—C. E. Sherer
Outside Sentinel—R. C. North
Guide—Alex Shenner
First Watch—A. B. Thompson
Second Watch—Roy Ripley
Third Watch—Homer Davis
Fourth Watch—F. A. Butler

The meetings will be held on the first and third Mondays of each month.

STATE SEEKS TO HAVE 1911 FISH ING STATUTE SET ASIDE

The unusual spectacle of the state attorney general in a nonconstitutional is presented in a demurrer filed on behalf of Game Warden Oates in the circuit court of Menominee county by the attorney general's department.

Some time ago Oates, through his deputies, began enforcing the law prohibiting the use of anything smaller than two and a quarter-inch mesh net for the taking of rough fish. He threatened to confiscate a lot of nets in Green Bay, if their use was not discontinued. Richard Kloimake and twenty other commercial fishermen asked for an injunction preventing him from destroying their property, alleging that under a special act of 1911 they could use two-inch mesh, which they were doing.

The attorney general contends an injunction should not be issued, as it would merely restrain a public official from performing his duties, and in addition says that the act of 1911 relied on by the fishermen is local and unconstitutional, as it contains no referendum and applies only to Delta and Menominee.

FAREWELL

Rev. John G. C. Irvine, pastor of the Baptist Church, Charlevoix, has arranged was the occasion of a farewell water church, and goes there in a few days.

It is but a year since the family removed from Dockerville to our city.

We feel sorry to see them go, but it is something we can do only by we must heartily wish them well in the new place they are going to. Pentater is a neighboring town, and is surrounded by splendid farming land. It is in Oceana county and affords many opportunities. Milwaukee, St. Louis, Chicago, etc.

We believe Mr. Irvine will occupy a pulpit here for the last time on Sunday next.

LAST WILD PIGEON

Of the Millions Which Formerly Inhabited U. S. is Dead

That the last survivor of the millions of wild pigeons which years ago inhabited the United States, has just died, was the announcement made by T. Gilbert Pearson, secretary of the National association of Audubon societies.

The vast flocks of these birds, which a generation ago were the ornithological wonder of the world, have entirely disappeared, the last individual died in the Cincinnati zoological garden. It was a female and was hatched in captivity twenty-nine years ago.

"The marks the absolute extinction of another species of North American birds," said Mr. Pearson. "Many theories have been advanced as to the cause of the disappearance of the myriads of pigeons once seen in this country, but there is absolutely only one cause, they have been wiped out by the trap, net and gun of American hunters."

Old timers will remember when the pigeons nested on the north side of Pine Lake in the early 70's. Millions of the birds made their rendezvous in a territory twelve miles long by more than a mile wide and their flights to and from their nesting place darkened the sky. Their noise, as travelers passed along after dark, was nearly deafening.

They were followed here by dozens of pigeon trappers from as far east as the Atlantic coast, and tons of "squabs" were shipped from Petoskey, the G. R. & I. R. R., being built to that point that year.

In Charlevoix the writer from the bluff where the water tower now stands knocked down dozens of them with clubs as they passed over in early mornings, also, hundreds of them were brought down with shot guns and clubs.

VERDICT NOT GUILTY

In Elston Hotel Case People Failed to Make a Case—Jury Returns Verdict of Not Guilty

After being out all the afternoon last Wednesday the jury in the Bismal case brought in a verdict of acquittal.

The case has occupied the work of the court for ten days. Prosecutor Fitch was assisted by Attorney J. M. Harris, while A. B. Nicholas, assisted by A. L. Fitch, represented defendant.

As a bill of big expense to the county the case undoubtedly has the record.

THE NEW STATE CHAIRMAN

Doubtless under the initiative action of Mr. Osborn, the chairman of the republican state central committee has gone to G. M. Dame, of Northport, to succeed Mr. Greenback, who declined reappointment.

Mr. Dame is a product of the Grand Traverse region. If experience counts anything Mr. Dame should be well equipped for the place. He was one of Governor Osborne's cabinet as food inspector for two years, making good always.

He was Mr. Osborn's manager during the recent primary campaign, and results speak for themselves.

The Grand Rapids Herald has this to say about Dame: "Mr. Dame is one of the most aggressive and earnest political workers in Michigan. He has a long record of successful political accomplishments behind him. His choice at this particular time is an excellent one. Not only is it worth while because of his own inherent strength, but also because of the fact that it will bespeak close harmony in the management of the fall campaign between the state central committee and ex-Governor Osborn, who will head the Republican state ticket.

Dame is all right.

ALFRED LUSK FOUND DEAD

Evidently Victim of Train Accident—Body Was Crushed by a Passing Train

Alfred Lusk of Charlevoix, says the Traverse City Record-Eagle was found dead on the Pere Marquette tracks last night near the Boardman River. It is supposed that Lusk was beating his way and from appearances he probably fell from the freight train, upon which it is believed he was riding, and was dragged for some distance. Coroner Minor and Sheriff Smith were summoned and the body was removed to the morgue. An inquest was held Thursday morning.

Lusk, with his brother, Edgar, came here from Charlevoix about three weeks ago. The latter is at present working at the J. C. Morgan plant here. According to his statement, Alfred left here last night in company with a man named McCall, with the intention of beating his way to Charlevoix. It is believed that he took what is known as the stone freight from here, about 8:00 o'clock last night. The train, crew on that run were entirely ignorant of the accident. The body was badly bruised and cut, but showed no evidence of having been under the wheels. A letter addressed to Edgar Lusk was found in the man's pocket.

He was about thirty years old, and leaves besides the parents, three brothers and a sister.

FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

East Jordan Enterprise—On Saturday evening last our city was again visited by the fire fiend, and one building burned to the ground and another precariously.

Fortunately no wind was blowing or the destruction would have been much greater. The fire started up stairs in Roscoe Mackey's livery barn, and though there were men in front below at the time, the fire was not discovered until the whole upper part of the barn was a roaring furnace, fed by 30 tons of hay stored there and after giving the alarm attention was given to getting out the horses and the movable property below, which was safely accomplished. When the Hose Co. arrived nothing could be done except to work to save the adjoining buildings. The residence and warehouse of Harry Hiles just north of the barn, caught fire several times, but the firemen succeeded in saving it, though most of the contents were removed. Across the street the frame store of Geo. Carr and the big French barn were the danger zone, but by close watch neither were damaged. In addition to the hay in the barn Mr. Mackey had that day put in several hundred bushels of oats. How the fire started is a mystery. Mr. Mackey had shortly before had the electric wiring inspected to see that it was safe, and no one was known to have been in the loft at or about the time the blaze must have started. The nearest loss falls on Chas. Gheesing, who lost an excellent building, with stock, tools and machinery something over $8,000,—the savings of a good many years of hard labor, and not a cent of insurance. Mr. Mackey estimates his loss at about the same figure, but he had $1,500.00 insurance.

DEATH OF PIONEER

Dr. Geo. W. Crouter, Early Settler, Dies After Protracted and Painful Illness

Dr. George W. Crouter died at his home in this city at about four o'clock Saturday afternoon, in the 64th year of his life, of Bright's disease and heart failure.

That insidious but sure destroyer began its work on Dr. Crouter several years ago, but the patient made a brave fight to conquer it. All that medical science could devise, together with sojourns in the west and south, failed to arrest the sapping of his vitality. At times during the past spring and summer he rallied, and was on the street or out in his car, but within the past few weeks his decline was rapid.

George W. Crouter was born in Western Canada. He came to Charlevoix in the early 70s, when he had attained his majority. Being a graduate of the Detroit College of Medicine he built the building which stood just east of the Fountain City House. Later he built the structure on the east side of Bridge street, in which the telephone exchange is now located. Adding dentistry to his drug business, for a good many years he successfully practiced that profession.

When the telephone lines entered Charlevoix Dr. Crouter was appointed first manager, a position which he held up to four years ago, turning his dental practice over to Dr. J. A. Auld. Since then, up to the time of his retirement he gave all his time to the telephone business and real estate ventures, in which he was very successful.

Dr. Crouter was for many years been active in politics as a democrat, having served in the State central committee, and as chairman of the county committee. He was for several years a member of the Charlevoix board of education, and under the Cleveland administration was deputy collector of customs for the port of Charlevoix. He was also served as grand master of Odd Fellows of the State.

Besides a wife he leaves one son, Geo. W. Crouter, Jr.

The funeral was from the residence Monday afternoon, under the auspices of the O&F Fellows. Rev. Quinton Walker officiating.

CHARLEVOIX AUTO CLIMBS A PETOSKEY TELEPHONE POLE

A man giving his name as Theodore Eickson, and whose residence is in Charlevoix, says the Petoskey Evening News, tried to climb a telephone pole at the corner of West Mitchell and Liberty streets late Wednesday afternoon with his automobile and as a result both his machine and the telephone pole are a little the worse for wear.

Erickson, with three young women and a man in the machine was driving west on Mitchell street at a rapid rate of speed and attempted to cut a short corner turning from West Mitchell into Liberty street. His failure to observe the rules of the road came near causing the serious injury of the entire party for there was a car approaching the turn, coming down Liberty street. This machine was on the corner side of the street and attempted to make the turn correctly, but seeing the other machine in the way the driver swung his machine across the curb at the corner. The other driver was compelled to stop his machine to the right and was going so fast it was unable to make the turn and ran into a telephone pole smashing the side of the car and breaking the windshield.

No one in the machine was injured but all was badly frightened and shaken up. The other machine was not injured in its run across the curb and sidewalk.

ABOUT ROAD BILL

Record-Eagle Gives Grange Viewpoint of Pending Measure

An idea being pushed to the front by the Grange, namely that the power to raise large sums of money for public purposes should rest with the people as a whole, is not a new one, nor is it a bad one. It is in keeping with American political ideas. It is the law at the present time. The people now have that power and have had it for many years. The reason that the grange is calling attention to the matter at the present time is because an effort is being made to take the power away from the people and give it to the legislature.

An amendment to the state constitution is being submitted and will be voted upon at the November election, which if adopted will give the legislature the right to raise state bonds for any number of millions, for the purpose of building roads. The proposition looks innocent enough, yet it strikes at the very foundation of government by the people. Now a fifty million or a hundred million dollar road, or school, or schools, public buildings, parks or anything can be made up by the express approval of a majority of the people, who eventually must pay the taxes. If the proposed amendment carries, this less than 200 men, not one of whom may be a heavy taxpayer, can issue bonds for the amount of a million, a hundred million or a million million dollars, and the people will have to foot the bill. Moreover, up to the time of the improving the highways, actually many things might happen.

The proposition is wrong in principle, and because of the fact the Michigan State Grange is urging all taxpayers to vote against the proposed amendment. Taxpayers may on occasions vote down worthy bonding propositions, yet the right to mortgage the future of a state, they certainly must vest with the people, and not the legislature, a city council, a board of supervisors, or a township board.

The designers of our national government took the position that the raising and spending of money should be as near the people as possible and so made provision that all revenue propositions should originate in the house of representatives, the part of the federal government that is the closest to the people. The present day tendency in government is for the people a greater voice in the vital matters, and a nearer say in the minor details of administration. The State Grange insists that the power to raise large sums of money by bonds should remain where it is now with the whole people, and should not be delegated to the hundred odd, who happen to form the state legislature, and it looks as if there is some merit to the contention.

Boyne Citizen: A few days ago a robbery was committed on Hoyt Island which resulted in the removal of the cottage broken into to offer a $50 reward for information leading to the apprehension of the culprits. From the cottage goods consisting of fishing tackle and various other articles amounting to a considerable sum were stolen. Sheriff Novak immediately got busy upon the case and learned that a Boyne City young man knew something of the affair. Upon questioning him he informed the authorities that two young men of this city had told him of the affair. They were placed under arrest and taken to Charlevoix where they denied any knowledge of the robbery. They were kept in custody for several days and finally their nerve broke down and Wednesday night they confessed. Novak came over with one of them Wednesday evening and was directed to the hall pare where the spoils were hidden. The charge is grand larceny and a jail sentence will doubtless be meted out to the culprits.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN WHO WON," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt decides to leave his native town of Bethel to seek his fortune. His sweetheart, Unity Martin, encourages him in his project.

He went again to the cupboard and took down a battered tin candlestick. He lighted the candle and started toward the inward door. Half-way he stopped abruptly and turned, his mouth working strangely.

"If ye ever git rich," he dragged the words out slowly, even painfully, "come back here an' build a steel plant. There is a heap of the same air iron in these hills, an' the river an' railroad'll give ye good transportation. This valley's meant for it. I was jest a little too early—ah' a little too late—yeah, I reckon. But yeas quarter an' better schooled than me, an' the time's comin'. I'd like to see it. I'd like to kill it."

Never before had Simon Truitt spoken of his dream and failure to his son.

"Why, yes," Mark answered, on a sudden pitying impulse, "I'd think about it.

"Yes. Keep thinkin' about it. It's—it's a big idea."

Mark started. The phrase again! Simon went to the cupboard and took out the skimmer ladle—toward the south. Then he moved heavily toward the door. He paused and stood the flickering light from the candle threw the lines of his face into sharp relief.

"Good night, Mark."

"Good night, father."

The door closed. For many minutes Mark left alone, absently fingered the pocketfuls of coin, thought of the man who had given it to him. Then he blew out the lamp and rose from the table.

He, too, paused at the window and looked out into the night, toward the south. He tried to see the sleepy valley as his father had described it—alight with the fires of many furnaces, pulsatant with the rumble of many engines. He thought he saw it.

The picture faded. He saw only a vague shadow—a mass in a moonlit meadow, the dismantled forge, silent bellows that for those who marched upon the battlefield that is called industry is no third choice. They must conquer—or be conquered!

CHAPTER III.

The Masters.

He found Tom Henley, a lonely foreign figure knowing not whither he would go, somewhere in the city's heart.

Chance led him to the principal thoroughfare. The city had begun to empty its hull, and the clubs and cafes were pouring into the street, an endless unordered horde, heedless of time or laws were of one another. Never before had he seen so many people.

He had a confused sense of being sucked into a narrow, glittering place by a human current, propelled by a flood of humanity, a treacherous, dangerous torrent with—many pretty faces. Occasionally faces, was in the unnatural twilight, streamed by him; a stranger type to him, fox-featured, restless of eye.

Full darkness fell. He paused under a fiery sign, The Seneca. Through a great plate-glass window he saw a gaudy red-and-gold interior broken by many columns that to the imagination were semi-transmuted marble. Uniformed page scurried to and fro. Well-dressed men lounged in easy chairs or sauntered leisurely about. Many lights burned brilliantly. He looked within longingly.

While he debated whether or not to enter this expensive-looking hostelry, a porter swooped upon him and snatched from his hands the ancient carpetbag that held his slender wardrobe.

"This way, sub!"

He followed the porter to the desk, patiently scornful of the place he sat, smooth, out of place. A clerk at lofty mien plucked his open register before him.

"Write your name here."

Mark wrote it.

"And your town."

Mark hesitated—and then, with a blazed lowering of his head, firmly wrote the name of that city.

In the dining room that night many smiles were said at the expense of youth. He did not regard himself as a subject for mirth. As he shuddered the strange vision the waiter set before him, a little of his self-confidence returned. The vivid scene of a cruel, overpowering entity faded. Homesickness for Bethel, for the refuge, subsided.

He began to take in details of the novel scene around him.

His ears strained to catch the remarks that floated to him from the neighboring tables. It was a strange tongue he heard, lightly disclosing topics that would have busted the gossiping of Bethel for a month. There was a young man who wore diamonds and talked in a loud and impressive fashion.

"Elizabeth I say broke the record again." (Diamonds, he decided, was not a race horse, but one of the young man's companions.) "Last for the Lorraine. Say! Morse's forty thousand tons. Henley says—I think so he knows—he's going to have the biggest steel year yet. ——Nooo, I don't care. Guess they know more, but I know people that do.—And Tom Henley's going to be the biggest steel man in the business—gets his fifty thousand a year already.

"Quinby? Oh, they're the richest. They have the most money. Sho! Ha! Ha! Tom Henley's the brains of the outfit—he's the money. Sho! Ha! Ha!"

Tom Henley's the brains of the outfit—he's the money. Sho! Ha! Ha! Mark repeated the words to himself, again and again. Worth his half million, they say, and ain't over thirty-five.

And this was the city from another angle. Tom Henley, evidently, had the monster well in hand.

The name had a familiar ring. Mark drew from his pocket a letter Richard Courtney had given him that morning. Upon it was inscribed, "To Thomas Henley, Esquire."

"He may be willing to help you find work," Courtney had said, "if he remembers me."

Mark regarded the letter thoughtfully. He wondered what was in it. After a moment's hesitation he opened—it was unsealed—and read it.

"My Dear Henley," the letter ran, "I am sending you one who is the work of my hands. He is a young man of parts, good friends," as we say in Bethel, "with work. Also he has a note for money." They are qualities for which you, perhaps, can help him find a market. ——I say he is my handiwork but he is an unfashioned product. What, I wonder, will the new life that succeeds me as his mentor make of him? Perhaps I should let him strike out for himself and learn at once the ugly cruelty of the struggle that now seems to him so glorious. Or I should save the habit of helping youth to the sugar-plums of which we have learned in afterlife. ——And this introduction is the last thing I can do for a young man who wishes to make his way.

After many minutes' study Mark came to his decision. He would present himself and the letter to Thomas Henley, he would do it that very night. He rose from his dinner.

"Where," he inquired of the superillious clerk, "does Thomas Henley live? I must see him tonight."

The directions brought Mark at length into the heart of a small cosy apartment and with a sordidness quite that delighted the listener. "I noticed you didn't eat much tonight."

"Ah! It is more than stomach. It is soul!" the mellow voice flowed on. "My whole life and investments have been blessed with good fortune. So I am now able to turn my energies to the higher duties, to doing large things for humanity—to—to—to—" he waved his hand much on—philanthropy and paleontology."

The speaker, like Brutus, paused for a reply.

"Paleo! Two 'pa's,' it came. Quite alliterative. Go on."

"Henley, you are the first to whom I have spoken of my purpose. It is dear—sacred—to me. Perhaps you think me quite philanthropy, one a man of wealth engages then in the strenuous pursuit of the science of paleontology? Tshaw, Henley—to add to humanity's knowledge of the extinct life that came before—for—for—for what? It is a labor for the imagination. And that is my purpose. I shall build and endow in this city the most complete paleontological institute in the world, and before I lay aside the project, a branch institution in each of the largest cities of the nation." The voice trembled with emotion.

"There was a sound as of two hands sharply meeting. "Good! I see! Let the Scotchman look to his laurels! MacGregor may build his library, but Quinby shall have his paleontological institute!"

Mark wondered at the patience of the answer. "Ah! You are pleased to jest. But the project is new to you. And," sighingly, "the young think only of wealth and power."

"My dear Mr. Quinby," the other purred, "the man in his senses could jest at paleontology. ——What the devil!"

The speakers had turned the corner of the veranda and come upon the Crossfirer. Thus for the first time Mark Truitt looked upon the two men to whose legions he was to conquer.

Who has not to fancy's gallery a portrait of Jeremiah Quinby, taken from the prime of the day when his star swept so brilliant through the sky? The lofty brow seems to shelter a very ferment of noble projects. The grave eyes and mouth speak to us of a great soul anguished by the sight of suffering humanity's needs, which he bravely, self-effacingly seeking to relieve.

Photography has been less kind to Thomas Henley. No philanthropy has claimed him as its apostle. And then he was a less promising subject for the art. His body was far squat and his face was bony and ugly and arrogant, often still further marred by a twisted, crooked sneer. A lesser man than presented, would have been regulous. Yet from Henley radiated a tremendous vitality that made him magnetic or compelling as he chose—the concrete quality that could galvanize a man or a regiment to the mad effort he demanded. After the first glance Mark looked no more upon Quinby, but understood why the philanthropist was good-he meekly swallowed the insolence.

"This," he thought, "is a man."

Henley charged upon him, gripping his arm.

"What the devil?" he repeated, "are you doing here?"

"Looking into the window."

"What are you doing that for?"

"Because," Mark answered simply, "I never saw anything like it before."

"Probably," the philanthropist-to-be murmured nervously, backing away, "he is some sneak thief. Perhaps you'd better hold him while I get help."

"Oh, don't be frightened," Henley replied protectively. "I won't let him hurt you."

The sardonic note was again upon Mark's lips, but he gave him all gloom over the Quinby mills three deep with incompetents in a year."

He completed the perusal of the letter.

"Well," he sneered, "you who peep through windows, I suppose you want a job. Well, you've got it. Be at the mills at 7 sharp."

Suddenly Mark felt saner, hot anger, as little arrogant young man, not so many years his senior, who baited octahedrocists with an faint scrupling as he rough-handled the seeker of work. Henley saw him stiffen.

"No, I don't," Mark cried hotly. "I only want a chance to work. A chance to show what I'm good for."

"If that's all you want—what are you good for?"

"I'm a blacksmith, but I can do anything."

"Humph! We can use fellows who can do anything—to swing pick and shovel. Do you know where we're building our new plant?"

"I can find out."

"Go to the labor boss and tell him I gave you a job with the construction gang. If you're good for anything, you can work up the way I—or, not the way I did, but the way you'll have to if you want to get along where I'm running things.

"All right," Mark said shortly and turned on his heel.

CHAPTER IV.

The Service of the Strong.

To the nation had come a rare passion for building. It was tearing down its old barns, to build a new, bigger and stronger. There were cities to be raised in the desert and there must be public buildings and roaring. The old age was ended, and the harvest must be certed by crawling cosmologs and mile trals, but by the power of steam. Men would go down to the sea no longer in ships of wood, but in floating palaces that mocked the storm. Those who made war were to be sheltered behind impenetrable ramparts and disciplined with engines of destruction before which slowest cannon crumbled. Voiceless on hand and see hint fed in their hands new weapons, hard and keen and sure, to bring nature, her forces and treasures, into bondage and service.

Therefore, steel!

And, therefore, the army of steel workers.

A strong west wind had sprung up during the night and the sun shone clear on the line of that day's recruits. One by one they passed before a keen-eyed youth—only the young officered this army—who, after one glance, accepted or rejected. The enlisted were turned over to the timekeeper, who gave them numbered cards and assigned them to various waiting squads.

A big Swede, a wiry little French-Canadian and a slow-moving Pole were passed.

He nodded curtly to the next applicant. "All right! Get your card."

And this recruit was he who had accepted Thomas Henley's challenge. The latter had already forgotten the incident, but Mark was still hot with the determination to prove his mettle to the taunter.

He gave his name to the time-clerk and received his card, on which was stated, "Go with Houlihan's gang."

Then, he reflected, he had taken the first step in his campaign of conquest—he was a private in Houlihan's squad.

"Get a move on!" thundered a voice in his ear. "Drys think you are a pretty shrack in the ground? Marrch!" it was the voice of Houlihan. Mark marched.

Corporal Houlihan had no romantic conception of his duties and his to any was of a sort to give his under-lings the realistic point of view.

"Here, ye Oily—"

"Ay hane Johanan."

"Ye're Moike, I'd say at," bellowed Houlihan. He enlarged upon Johanan's idiosyncrasies and ended, "Thin ye're a Dutchman."

The Swede, the best worker in the camp, began to shovel in a leisurely manner that added nothing to his efficiency. Mark saw the red crop into the fair skin.

"Shift it up, ye French loafer!" the sergeant addressed the man at his side. "We're runnin' no barber shop here. Fy two cints Oid man, ye'll be sent into yez."

It was a tired and sadly fretted gang when a whistle relieved. Mark stretched himself out on the ground, closing his eyes on the clear blue sky his comrades produced; in his eagerness to be animated by the spirit of his midday meal, and he was very hungry.

He felt a hand on his shoulder and opened his eyes. The Frenchman and the Swede were beside him.

"M'sieu sea 'ungree, eh!" The Frenchman carefully broke a loaf of brown bread—all his meal—in the middle and proffered Mark one-half. "Ma'sieu eat!" The Swede held out a bottle filled with cold coffee.

Mark looked curiously at the gifts, but he shook his head.

"M'sieu 'ate dat dam 'Oulahan!" the Frenchman inquired.

"No, Mark responded with fervor. "Dat mak fren's out of us, eh! Ker, m'sieu."

Hunger overcame scruples. Mark ate the bread and drank the coffee.

"Much obliged, I was hungry. You're square, fellows." he added inconsistently.

"Mebbe so not," Marcel shrugged his shoulders. "One man leave. As one must work. Eh?"

"Steady, Johann!" counseled Mark. "Don't let him rattle you."

"You 'ear, Jo'ann?" Marcel added earnestly. "I 'ave recipe for wat my fren, M'sieu Mark Truitt, say."

They "got it," indeed, that afternoon. The Irishman, under the sting of his boss' reproof raged and cursed endlessly in the effort to eat, and work out of his mess. The gang, irritable and sullen, worked erratically, and the reports that brought inevitable reaction, the men became demoralized, interfered with one another.

Mark, some whim of the boss making him a special target for the Houlihan of profanity, was hard put to keep his temper in check. He was glad to withdraw the mutinous Swede, who lished with a desire for assassination. Toward the end of the day even the philosophic Marcel grew ill-natured and snarling. Somebody Mark felt their hospitality of the noon hour had put upon him a responsibility for them, though they were his seniors by at least ten years.

"One must live, you know," he reminded Marcel. "And one must work."

"Oui, mais' not be treat' like a dog

"Would You Mind Saying That Again?"

m'sieu." Marcel ripped out a long French oath. "Jo'ann, you are my friend—you 'ear Dat, Jo'ann?"

Suddenly the Swede dropped his shovel. Ay 've 'ey enuf, Ja."

Johann was too slow in his mental processes to be aroused into patience. "Yes, you can shovel and get to work," Mark commanded sharply.

The Swede blinked stupidly for a moment, then slowly obeyed.

"You ore 'back, kein?" Marcel sneered.

"Yes, Marcel, since noon—your friend," Mark responded.

Marcel, too, stared and then, with a start, recognition, bent himself degredly to his task.

Mark thought he heard a chuckle behind him. He looked up to meet the eyes of the foreman. At the instant he caught a glance was no sign of recognition.

"Why, we're through!" he muttered. "Johann stared stupidly.

"Mebbe dat Mountain Blair 's over us another job, you think so, eh?" suggested Marcel hopefully.

"No. We're the rottenest gang on the work. It's Houlihan's fault. And I haven't had my chance. I——o——h——!"

"I——!" The impending calamity was becoming clear to Johann.

"Mark 'ave 'ee chance. Dat 'ee' bad. Jo'ann an' me, we 'ave ice job." Marcel sighed.

But the fear was not justified. At the foreman's desk we were given a report next morning a half hour earlier than usual. And

"Boys," said the time clerk, "the boss wants to see you."

Mark made his way to the rude shanty that was Blair's office.

"Truitt," the latter demanded, "what's the matter with Houlihan's gang?"

"Too much bullying," Mark answered promptly.

"I thought so. Report tomorrow morning."

"Yes, sir. Of course."

"I'm going to put your gang on the cube crew held. It's a rush job. I give you three weeks for it."

"Give me!"

"Yes. I'm putting you in charge of the gang."

For an instant Mark stared foolishly. Then he grinned.

"Why, what's the joke there?"

"There is such a thing as luck. A long-remembered act of kindness will not become exploitive—who had just done something for the bridge, heard, and with a half smile, saw the eager face.

Blair shrugged his shoulders. "Yes, it's big. But it's hard work. Good pay, anyhow."

"I suppose so." Mark answered carelessly. Then, with a chuckle, he added, "The man spoke. "Good evening, Blair."

"Oh! Good evening, Mr. Henley," Blair strove a respectful attitude. "A fine night, sir."

Henley looked at Mark. "I don't but place you. Where have I seen you before?"

Mark flushed at the recollection. "I took a letter I had for you and you caught me——"

"Oh you're Peeping Tom, eh! Did you get it?"

"Yes, sir." With a pick-and-shovel gang. I'm boss now."

Henley seemed not unduly impressed.

"He's the man that dug the new tunnel." Blair interposed generously. "He did it in two weeks and three days."

"Two weeks and two days." Mark corrected sagely.

"So long!" Henley continued indifferent.

"I had a spoiled gang. It took me two weeks to shape 'em up."

"Mark's gang," Blair said, "was two bosses for me. We gave you credit for that, Mark."

"I took him out of the gang and put him on the job." But he did the work. He knew how to get work out of men."

"Are you satisfied with your job?"

"No," cried Mark. "I don't want to be just a Hunky-driver. I want to learn how to make steel."

"If you want to learn how to make steel than to be a Hunky driver," Henley said drily. "However, I think we done in earth as it is in heaven.

MAKEUP MAN IN BAD MIXUP

Transposed Lines of a Wedding and Auction Sale Lead to Ludicrous Effects.

In handling the slugs which make up the lines in a newspaper, and in transposing the various items, the makeup man sometimes gets the lines mixed up and they naturally read rather queer. As an illustration of what can happen, we quote from the Pine Bangor (Pa.) News a few days ago: when the printer got a wedding and an auction sale mixed up with the following results.

"William Smith, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Smith and Miss Lucy Anderson were married on the farm, in the presence of 70 guests, including two mules and 13 head of cattle.

"Her Jackson tied the nuptial knot for the happy couple. The bride wore her hood. The beautiful home of the bride was decorated with the usual wedding bells and bright and two sets of work harness, nearly new, and just before the ceremony the bride and groom received a number of valuable presents, among the latter being a set of harness, a fine Jersey cow and one shop, who carrying a bunch of letters rose in her hand was very beautiful. She wore one light spring frock, two cases of apples, three reams of hay, one grindstone, many assins de soir and trimmed with about one hundred bushels of spuds in honor. The bride's mode left yesterday on an extended trip. Turnip spot cash."

GOT THE VISUAL EVIDENCE

Eastern Doctor Finds a Drink of Punch From the Lips to the Stomach.

Having followed with his eyes the course of a drink of punch from the mouth of a patient into his stomach, Dr. Henry J. Ingersoll, of Hobbs, N. J., began the treatment of a case in which visual evidence will take the place of guesses and theories in measures to effect a cure. The patient was a man addicted with the prospect because, he said, the chances had an another way of proceeding to rely on the blind experiments which practitioners commonly employ in such emergencies.

The novelty in this treatment consists of the use of the Roentgen rays, showing alimentary and digestive tracts. Dr. Ingersoll began his experiments. No one believe him had employed the fluoroscope for such a case, so he was alone.

His patient was placed in front of the fluoroscope and instructed to "Say" directed toward the body with an intensity of 12 drinks but will amount of discomfort. The patient swallowed a glass of punch. The stomachs of the ray projected on a glass screen, coated with a solution of barium platinocyanide, a glass side, a replica in shadows of the drinks, the stomachs, the hollow heart, and other organs so clearly that when the milk punch was drunk the passage from mouth to stomach was perfectly visible on the glass.

Christ at the Right Hand of God

By REV. L. W. CONNELL

Assistant to Dean Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT—"He was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God." Mark 16:19.

These words give us a vision of our enthroned brother.

Our Lord Jesus Christ will have perfected a human body and soul and when we see him in glory it will be "the same Jesus" who was crucified upon earth to the glorification of humanity. Our bodies are now in humiliation and grow weary and ill; but they shall be made like unto the body of his glorious body.

The vision assures us of Christ's sympathy. He is touched with a feeling of our infirmities, having been in all points tempted as we are, apart from sin.

Though now ascended up on high, he is still our Elder Brother; the Partaker of our human name and nature, bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh.

Our entrance to heaven is secured. Joseph's rude brethren were out of place in the palace of Pharaoh, but Christ is not ashamed to call them brethren, and he shall be "at home" with the Lord.

Our Saviour's Father. Christ "sat" on the right hand of God, after his work was finished. It was a finished work. Other men die feeling their work is incomplete. Mr. J. Hudson Taylor, when a boy, picked up a tract on which he noted the words, "the finished work of Christ." He saw that he had nothing to do but accept the gift of salvation and praise God; and in a moment he was saved. Will you do as Sheridan?

Bishop Moule and a party of friends stood one night in the Coliseum and thought of the countless martyrs who there had died for Christ. On the spot the moment he read the closing words of Romans 5: "Who is he that condemneth?" It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or naked ness, or peril, or sword? . . . Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Our Mighty Helper.

The verse following the text reads, "And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Christ does not sit idle in heaven. But, as Stephen saw him "standing" on the right hand of God, he is ever ready to help us. The Gospel tell us what Jesus "began to do and teach," and he is still doing his work. It is impossible to doubt whether the Lord is among us, let us recall how he stilled the tempest, fed a miner's son, Marvin Luther; and launched the world on a career of conquest through a shoemaker, William Carey.

Let this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sit down on the right hand of God, and let him see nothing till his enemies become his footstool? Christ will be made his footstool when he shall come to reign at last. In the day, the church will share his glories as his own bride. Israel will be restored and be a channel of blessing to all nations. Wars and oppression will cease "and the spirit of the city shall be fulfilled with joy and peace in the streets thereof." "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isaiah 11:6-9). A blind girl said she loved to think of Christ's "sitting" and especially the last three chapters, since the twentieth show a Saviour who "ever liveth" shows the Lamb married and the twenty-second shows Christ reigning.

And hear this wondrous word: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my father in his throne" (Rev. 3:21).

From a Veteran Pastor's Prayer

Lord, I have preached your gospel long and work and worker. Enrich thy church with power. Let no one of us, O Lord, be too busy to be about our Father's business. Vitalize our Sunday school work, our young people's societies, and new agencies of ministry yet to be set on foot. Pour out the spirit on all our Christian universal. Smile on every sincere worker, at home or abroad, in the Lord's vineyard. Help us to promote right economy and human welfare. Bless the lighting souls, and thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

CARE OF MOLTING FOWLS

Despite Falling Off in the Egg Supply Liberal Feeding Must Not Be Discontinued.

When late summer rolls around and the hens begin to cast their feathers and droop around in lazy fashion or shuffle sand in some shady corner, this is the time that the egg basket fixtures with the bottom knocked out, and the sense of feeding to the hens.

This scarcity of eggs is due to the molting process, which is a period of rest for the hen, during which time the feathers are being renewed, and the system is recuperating from the effects of the long summer and early fall laying. Some hens will not lay a single egg during the molting period, for it takes all their energy to grow the new feathers, and they will not resume laying until the molting is over. Some hens will lay a few eggs during the molting period, but the number will be very small, and it is not worth while to feed them for the eggs they may produce.

But feeding should not be discontinued because the hens are not laying, for they need the food to build up the system and prepare for the next period of egg production. The hens should be fed a good ration, but it should be a ration that will not force them into laying when they are not in condition to do so. The ration should be such as will tend to keep the birds in good condition, and should be such as

HIS CURIOUS FALL.

It Wedged Him Head Down in a Slit in a Steep Cliff.

A personal experience of a highly sensational character is recorded by A. H. Savage Landor in his book "Across Unknown South America:"

"The forest near the Secundury river was at first overgrown with dense vegetation that gave us a good deal of work and extra exertion, but after that, when we got some distance from the water, the forest was fairly clean, except of course for the fallen trees. We found troublesome patches of great depth where streamlets had cut their way through.

"In going down one of those different ravines I had an accident that might have been fatal. The ravine, the sides of which were almost vertical, was very narrow—only about ten metres across. We let ourselves down, holding on to a liana. When we reached the bottom we found a fine brook winding its way between great round boulders that left a space about two feet wide for the water. I began to climb the other side, and I had got to a height of about thirty feet. In order to go up this steep incline I had set one foot against a small tree and I pulled myself up by a liana. Quickly the liana suddenly gave way. The weight of the load that I had on my shoulders made me lose my balance so that my body described a complete somersault, I dropped down head first from that height on the rocks below.

"Providence once more looked after me on that occasion. On the fall I doubtless imagined myself dead. But no so fortunate was I. Between two great rocks, against which my shoulders and the load on them leaned, while my legs waved wildly in midair, I was forced so hard against the two side rocks that I could not possibly extricate myself. It was only when Benedicto and the new man came to my help and pulled me out that we were able to resume our journey. I was much shaken and a good deal bruised, but otherwise none the worse for that unpleasant fall."

WEIRD DREAM STORY.

The Startling Vision That Saved the Life of Lady Vernon.

The following dream story is told in "The Story of My Life," by Augustus J. C. Hare. The story was told to Mr. Hare in Rome in 1870.

"Lady Vernon dreamed that she saw the butler with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, crossing the entrance hall, and she awoke with a great start. After awhile she composed herself to sleep again, and she dreamed—she dreamed that she saw the butler with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, on the middle of the staircase, and she awoke with a great shock. She got up, she thought she could not be quite well, and she took a little sal volatile. At last she fell asleep again, and she dreamed—she dreamed that she saw the butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other, standing at her bedroom door, and she awoke in a great terror, and she jumped out of bed, and she said, 'I'll have an end of this. I'll have an end of these foolish imaginations.'

"And she rushed to the door and threw it wide open. And there just outside stood the butler, with a knife in one hand and a candle in the other. And when he saw Lady Vernon in her white nightdress, with her hair streaming down her back, he was so dreadfully frightened that he dropped the candle on the floor and rushed off down the staircase and off to the stables, where there was a horse ready saddled and bridled, on which he meant to have ridden away when he had murdered Lady Vernon. But he ran away without having murdered her at all, and he was never heard of again."

Clews to His Writing.

Sometimes the worst of handwriting because intelligible when one grasps the value for a clew to a certain author. Early an author's is frequently made evident, chiefly by his deliberate or unconscious insertion of the accepted rules of calligraphy. Henry Ward Beecher had a daughter who acted as copyist, and she used him with ease simply by remembering three pitfalls—that to her father's manuscript no dotted letter was meant for an "i," no crossed letter stood for "t" and that no capital letter ever began a sentence.

CUT THE ARMY RED TAPE.

Willich Knew His Men and They Knew Him and That Settled It.

"There are times when the so called 'red tape' of the army gives way under the stress of circumstances. At the battle of Chickamauga General Willich, who was commanding a brigade, incurred the displeasure of General Rosecrans, the commanding general, by some slight omission. General Willich was sent for and informed by the general commanding that he must consider himself under arrest for the offense.

"'You may leave your sword here,' added Rosecrans, 'until your case is tried.'

"'Yes, general, I will consider myself under arrest,' was the reply, 'and just as soon as this engagement is over, I'll come and fix up the matter.'

"'But, sir,' said the astounded Rosecrans, 'I want you to consider yourself under arrest now.'

"'Of course I do,' responded Willich promptly, 'and just as soon as this fight is over I'll see that the matter is arranged.'

"'But, sir,' expostulated the commanding general, 'I can't let you go into this fight. You are under arrest. I will assign an officer to your brigade.'

"'You send an officer to command my boys?' cried Willich indignantly. 'He can't command them! They don't know him! They know me—I can teach them. None of my boys would know how to fight or what to do unless I was with them. My boys belong to me. Yes, me, General Willich! I command the brigade, and I must fight the brigade!'

General Rosecrans gave it up. General Willich was requested to return from the fight his horse, which he did most successfully. And that was the end of the matter.—Washington Star.

BECOMING A BRITON.

Easy For Aliens to Acquire Citizenship in England.

A large number of aliens become British subjects every year by taking advantage of the naturalization act. The process of taking out naturalization papers in England is delightfully simple. An application can be put through in a couple of hours if good and sufficient reasons can be shown, while the average time elapsing between application for a certificate of naturalization and the granting of parchment is about a fortnight. Naturalization is only about eight weeks.

The naturalization act of 1870 requires that the applicant shall have resided in the United Kingdom at least five years, and shall intend, when naturalized, to continue to reside here.

The issue of a license or an apartment is sufficient to establish legal residence. The landlord's word is taken as sufficient proof. The applicant has merely to fill in a brief with the details of his residence and other information, and have the facts as to his residence verified by one British subject, while the applicant's respectability and loyalty must be vouched for by others. He then files the application with a fee of 5 shillings.

A special British Yard detective is assigned to inquire into the case and examine all the statements of the applicant's memorial. Three months is allowed him in which to make his report, but a few weeks usually suffice. If the application is passed another fee of £7 is required. The applicant then has permission to file his oath of allegiance, which concludes the process.—London Tit-Bits.

A Puritan Jury.

That the Puritan fashion of women, long gone, produced some very odd results is very generally known. The London Chronicle recalls that James Bruce, in his "Travels Over England, Scotland and Wales," published in 1800, gives a copy of a "Jury Return, Made at Rye, Sussex, in the Late Bloody Protestant Persecutions."

"The names of the twelve good men and true were—Barbara Celick, Dorcas Harding, William Pimple, Earth Adams, Margaret Billing, Here Fruit, Patience Hope for Bending, Return Spelman, Fly Jenkins Roberts, Brand East on Hide Salmon, Be Faithful Joiner and Fight the Good Fight of Faith White.

Two Ways.

"Well, dear Susan, do you not think that there is a peculiar marriage state with our subjects? Here, for example, traveling and leave—ah—his poor wife alone. That must hurt her terribly, the poor woman!"

"Well, it is just as one takes it. You are always at home; that is a still greater hurt."—Pfleegeds Blatter.

MAKING INVESTMENTS.

Safety of Principal Is More Essential Than Big Returns.

First, here is a quotation from a thrift preacher:

"Many fortunes have been made and every more will be made through wise investment. Many fortunes are lost, too, through unwise investments. But thrifty habits and consulting with experienced persons like conservative bankers will give one the wisdom necessary to handle money wisely."

Second, I am down a quotation from the advertisement of a wise and conservative investment banker:

"In lending or investing money all possible care should be taken to guard against hasty or impulsive decision. Every endeavor should be made to assemble such reliable information as will permit of the exercise of intelligent judgment. The man who assumes this attitude toward all investment propositions comes to have an increasing regard for the amount of conservatism, and is ordinarily the first man to seek the co-operation of investment experts."

Conservatism in investment means first of all, keeping the principal sum safe. What profits it to get 7 or 8 per cent a year on your money for three or four years if at the end of that time misfortune of any sort overtakes the company you invested in to such an extent that you would find what you have paid $100 for is worth only $75? And when you leave the end of conservatism in putting your money out to work this is exactly the experience you are likely to have.

Better keep your money in the savings bank, where it will earn about 4 per cent and where, if you wish, interest will be compounded, until you are positively certain of the soundness of the investment office you receive. Adding to the actual sum in a savings bank, too, is a mighty good way to fasten the thrift habit upon yourself. Choose as your first adviser in investment some one who has selected investments for the savings bank. From him learn what the elements of sound investment are. Go slow!—John M. Oskison in Chicago News.

LURE OF THE OPIUM PILL.

And the Way the Cost Piles Up as It Enslaves Its Victim.

In the American Magazine appears an article entitled "A Modern Opium Eater," written by a former newspaper man, who became a victim of the habit and is now a convert to a prohibitory law. The following extract from his article gives an idea of the amount of money required by an opium eater:

"By this time the cost of opium had become a very appreciable and permanent expense. From a few pills at first I increased my allowance day by day until it took thirty or forty 'Pos' in CM2 ounce measure; there are seventy-six Pos in an ounce; to give me the mental relief I craved. The physical cravings the body's demand for it—can be satisfied with approximately the same amount each day. The mental craving—the mind's demand—increases and increases.

What satisfies tonight is too little tomorrow, and so on. To feel even normal I now needed three or four times the half dozen pills which at first had given me such exquisite pleasure. To get the satisfaction, the soothed nerves, the contentment I craved, I, like each of the millions before me, had to use more and more each day.

"Thirty-six Pos of opium at retail costs, at an average, $1. A fifty cent tip to my 'cook' and a quarter for the porter of the room in which I smoked made my habit cost me about $4 a day, which made a ghastly hole in even the good salary I earned. I began to buy my opium by the can, paying from $25 to $35 for the ounces of 400 Pos. The elimination of the retailer's profit helped temporarily, but the ever increasing demands of my habit soon overcame the saving."

Vanity.

There is a stirring of the spirit capitive in the worm fresh of the body. People are breaking down under the tyranny of material possession. There was never a time when women's intelligence was so eager and inquiring about ways to make their homes so many of metal and meals and mins. It is all clear to a prophetic understanding that we are nearing the end of our lessons in three dimensions and five senses.—Will Levington Comfort.

THE MENACING SEA

It Threatens to Some Day Engulf New York and Boston.

OUR EASTERN COAST SINKING.

In Time, Thousands of Years, Perhaps, the Atlantic Ocean, According to Geologists, Will Flow Over the Cities That Now Tower Above Its Shores.

Government geological experts have calculated that New York, Boston, Philadelphia and all the other cities along the Atlantic coast will eventually sink beneath the ocean. They have observed that there has been a steady sinking of the whole coast, and they say that it is going on at the present moment.

Geologists have long recognized the fact that the Atlantic coast line was much farther out than it is now. There is a line from 100 to 200 miles off the present coast at which the water suddenly gets deeper. Out to that distance the water is generally about 300 feet deep. Then it plunges suddenly and becomes ten times as far to the ocean's bottom. The men of the coast survey have traced this line throughout the length of our coast line and find it similar all along. The geologists say that the continent once reached out that far and that there was the coast line, but a gradual decline through the ages has caused that line to retreat, until now it is where we know it.

From a geologist standpoint this has happened in comparatively recent times. It has all been done since the glacial period. This brings it into the present period and makes the action now. In fact it is positively known to be going on now.

There is no ancient silt in the Charleston navy yard at Boston with regard to which there is definite information as to its elevation. It was put in place seventy years ago; its elevation was given in relation to mean high and low tide, and also with reference to surrounding landmarks. With relation to the tide this silt has sunk seven-tenths of a foot. With relation to the landmarks it has the same position, a position proof that Boston harbor and the city about it have sunk seven-tenths of a foot into the sea in the last seventy years.

The original mouth of the Hudson river is now 200 miles out to sea. The ancient fiords, the old channel in Narragansett Bay, now, it is not known how long ago it was when the mouth of the river was not far out in the ocean. But it is almost a certainty that when a similar time has elapsed the present city will be an equal distance from the then land.

Similarly will Boston be submerged. Baltimore will disappear at about the same time and great portions of Washington. The great Mississippi bring down great deposits to raise its delta and counterbalance the decline. So is New Orleans that it will be one of the last cities to sink below the sea level and be a monument to the wailed against the enemy, the sea. Galveston has already felt the encroachment of the waters and has been forced to build itself a sea wall.

The geological survey makes topographical maps. On these lines are run at given elevations. For instance, a line may be run along Manhattan Island at a level twenty feet above the water at the Battery. It would submerge the customs house and other Broadway nearly to Wall street. From the site it would invade the business district almost to Canal street. It would overflow half the land between the city hall and the East river. Further up it would submerge a narrower strip, but its incursion would create great havoc.

A fifty foot rise of water would wipe Manhattan Island out entirely. Of course, if those depressions were at very gradually the water fronts would be dotted against their surroundings. In such case the city might be saved from destruction for a very long time. It will inevitably become a city surrounded by a city levee, against which the ocean will beat with its ever increasing advantage. It might perpetuate itself by artificial means, but in the end it would be an impossible position. The waters will follow over the flats of New Jersey and Long Island. They will even beat here, through the Delaware and the Chesapeake and get beyond the city and cut off communication with the rest of the land. Finally, New York will find itself a city down in a gulf far out from the seashore, with the ocean beating against its walls. Boston will dwindle down to a little island, and Baltimore will be a city of the sea, and will tumble in among the skyscrapers.—V. A. Lin Pop's "Uncle Sam, Wonder Worker."

How to Get $10,000.

Young people seldom have money for its own sake. They are usually so poor that they need for the pleasures it will bring that they need to be urged to save a part of it. Young men and girls should be taught early to save money for the future. Not so many men and women would enter marriage and engage and the joys of a home of their own if boys and girls were taught that $130 a week saved will in thirty years at sixteen bank interest become something more than $10,000—enough even to educate some boys and girls if you begin in the town to save so much by giving up things which are useless if not also harmful.—Christine Herald.

The Genevieves I Know

By Helen Help

THE GENEVIEVE WITH A COMMON QUANDARY.

Genevieve is in a quandary.

Of course it is another woman's thing for a Genevieve to be in a quandary, but this is a quandary with a big Q, and is very serious indeed.

Genevieve is quite a young woman and has something like a limited fortune. She buried Jamie a certain number of years ago, and she was very properly grieved and sorry about it. And when the two came she said her deep mourning aside and put on initiated affliction. She has been wearing colors some time now, and that is how she comes to be in the quandary.

Because, you see, if she had continued in deep mourning, or even in shrieks indicated affliction, she would have no doubt in the world about marrying Jim. Whereas, wearing colors as she is, Jim has an attractive rival in Genevieve.

"I love you very much, Genevieve," says Jim, "and the children are as sweet as they can be. Why on earth should you hesitate to marry me? If I were not able to support you it would be different, or if I were not fond of children. Or, Genevieve, if you did not love me. But you do."

"That is just the trouble, Jim," whimpers Genevieve tearfully.

"That you love me? What nonsense!" scorns James. "That is the very reason why you ought to marry me. And besides you need a husband to help you manage the boys."

"A husband to help me manage my boys? Now you just get that right out of your head, Jim," flares Genevieve. "The very instant any man undertook to help me manage my boys I would—I would—"

"Marry me, dearest," whispers Jim, so much in love as a man may be even with a charming widow.

And, "I suppose he's right in there a-talkin' to her now," a gloomy young voice growls out in the hall, as the owner holds back Jimmy-boy from forcible entry into the parlor. "Don't you go butin' in, mother's boss's there," he croaks at his cousine, so engrossed in tearful talk over the loss. And, "Gee, ain't it funny, mother can't come out any more," he adds in a minute tonight sank," howls the irrepressible second scion of Lile Redbrand household.

"A quandary?" Well, I should think so. And the quandary of Genevieve, who has her affections to go by, is as nothing to the quandary of Jim, who has only his half affections. Because, while Jim loves Genevieve dearly, yet he cannot be said to adore these young barbarians of hers, who, in his early ardor, he declared should be to him as his very own. Jim had never had any young barbarians of his own, and has forgotten what he was really like when he was a young barbarian himself. Hence he has no proper yardstick to lay against their decidedness of his own dear Genevieve's and judge fairly as to whether they are worse, or better, or just the plain, normal, average young demon which infests the American home. Which is what they are, although somewhat modified by their mamma's otherness than some.

Detectives know that they are the best and the loveliest and the most original and the most promising and the smartest and the dearest—but Jim isn't so sure. And as for the young barbarians, they have grown to loathe the very name of the man who arrives about their bedtime, so that mother cannot come and talk things over according to old customs, but rushes in for a hasty good-night while they can feel that big man drawing her away from them and fair game.

All right when they are married? Um! Now if James had lived, he would have been as interested in those boys as their mother is, or even more so. But, who can expect Jim to be interested?

"Who on earth am I going to do about it?" wails Genevieve. And, "What do you know about this?" mutters Jim.

And some of these fine evenings Jim is going to walk right into Genevieve's house, over to the abode of Jenny, in the next block, who isn't half so pretty nor so witty nor so sweet nor so much to be loved as Genevieve, but who has no young barbarians whatever. Because the very heart of Jim is sick of young barbarians. And when the aforesaid Y. B.'s, discovering this, exult audibly their manhood is going to smack swearingly, and up by phone and tell him yes, agree to an early wedding, come home to the honeymoon to her beloved offspring—and that quandary of hers is going to be her sweet and loving companion in the happy second marriage that all her friends will be singing songs of joy about.

Increasing Use of Water.

It has been figured out by the Springfield, Mass., statisticians that the daily consumption of water per capita in that city is 113 gallons and two gills. The present generation uses more water than did its predecessor, and also breathes more fresh air. The more general installation of the bathtub is probably responsible for the increased consumption. At the convention of the American Water Works association held in Philadelphia some weeks ago, a former chief of the water department of that city said that half a century ago the daily per capita use of water there was 60 gallons. Now it is about 100 gallons. That is nearly twice the Springfield figures. We should be reluctant to believe that the standard of cleanliness in the latter city was below that of Philadelphia. It may be that a gallon of Schuylkill water does not go so far for cleaning purposes as a gallon of Springfield water. The residuum which the former leaves calls for a second washing about as soon as the first is dry. Still, the brave efforts of the people to maintain a clean and wholesome condition under discouraging circumstances is deserving of much praise.

Tipping a Feudal Survival.

Tipping is plainly a survival of the feudal relation, long before the humbler men had risen from the condition of status to that of contract, when fixed pay in the ordinary sense was unknown, and where the relation between servant and master was one of substantial voluntary service and voluntary support was the rule, and in the best aspect was a relation of mutual dependence and kindness. Then the spasmodic payment was, as it is now, essential to the upper man's dignity, and very especially to the dignity of his visitor. Tipping has flourished surprisingly in England today in such an extent that poor men refrain from visiting their relations because of the tips. In the great country houses the tips are expected to be in gold, at least so I was told some years ago. And in Germany and all the Continent it is a silver shilling on the one hand and a copper on the other. Tipping is an abominable thing, evil, audibly, their manhood is going to smack swearingly, and up by phone and tell him yes, agree to an early wedding, come home to the honeymoon to her beloved offspring—and that quandary of hers is going to be her sweet and loving companion in the happy second marriage that all her friends will be singing songs of joy about.

Carefully Dressed High Coiffure

OF SEVERAL new high coiffures three are a noteworthy number in which the hair is waved in the even, Marcel wave, and parted either in the middle or to one side. In others the hair, after being waved, is brought to the top of the head and piled in a coil directly back of the forehead. A third style shows a part at each side with the hair at the top of the head drawn back to the crown, where it joins the back hair to form a small Psyche knot.

In the coiffure shown in the picture the hair is waved all around the head. The front portion is parted off and combed forward to be cut of the way, while the hair hair is brought to the top of the crown and arranged in a short French twist. When this has been pinned to place with short wire hairpins it forms a foundation to which the front hair is afterward fastened.

The front hair is parted and combed down on each side, just above the temple. It is turned back and combed off the face from the temple to the ear. It is brought up to the back with the ends curled into a puff. The puff is pinned beside the twist.

This arrangement gives the effect of three puffs across the top of the crown when combined from the front. Both sides are arranged in the same manner. The hair is drawn loosely back to give a soft appearance about the face and to allow the waves to retain their position.

Any short locks about the forehead are trimmed off in a tight, even fringe and curled slightly. They are to be arranged in short curls at each side of the part, or combed across the forehead, according to their becomingness to the wearer.

The middle part is suited to very youthful faces and those past middle life, but the woman in her prime should experiment before adopting it. A side part is more piquant and imparts a youthful look.

With the return of wide-brimmed hats we are likely to have the return of puffs. They are always admired for the women who must resort to false hair they are the lightest and most convenient substitute for natural locks.

Corset Cover for the Thin Woman

A FIGURE which is deficient in bust development, either from lack of flesh or other causes, must be helped out by some device. Any number of corsets, corset waists and bust forms are on the market, to supply the deficiencies of the too slender woman.

For present styles the fitted corset cover or fitted waist, with inside ruffles, is the most satisfactory garment with which the thin woman can adopt.

These waists are cut to fit a normal figure. The waist, therefore, is made too large across the bust. To fill this extra room ruffles of fine muslin are sewed to the under arm seams and side eyes. These ruffles are made by stitching taps or bands of the fabric to a long piece of fashion muslin, or muslin to form casings. Taps are run through these casings. The ruffle is made as full as the figure requires and the taps are drawn up and tied at the center of the ruffle.

When it becomes necessary to lengthen a waist of this kind the tapes are cutted, and the fullness of the ruffle eased along them. They are stitched with very fine starch and trimmed flat, so that laundering presents no bust form. Waists of this kind are made to fasten either in front or back.

These fastening in front are provided with buttons and button holes. An excellent model, which fastens in the back, does not require either buttons or button holes. The back pieces are sloped down in a "V" shape and finished with tapes which lie scoped the waist. That is, the back pieces cross and overlap, and the tapes are tied in front.

The most convenient way to make a shapely waist of this kind is to buy a ready-made corset cover or brassiere in the market, to supply the deficiencies of the too slender woman.

CONFISCATE THE EDITION.

Newspaper Issues Often Suppressed by the Authorities.

"By order of the royal press court this issue of your paper is hereby confiscated for publishing such-and-such a piece of news." Or, "Your honor, the court considers should not be made public." A policeman, with a sword dangling at his side and holding in his hand an official document, with an imposing seal on it, enters the managing editor's room and delivers the decree.

It is the famous Austrian press censorship and confiscation-mine, carried for short the "Austrian confiscator," at work. Down below the last presses are thundering along on the last few thousand copies of a big circulation. It is 3 o'clock in the morning—too late to "make over" by hearing out the offending article or news item, putting something else in the place and reprinting the entire edition.

From the numerous rooms which make up the editorial sanctum there rolls one "Donnerwetter" and "Verdammt" after another. The managing editor orders a small sheet, not much larger than a handbill, hastily printed, that will tell the subscribers why they will not receive their paper that morning.

This is a scene which has taken place frequently in Vienna newspaper offices lately. One afternoon recently the editions of five evening papers were confiscated. Probably no day goes in the world call tells so many interesting stories of news that never reached their readers as the Viennese.

From an American standpoint of a free press the Austrian press laws, press censorship and "confiscation mine" is about the most absurd and antiquated system in existence. Apparently it was created largely for the purpose of keeping the truth from the public.

In Austria, books, pictures, illustrated catalogues, price lists, handbills, advertisements and advertising literature, newspapers, periodicals and publications which appear occasionally, signs and sign-cards, posters—in fact, everything that conveys meaning to the mind by means of type, pictures or symbols is subject to censorship. Until recently even private calling or "visiting" cards were subject to censorship. The printer had to lay a proof of a card before the "press court" before he could deliver the order.

Any district or superior court may constitute itself a "press court" to pass upon and order the confiscation of any newspaper in its jurisdiction.—Vienna Cor. New York Tribune.

Archaisms in the Authorized Version.

In the real authorized version of 1611, King James' Bible, are a good many archaisms which the printers have since modernized, such as "ought him a hundred pence," "for" for "we," "idoles" for "fools," "fet" for "fetched," "gin" for "gins" (a trap), "mew" for "mews" and "all fat" should be one word at Judges xv 14, "all to broke his head," where, however, the printers have restored the temptation to extract two "tos." In Psalm civ 5, "Great is the Lord and marvelous worthy to be praised," there should be no comma after "marvelous," which is an antiquated qualifying "worthy." This correction has been made in recent prayer books.—London Saturday Review.

Immigrants and Literacy.

Scandinavians hold the world in point of literacy. Among every twenty German immigrants over fourteen years old is found one literate. Of Italians from other nations it is encountered three to found an illiterate among every twenty; three, thirty; eight Irish, fifty; two Welsh, fifty; five Bohemians, seventy-seven; Finnish, 100 Scottish and 143 Scottish, but the proportion among those who come from Scandinavia is one in 250. Among the Lithuanian immigrants and those from southern Italy half of them read no language.—Argonaut.

Possible Definition.

THEY JUST MADE HIM SING.

When Scanlan Wowed Minister Wu and the Chinese Officials.

When W. J. Scanlan was in the show business he invaded Washington on one occasion with a brand new comic opera. In order to give the piece a fine sendoff he formulated the plan of sending free tickets for boxes to the president, the cabinet members and other men high in social life.

"That won't do," one of his newspaper friends told him. "Too common. Do something picturesque. Why don't you go after Mr. Wu, the Chinese minister? If you get him he will bring down a lot of other diplomatic people."

Scanlan fell for the proposition and called at the Chinese legation.

"Want sort of show is this?" asked Mr. Wu.

"It's a comic opera," replied Scanlan. "Any good jokes in it?"

Scanlan said it was full of good jokes.

"Tell me some of them," commanded Mr. Wu.

Scanlan did so, and Wu got such a series of laughs out of them that he sent for his whole establishment, numbering thirty-two people, and made the embarrassed Scanlan tell them all over again.

"Now," continued Wu, "are there any good songs in this show?"

"The show had so many good songs," declared Scanlan, "that we had to throw some of them away."

"All right," said Wu. "Sing me some of the best."

"I sang them," said Scanlan, telling the story afterward "But that wasn't so remarkable. I had to sing 'em. There were thirty-two Chinamen to make me sing 'em. The amusing part of the thing was that all thirty-two of them came to see the show that night."—Popular Magazine.

Her Art Not Appreciated.

Vanishing day at the Royal academy is always an historical and interesting function. Canvases and panels that have been thinly enough to absorb the oil from the whole or portions of the pictures painted upon them have once more come master of "late free painting" to about the most absurd and antiquated "masterpieces" in existence. Apparently it was created largely for the purpose of keeping the truth from the public.

In Austria, books, pictures, illustrated catalogues, price lists, handbills, advertisements and advertising literature, newspapers, periodicals and publications which appear occasionally, signs and sign-cards, posters—in fact, everything that conveys meaning to the mind by means of type, pictures or symbols is subject to censorship. Central Lake Torch: Last Thursday John Sprik, a well known citizen of Banks township, suffered a stroke of paralysis which resulted in his death on Friday. Mr. Sprik was born in Lochem, N. Y., on July 4, 1838. He was married on April 16, 1867 to Miss Jennie Zeedyk. In 1869 they came to the farm in Banks township which has since been their home and at which place he died September 21, 1914, at the age of 76 years, 7 months and 4 days. He leaves a widow and a son Reuben, 15 years old, and three sisters and two brothers, viz: Mrs. John Vandenberg of Banks township, Mrs. J. C. Hock and Mrs. J. Schreutenmaker of Holland, Mich., Joseph Sprik of Newwood and Hiram Sprik of Manton. The funeral was conducted at the home, Rev. A. J. Vandenbrink and Rev. G. G. Haan officiating. Besides the brothers and sisters, other relatives attending the funeral were Mr. Moll and son, of Kalamazoo; Mrs. J. H. Lubbers, of East Saugatuck; Mrs. A. Lucas, of Lucas, Mich., J. C. Hock, of Holland and Ed. Sprik, of Chicago. Mr. Sprik has built up a splendid farm home since coming to this locality 35 years ago, and on his departure, the gathering of a large number of friends to pay the last rites of respect indicated the esteem in which he was held.

BOYS AND GIRLS OF MICHIGAN ARE AGAIN TAKING UP SCHOOL WORK

This month the doors of the thousands of schoolhouses of the state are again opened. About three-fourths of the 900,000 children of school age (between five and twenty years) will take up another year's work. Notwithstanding the fact that with the ending of vacation, freedom will to a certain extent be limited and somewhat arduous tasks imposed, the vast majority of pupils enter upon their work joyfully. Their minds are refreshed, the desire to learn and know which exists in every healthy girl and boy—these are satisfied by the public schools. It is to be lamented that, because of unsympathetic teachers, unpleasant and even injurious conditions of buildings, any boy or girl of the state should dread to enter school this fall. It is the right of every child to have provided satisfactory and attractive buildings and yards, good and efficient equipment, and good teachers. Probably there has never been a time when pupils will be met with better conditions in every respect than those existing today. Never has there been a greater and more general interest in bettering school conditions. At least six thousand school buildings in the state are one room rural schools and there, just as truly as in city schools, is an effort being made to give the pupils interesting work and practical results—work that correlates with the home life.

Wedding Houses.

In olden times certain towns and villages in England used to possess a wedding house, where poor couples after they had been married in church could entertain their friends at a small cost, the only expense being the purchase of such provisions for their guests as they brought with them, the house for the day being given free of payment.—Westminster Gazette.

Dear Uncle.

An artesian well at St. Louis was drilled to a depth of 4,843 feet. At Wheeling a bore of about 5,000 feet and at Pittsburg one of 5,232 feet were sunk for the purpose of exploring the underlying coal and petroleum formations. For more general purposes of geological exploration Germany has sunk the two deepest holes in the world, at Leipsig to the depth of 6,285 feet and at Paruschowitz, in Silesia, a depth of 7,218 feet. The cost of such a hole is not very great, and, if it be in the vicinity of a city, it may be put to many useful purposes. Dear Uncle Sam, why not have a few of them?—New York Sun.

Clever Fear and Misfortune.

During a debate in the Australian house of representatives a labor member charged the ministry with "sitting under the gum-tree of their policy." Clever fear will do it to undermine the democratic institutions of this country. Another member taunted an opponent with "having climbed down the back of a red herring."—London Mail.

CHIVALRY.

Be chivalrous. In nobility of spirit, high courage, magnanimity and gallantry there dwells chivalry. Exercise it. Wherever a child can be helped wherever a stranger can be guided or a friend who is shy set at ease, wherever a weak brother can be saved from falling and shame, wherever an old man's step can be made easy, wherever a servant's position can be dignified in his eyes, is the chance for chivalry to show itself.

WILL DEEPEN THE CHANNELS

Government Dredge Mead Here—Will Deepen Both Channels to a Twenty Foot Depth

Unheralded the U. S. dredge General Mead came into port Saturday evening and early Monday morning she began digging in the upper cut. The Mead coming so quickly on the heels of the engineers' steamer Hancock, with Col. Sanford on board, and the fact that the Colonel made a trip to Boyne City with the Hancock last week, indicates that the "big interests" up the lake have been getting in their work with the Grand Rapids office.

Officers on the dredge say they have orders to dredge both rivers to a depth of twenty feet, which will require the removal of approximately 100,000 cubic yards, which it will take about two weeks to accomplish.

All material is taken to deep water in Lake Michigan.

MASONIC SIGN

Saved the Lives of Fifty Belgians From the Germans

Ostend, Sept. 24.—The power of Freemasonry is illustrated by a story told here by a citizen of Louvain who with the Masonic sign, says he saved fifty of his fellow citizens from being shot to death by German troops.

The group of citizens, according to the recital of the Belgian Mason, had been lined up for execution. The German firing party had their rifles at "present arms" when the narrator gave a Masonic sign. The German officer commanding the firing squad happened to belong to the craft. He recognized a brother Mason and ordered the Louvain Free Mason to leave the ranks.

This meant sparing his life. The Louvain citizen, however, refused, saying "My fellow citizens are no more guilty than I am. If you are going to kill them I shall be killed with them."

The German officer thereupon ordered the release of the entire party.

Moved by Alderman See and seconded by Alderman Cartier that the recommendation of the Board of Public Works be accepted and the Mayor and Clerk enter into contract with Peter Benson for the laying of the water mains on Sherman Street, Lincoln Ave., Shepler Street, and Upright Avenue at 15c per foot, complete, according to the proposal, and the proper bonds be submitted for approval at the next meeting of the council. Motion carried.

There being no further business the council adjourned.

P. E. VANDERMADE, Clerk.

WHY MICHIGAN PEOPLE SHOULD USE MICHIGAN FLOUR MADE FROM MICHIGAN WHEAT

1. It excels all other flours in flavor.
2. It excels all other flours in color (whiteness.)
3. It excels all other flours for bread baking.
4. It excels all other flours for pastry baking.
5. It requires less shortening and sweetening than any other flour.
6. It fills every household requirement.
7. Michigan merchants should sell, and Michigan people should buy Michigan flour made from Michigan wheat for every reason that can be advanced from the standpoint of reciprocity.
8. Michigan flour made from Michigan wheat is all that is above claimed for it, owing to the fact that Michigan climatic conditions are most favorable for the growing of superior milling wheats.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL TEAM DEFEATED

OSBORN VS. FERRIS

Which is the "tax reducing" governor?

Each has a "record." Each has served his commonwealth one term as Chief Executive. Which one would best measure up to the description which Democracy boasted for Tilden and now boasts for Osborn?

Osborn "used his veto" to kill over half a million dollars in appropriations. We do not recall a single Ferris "veto" to a single appropriation bill.

Osborn operated on a low budget—NOT at the expense of his successor, as has been fallaciously and hypocritically charged—but at the expense of extravagance and "ginger bread."

Osborn took his state with heavy current debt. He left it with "money in the bank"—and plenty of it.

He believes in a "budget system" and "centralized purchases and disbursements." They represent state economies which will spell the saving of millions more.

He believes in highest efficiency on low tax levies.

And he practices what he preaches.

What Democracy said for Tilden and what it claims for Glynn, Michigan republicanism may boast for Osborn.

It is the biggest "local" issue in the state campaign.—Grand Rapids Herald.

BUSINESS ON THE SIDE

The fun that Elmer Johnson has on the brain is not all confined to the meat cross on the spire of the Catholic church was struck by lightning, setting fire to the steeple of the edifice. The fire department reached the premises three feet of the spire below the cross was in a blaze. Considerable difficulty was experienced in getting a stream to the blaze, but the roof was finally scaled and the trouble reached with both water and chemical. Short work was then made of it. Damage about $100, covered by insurance. This is the third time this edifice has been struck by lightning. It is a coincidence that the metal cross is the cause of the trouble, and we suggest a change to some non-conducting material.

While the firemen were yet at work at the church a second alarm went in. Lightning set fire to Mr. John Miller's barn on South State street, but the boys got there and extinguished the blaze before much damage was done. Both jobs demonstrated the ability of Chief Marshall's men to meet emergencies. The Charlevoix fire department has again proven itself a credit to the city.

THE NEW LAMPHEAR ICE CREAM FACTORY

The new factory of the Charlevoix Ice Cream Co. went into commission last Saturday, and is developing signs of its justly celebrated product.

The building is 18x50. The work-room proper is provided with drained cement floor. In the rear is the cooler 12x18. The front office room is 10x18, neatly furnished with all modern conveniences.

Several new and up-to-date appliances will be added to the machinery outfit in the spring.

The plant is conveniently located on Clinton street, near Bridge street, and is a credit to the city.

CIRCUIT COURT

An adjourned term of the Circuit Court is on, probably taking up most of the week.

Now on trial, the East Jordan Manufacturing Co. vs. Frank Hudson.

The remainder of the term will be taken up by civil cases.

Traverse City is to have a new industry. It is an apple evaporator plant. The site for the plant has been selected and the work of providing buildings is well in hand. The industry comes without the blare of trumpets, the ringing of bells, the tooting of whistles, or the "efforts" of the professional promoter. The industry comes without a bonus, free site, or the promise of special privileges.

ANNUAL EXHIBIT

Campaign for October Show Inaugurated in Elston House Banquet—Farmers Meet City Folks

The annual agricultural exhibit will occur in Charlevoix October 8th-10th, the date decided last Wednesday evening at an Elston House banquet given by the Charlevoix business men. About forty people sat down to the feast, and it was a very enjoyable occasion. About half of the party were farmers.

Earl Clark, Mr. Paukert, James Willis and Eugene Strout, were appointed a manner in room No. 7 which is located at the head of the first stair-way on the second floor, and when discovered the flames were bursting through the doorway into the corridor. The man who discovered it closed the door and gave the alarm.

All inside were awakened and got out, though Fred Cassle in room No. 1 was over-looked for some time and when he was finally awakened by the firemen he was still sick overcome by smoke.

Starting where it did, in the center of the building, and the fact that the building was steel clad, made it doubly hard to fight the flames successfully and the entire roof was destroyed, but the fine work of the firemen kept it within the building and but little damage was done on the upstairs below the roof.

This was the oldest hotel in the city and has been rebuilt and added to at different times, and is now the most up to date of the hotels in the city. It is equipped with all modern conveniences and has for years escaped and the wooden ones served every purpose.

THE RUSSELL HOUSE BURNED

East Jordan Has Another Fire—Old Time Hotel Destroyed

About 2:30 o'clock this morning, says the East Jordan Enterprise of Sept. 28, fire was discovered in the Russell House on Main Street and before it was gotten under control the interior on the second and third floors was pretty thoroughly gutted by the flames, especially on the south wing.

The fire caught in some unexplained manner in room No. 7 which is located at the head of the first stair-way on the second floor, and when discovered the flames were bursting through the doorway into the corridor. The man who discovered it closed the door and gave the alarm.

All inside were awakened and got out, though Fred Cassle in room No. 1 was over-looked for some time and when he was finally awakened by the firemen he was still sick overcome by smoke.

SETS TRAP FOR DEER

Arrested and Sentenced to Jail For Endangering Human Beings

Alleged to have set one of the most vicious traps for deer ever encountered by the state game warden's department, Ismar Rantanen is serving a sentence in the county jail at Petoskey. Last night, Rantanen was captured at a "salt lick" four miles north of Nagonaba by Deputy Warden Frank Clough, who had found the trap at that place and was lying in wait for the man who had set it. The trap was of steel and weighed twenty-five pounds. Its strength was such that two men standing on the springs could not pry down the jaws. The trap was buried a few inches under ferns and moss, with a small amount of earth thrown on top of it. The wire with which it was fastened to a stump was also concealed. Had a man walked into the trap, as easily might have happened, his release could have been effected only with the aid of several persons. The teeth were more than an inch long, and when closed there was less than an inch space between the jaws. Rantanen was arraigned in justice court and was found guilty.

County Normal Notes

(FRED GREGORY)

Cleo Thorne and Clara Thorsen both of the East Jordan High School, who were enrolled last week, were admitted to the Normal Monday.

County Treasurer Officer, W. T. Bashaw was a visitor at the Normal room one day last week.

The class has made a large collection of milkweed pumps and other insects along with their study of agriculture.

The 1914 pennant was put up in the front of the Normal room in honor of the class of 1914, Friday afternoon along with other decorations.

Near Boyne City an experiment was tried on clearing land. A boo was held and a 40-acre tract was logged, stumped and plowed between seven o'clock in the morning and five o'clock in the afternoon.

Who Banks Your Earnings!
Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the money-lenders who profit by your loss.
This is hardly fair to yourself; after you work for your money, it will repay the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.
Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business when you are prone to envy, thinking they have a monopoly on fortune. Almost without exception they began with no capital but a strong will and an inflexible purpose.
For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.50 a week on six years he had banked $2000—enough to

The Genevieves I Know

By Helen Help

THE GENEVIEVE WHO TURNED BOSS.

Genevieve just lived to read. She sat in the little dining room and waited for Jim, who came in dinner and helped Jenny and Jimmy boy from dishes enough to wash each other's features with the stove poker, and snatched glances at a book she was awfully in love with.

Then she heard James coming and ran and pushed the door to him, also he said, "Hello," and after this ceremonial outburst, passed on into the dining room.

Genevieve got the dinner on the table and kept the children quiet and helped James off with his coat—having hung her hat on from the hall entrance—and did other unimportant things like that and then she sat down at the table and served the children, and, after dinner she bustled them upstairs and put them to bed and came down and cleared the table—for good, so she said, meaning selling all the money he could make anyway—and at last she planted herself beside, lively on the edge of a chair, reaching for her book and took a surreptitious peep.

This peep had to be entirely surreptitious because when she read in the evening, James sulked so that, interrogated on the subject of the "noise of Genevieve's or tidy's, the baby act, cute, he would growl, "Hang books! A woman had better be minding around with a book in her hand isn't worth her salt."

"Genevieve," said James on this occasion with ominous calm, Genevieve, what on earth did you find to interest you in that nonsense?" Genevieve was reading the Wife of Arthur, Mordor's own, and she intended to use it as a means of suffer to the end—and maybe for other things the cause, hidden down in the very depths of her poor soul, was the fact that Genevieve belonged to Celia.

James—recognized daughter of clubs, and Genevieve only joined in a moment of aberration when it seemed to the near-leather couch and turned his back on the assembly, including the suffering Mrs. Fraser, the dear children, and his own Genevieve.

Genevieve ought to have stabbed him with the stove poker? She ought to have taken the rolling pin in hand and insisted that he should arise and be human to her guest? Gracious, of course, she ought, but nobody does a scene.

Well, one day, after a number of years of this watching of James' eye like a well-trained setter point to game, to flame was that what James needed was a flame. And while she was a simple little person, yet at that moment she had sense.

Having seen a great light, Genevieve thought it over with care, took her resolution, gagged, grabbed it hash, and hung on for dear life.

That evening, when James got home, Genevieve was not there. He found a cold snack on the dining room table and the following note:

"Dear James: The children and I are down at the chickee pie supper at the church. Come along if you like a warm meal. Genevieve."

Dot! Well, I should say not! James went to bed hungry.

But the very next evening, after the children were in bed and the work done up, Genevieve read, stolid and unmoved, through a storm of invective raining into bowls.

The next day was club day, and Genevieve stated that evening at dinner that the club would meet in her home the following week. James, hearing of the club for the first time, had a fit. But Genevieve, recognizing her earlier futility, sat tight and said no prayer.

The next time her dearest friend came over in the afternoon, Genevieve decided to "prune home about" a bit and stay to dinner. James simply had to sit up and be civil, because, obviously, nobody cared whether he did or not. Mrs. Fraser was fond of assisting at a crisis, but she was a spunky little person and stood her ground.

And after that Genevieve and James did not. James knew that the handsprings about this sealed of her wedding ring, of her duties, of her children, and the fact that he did not desire to have wandering females who ought to be at home trespassing on his fireside. Yes, they do have such things. You just naturally know they do, little dears, though their wives wouldn't let it get out for all the world.

Genevieve kept as quiet as a mouse all the seven dull days that intervene lots of discontent. Then she sighed (James knew that sigh well, it rolling human bling. You better take things as they come, because it you make the kind of a fuss I am going to take the children and go right straight home to mother.)

It was one of the occasions upon which a wise Genevieve was out on what those ridiculous men might call a bluff, for she wouldn't have gone for all the world.

But never, never, in the rest of his sensible, pleasant-spoken life, did James Bid Genevieve.

Overstraining the Eye.

Few persons realize how much eye trouble comes directly from overstrain—from exposure to light and to too continuous use.

You should not think that just because you are not for eyeglasses you do not have to stop to your work your eyes are not overstrained. For eyes that are neither furnished nor short-sighted can be easily strained. Perhaps the effect of this abuse comes in a dull headache, nervousness or general failure.

The next time you have a headache that you cannot account for stop and think whether you have not abused your eyes the day before. In a surprisingly great number of cases you will recall that the day before the headache you sat up writing letters by an inadequate light after the family had gone to bed; that you insisted on doing needlework on the piazza an hour after the twilight had begun to gather, that you sat up gall the night to read a book.

"Oh, K." of Indian Origin.

Many explanations have been given of the origin of the phrase "O. K." (free extemporly quoted according the Boston Andrew Jackson. He was not much of a scholar and, the story goes, he entitled public papers "O. K." bathing him to be the first letters of "all correct" (oil korrect).

That explanation, however, the Kansas City Star finds hard to believe. A more reasonable one is that General Jackson borrowed the abbreviation from the Choctaw Indians, with which tribe he was well acquainted. That tribe, and the Chickasaws, had no verb corresponding to "to assent, to sympathetic word. "okah," closed positive statements in those languages. "Okah" meant "it is so" or "it is right."

Another theory is that "O. K." was the interpretation put on President Jackson's writing of "O. P.," a general fee of abbreviating "order recorded" in his day.

Standardizing Studies.

Boston is one of four cities which have made a bureau of promotion and educational measurement for the purpose of adopting certain standards. The other cities having such organized systems are Rochester, Dallimore and New Orleans. New York has a bureau of investigation, for the standardization of schools, and the question has also been raised as to whether it would not be possible to institute a merit system of promotion. In the standardization of studies it is interesting to glance at the work done in regard to spelling. Lists from all sources of words which children in their work have been obtained from the teachers, and from these the department proposes to fix for each grade a minimum list of words which each child should know how to spell before he can be promoted to the next grade.

NEGLECTING PLAIN DUTY

By WARREN A. CANDLER, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"The principles of the Bible are the foundations of human freedom."—Horace Greeley.

When the children of Israel were near to Canaan, the tribes of Reuben and Gad desired to be allowed to have their portion of the promised land on the east side of the Jordan because they were devoted to cattle raising and the region was "a land for cattle." The great lawgiver and leader of the Hebrews received their request with a rebuke inspired by a desire to avoid the ward of the comment, which were to follow them down to the Jordan, and be charged thus with that cowardly purpose. But they answered assuring him that such was not their motive, and pledging him that they would bear their part of the conflict "until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance." Then Moses acceded to their request, promising them the greatest blessings if they would fulfill their pledges, but adding, "But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the Lord: and be sure your sin will find you out."—Numbers 32:23.

And their sin did find them out. In the days of Deborah they refused to go to war against Sisera, and therefore made themselves a reproach before all Israel. Neglecting duty, they set an example of unfaithfulness which contributed to the failure of the chosen people to make a perfect conquest of Canaan, which finally led to the expulsion of the nation by its Assyrian celebrators and its ultimate overthrow.

The sin which finds men out now entirely is the sin of neglecting plain duty. That leads to all other sins, and draws after it the most painful consequences.

Parents who neglect the right training of their children bear sorest penalties at last. So Eli found it. When his sons Hophni and Phinehas did evil, he restrained them not, and his negligence resulted in their grossest wickedness, the defeat of Israel, the capture of the ark of God by the Philistines, and the death of both the weak father and the wicked sons.

Communities may neglect their duties to the outcast and forlorn people in their midst, and for their sin suffer penalties and bring into their homes moral disorders worse than the breath of pestilence.

Nations may incur disasters from neglecting their obligations to mankind, and their sin will surely find them out.

In the final judgment those on the left, who are bidden to depart under divine condemnation, hear the avowal of their rejection in the words, "I was a stranger and ye took me not in; naked and ye clothed me not; sick and in prison and ye visited me not." Their penalty for not so ministering to others is that they have neglected to do. Our sins of omission most surely find us out.

A MARVELOUS BOOK.

(By HENRY ALLSTRUTH BUCHTEL, L. L. D., president of Ohio Wesleyan University, former Governor of Colorado.)

"There is a book worth all other books which was printed upon Patrick Henry, revolutionary patriot.

For educated men, the Bible is the greatest wonder in the world of books. The British and Foreign Bible society since 1804 has published 240,000,000 volumes of some part or the whole of the Bible. The American Bible society, since 1816, has published 100,000,000 volumes. The record of other publishers is so great that the total list for the past century probably approximates 500,000,000 volumes. The British museum holds the largest collection of books in the world, 4,000,000 volumes, yet more copies of the Bible, in whole or in part, have been published for every year of the past century than the entire list of books in that great museum. In every city of Ohio, the Bible is the best seller in every year in the Bible.

In 1911 the American Bible society published a chronological list of versions of the Bible, beginning with the Latin Bible which was the first book printed with movable type, and the astonishing fact was brought out that the Bible, in whole or in part, has now been translated into 642 languages and dialects. The New Testament of Tyndale in 1525, followed by the whole Bible in 1530, is reported as the one translation into English. There have been very many other translations into English, but this widely extended language counts just one in the list of 642. Luther's translation of the Bible made between the years 1456 and 1467, inclusive. The other half have been made since 1868. Evidently the most up-to-date book in the world is the Bible. A modern author who translated into two or three languages is a marked man, but the Bible was translated into eight languages and dialects in 1807, into four in 1908; into six in 1809; into nine in 1910, and into seventeen in 1911. Has any other book in the world's history been translated into as many languages and dialects as was the Bible in 1911?

In most of this translation, through the centuries, the scholarly missionaries have taken barbarous and uncouth languages, mere wandering voices, and have reduced them to written forms. The translation of the Bible has been the beginning of the history of literature for most of the tribes and races of men. For educated men forever the Bible will be the greatest wonder in the world of books.

FAMILY RELIGION.

By JOHN N. MCCORMICK, D. D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church.)

"Every human care and human woe in the world has been met by the Bible. Men have lived by it, suffered by it, died by it. Men will do the world, a book for all time."—Rob. Ingersoll.

In the early days recorded in Bible history it was very largely true that the priest in his own house. The head of the family was its religious spokesman and interpreter. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are thus represented, and Job of a later date, along with the development of public worship, the undeveloped duty of family worship was still taught and practiced. When we read, "All Judah stood before the Lord with their little ones, their wives and their children," we see the head of the congregation as a whole at a time of general assembly. Thus of the patriarchs, each composing a congregation in his family.

So nowadays, when we talk about the family pew in church we like to think of the family worship at home. It is possible that we are forgetting our duty to our children when we fail to return thanks only when the clergy are present.

Are we neglecting the hallowed custom of family prayers?

Are we so hard that we no longer believe the old adage, "Little and many blessings on man's journey?"

Are we, while trying to Christian, addresses his letter to him and "to the church in thy house." Do we still like to have our children grow up with religious services? Would our friends think it queer if they were invited to come around, not for dinner, but for family worship, not for bridge, but for an hour of preaching or of worship?

Certainly the Bible stands for family religion—that kind of an unashamed and domesticated religion which makes a prayer as much in place in the home as it is in the church, and the worship of God in the house as well and as regular as in His worship in the sanctuary. America would be a better and a happier land if every family before the combination, hat off, and hands clasped in prayer.

"He was murmuring, 'O Gawd, help me! O Gawd, help me! Help me! Help me!

Mr. Perkins' Lawn Mower

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1904, by Associated Literary Press.

Mr. and Mrs. Perkins had been sitting on the front steps of their home for ten minutes when she carelessly queried:

"Mr. Perkins, please turn to that diary of yours and see what you find recorded under date of Feb. 20."

"With pleasure, Mrs. Perkins. Are you on track of something?"

"Just a little something."

"Well, here's the date."

"Do you find anything about a lawn mower?"

"I do. It says that I will either have a lawn mower before the 1st of April or perish in the attempt."

"Is it the 1st of April?"

"Oh, yes."

"Have you got the lawn mower yet?"

"Not yet."

"I didn't know but that you had it hidden away in a coattail pocket and was going to bring it out and surprise me. They have been mowing their lawns all around."

"Mrs. Perkins," he said after drawing a long breath, "I owe an explanation."

"Not in the least, Mr. Perkins. That is simply your way of doing business."

"On the evening of Feb. 20, when I entered the words recorded here, I fully and firmly meant to purchase a lawn mower of the latest pattern at an early date in the spring."

"Poor man!"

"But it so happened that I got hold of some vital statistics in a newspaper."

"How terrible!"

"There was a list of deaths by heart failure. It numbered hundreds."

"And you did not want to die of heart failure?"

"I had no great longing to. I went to our family doctor and put the case up to him, and he shooted at me:

"'Perkins, are you a born fool?'

"'No.'

"'Then don't talk about pushing a lawn mower around. With your heart the way it is it would mean sure death to you.'"

"While if you continued to simply play poker you might live a hundred years," said Mrs. Perkins.

"Come, come, my dear—this is not a matter for sarcasm. There are other risks besides heart failure."

"Sweating profession is one."

"Suppose that some enemy of mine throws a bomb amid the grass and I run the mower against it?"

"Awful! Awful!"

"Mrs. Perkins, I am afraid that you don't understand the situation. In Albany last week an ex-president died was moving his lawn there was a sudden explosion."

"But don't they generally come suddenly?"

"There was a sudden explosion, and he was killed dead."

"Poor man! He shouldn't have been killed more than half dead! Go on, Mr. Perkins. Did the boiler of the lawn mower burst, or did some one fire a cannon at him?"

"The machinery got heated up, I believe. He was pushing it too fast."

"A thing that could never happen to you, Mr. Perkins."

"And again, at Syracuse a man who was lawn mowing was struck dead by a thunderbolt."

"He must have had a nickel in his pocket to attract it."

"And, Mrs. Perkins, with all these warnings hanging over me I thought it best—

"Not to get a mower, of course."

"Something that way, my dear."

"And not to hire a man to come with his own mower?"

"Have I the right to subject him to such risks?"

"Of course not. Just let the grass grow as high as the fence—as high as the trees. We shall want to camp out there a little later, and the higher the grass the less of the house you see."

"Mrs. Perkins, you are brilliant in strategy," said Mr. Perkins.

"Grass seems feel high enough with probably high. If you were to use a sickle or scythe on the lawn would it give you heart failure?"

"I spoke of that to the doctor. He said he wouldn't mind about it, but would look up the matter and report."

"And when can we look for this report?"

"By December or January. He is very busy man, you know."

"Yes, I know, and so are you, Mr. Perkins. how much oil does a lawn mower consume in a day?"

"Quite a little."

"And what is the cost?"

"A dollar and a half."

"But why didn't you use this as an argument?"

"I knew I had forgotten something."

"And you had forgotten the fact. A mower would last over a month, will it?"

"About a month."

"And then it must be thrown away? Why didn't you make that statement to strengthen your case?"

"I wish to add it now."

"You would have to hire a garage to stable it in, wouldn't you?"

"By John. Yes."

"Mr. Perkins," said Mrs. Perkins as she rose up to go in, "we won't have a lawn mower. It is too dangerous and costly. We won't have a sickle nor yet a scythe. We won't meddle with the lawn."

"But—

"Oh, just write down in your diary that in a couple of years you'll buy and bring home a five-cent tack hammer and we'll consider the subject closed."

You may break, you may shatter,
The vase if you will,
But somehow the odor
Will linger in it still.
—Thomas Moore-Union.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A Memorial Wreath.

Roses for remembrance bring we for our wreath,
Trailing laurel for victory, cypress for our grief.
Twine them in and twine them out,
Twine them all around about.

Just a sprig of rue for grace, lilacs lavender Make out your aching wreath fuller still of sweet delight.
Twine it in and twine it out,
Twine it all around about.

Heroes brave were born in gray; valiant sisters strewn in blue
Tears we shed for one and all as their unknown graves we rove
Scatter in and scatter out,
Scatter all around about.

Thoughts of conflict are forgot as we join the veterans' trust,
Marching with unflagging steps round the graves of soldier dust.
Lying in and lying out,
Lying all around about.

Apples of Old England.

The Romans took some apple trees to England, although they were not the first apple tree there. Many apple trees were planted in England during the middle ages. One specially fine kind was the costard apple. The "costermongers" were street peddlers who sold costard apples. This apple does not exist now.

The "pippins" were grown from the pips or seeds of the apples. The golden pippin is old and very famous.

After many apple trees were destroyed in the Wars of the Roses. Henry VIII. sent to Flanders for slips. He made a law by which any one who cut off the bark of this tree was punished.

Other nations often sent to England for the famous kinrish "redstreaks."

Seven Days' Game.

Name each player for one day of the week—Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, etc.—and ask them to stand in a circle facing the side of the room or a fence. The leader throws a small rubber ball against the wall, at the same time calling the name (day) of the player whom he wishes to catch it. If Monday is called that player must have the ball safe in his hands by the time the leader can count ten, counting aloud. If he misses the leader recovers the ball and throws it again, calling some other player.

If there are more than seven players use months—January, February, March, etc.—instead of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Lead Pencil Wood.

Every year 250,000,000 pencils are manufactured in the United States, and since virtually the only wood used for their manufacture is red cedar, the supply is rapidly becoming exhausted.

Red cedar wood has a straight grain, is soft, and free from knots and other imperfections when properly grown. No good substitute for its use in the pencil industry has been found, and it is doubtful if any other industry having wood for its foundation is so dependent upon a single species of wood as the pencil industry is dependent upon the red cedar.

The Days of the Week.

Long ago the days of the week were named after the five planets, the sun, five, seven, beginning with the Saxons. The ancient Greeks also gave some modern Greeks, the Slavs and the Finns. A great number of other days Quakers hold to it, and it was a common one in the days of the apostles and so continued down to the fourth century. Orthodox Quakers use the system on the ground that the gods and goddesses for whom the days are named were not the most edifying persons in the universe.

Hidden Game.

1. Look! On top! A sabin is walking over the mountains.
2. Sugar, net price is 5 cents a pound.
3. The wind blows and I am on deck.
4. I will rub your hands if they are cold.
5. You must get up early to see the sun rise.
6. John was so pale and thin.

Answer—Look, 1; Sugar, 2; Sabin, 3; diamond; 4; ruby; 5; pearl; 6; opal.

Greenhouse.

The term greenhouse as applied to money is said to have been first used by the Hon. S. P. Chase, secretary of the treasury, to the legal tender notes first issued by the United States government in 1862, during the civil war, in allusion to the color of ink used in printing their reverse sides. This tint was first produced by a Guardian and is very difficult to counterfeit or to photograph.

The Agile Rhinoceros.

Notwithstanding his unwieldy shape and short legs the rhinoceros is one of the most agile of beasts. A horseman can scarcely manage to overtake him, and in strength he is perhaps surpassed by any animal in the forest. In single combat no animal but the elephant and tiger can "gather him. To kill a rhinoceros a rifle ball must strike it just behind the shoulder.

Charade.

Answer—Lark, spur—larkspur.

The Wolverene State.

Michigan is often called the Wolverene State in allusion to the great number of wolverenes which roved over it in early days.

The Retort Courteous.

"So you were committed for contempt of court, were you?" asked the visitor.

"Yes," said the ardent anti-reporter. "You see, after the judge had sat through listening me on my dexterity behavior I snapped my fingers and said 'Pudge' as loud as I could. He gave me ten days."

"Dear me!" said the visitor. "And what did you do while you were in jail?"

"Oh, I emboldened the word 'Pudge' on a solid medium and sent it with my compliments to the judge after I got out," said the lady, with an ambrosia smile.—Harper's Weekly.

Or may be it is not so,
Will others heading through the flounce
As easy as the dawn.
A dainty dainty petticoat,
A ruff and frosty lace,
With dear, delicious satin bows
To keep the frills in place.

Long, lovely petticoat!
That flounced round her feet
And above a tantalizing glimpse
Of slender ankles met
And flashing ripples on the rose
Of slippers trim and small.
For since the narrow skirts came in
She wears is seen at all.

"No, he didn't."

"Well, what in the world then did he ask?"

"He wanted to know what your income was!"—Yonkers Statesman.

NEGOTIABLE PAPER

Bills of Exchange, Bank Checks and Promissory Notes.

IN A CLASS BY THEMSELVES.

These Convenient Substitutes For Specie, Which May Pass From Hand to Hand as Readily as Coin, Differ Radically From Other Contracts.

We may speak truthfully of the strength of paper, yet how like a paradox it sounds! From childhood we have been accustomed to take frequent liberties with the flimsy material, to fold and rend it according to our fancy or whim, and now to speak of it as strong! But strong it is, and the business world of America is bound into a cohesive whole by the fibers of bill files of notes, checks and drafts which pledge the honor and credit of its citizens.

In this brief article we shall attempt to define three kinds of commercial paper—bills of exchange, promissory notes and bank checks—that are all business contracts. They are contracts, however, as to which business convenience decrees that the form shall be just as important as the substance.

If I am hiring Regan the contractor to build a house and we fall out over our agreement the court will consider every possible point connected with the transaction in order to determine what our mutual intentions really were. But if I employ Regan to do the work and give him a promissory note in payment of his services, our rights, so far as that note is concerned, are largely determined by its exact form in which I issued it, taken in connection of course with the surrounding circumstances—that is, whatever written additions were afterward made to it in the course of business.

The vital feature of bills of exchange—or drafts, as they are generally called—promissory notes and bank checks is their negotiability—that is to say, they are a special class of contracts which are so framed and so favored by the law that if certain rules are adhered to they can be passed from man to man ...ulle as freely and far more conveniently than actual cash.

An ordinary contract may be assigned or transferred from one to another. Thus if I have agreed to furnish a large factory with building stones I may assign my right to be paid for doing so to Bourdon for a valuable consideration. Suppose, though, that I misrepresented some important feature of my building machines to the Success Textile company, which ordered them, and after I have transferred my rights in the contract to Bourdon they find it out. Under such circumstances the textile company can employ the defense of misrepresentation against Bourdon just as readily as they could against me, for he has always stepped into my shoes and is no better position than I would be had I remained a party to the contract.

Now, this is just where drafts, notes and bills, or, as they are often called collectively, negotiable instruments of commercial paper, differ radically from other contracts. While still in the hands of the original parties who gave them birth they are subject to any defenses which one may have against the other, so that if Carson gives a promissory note for $100, due in sixty days, to Halsted and then finds that Dowsett owing! Halsted Halsted really owes him $500 be may at the end of the sixty days refuse to pay Halsted the note and demand instead $400 from him. Suppose, however, that Halsted has meanwhile sold the note to Haggerty, who knows nothing of his debt to Carson, can Carson still set off Halsted's debt and refuse to pay Haggerty the note? Undoubtedly he cannot do so.

Such a case illustrates the distinguishing characteristic of commercial paper. Like a which has flown from the parent nest, it is freed from any defenses which the original parties to it may have, just as soon as it has been purchased in good faith and for a valuable consideration, by some third person.

In every other form of contract the rule is otherwise; land leases to Dardess from owner to owner, the assigned mortgage conveys no better title to the purchaser than the mortgage had to give; but for the purely practical reason that in trade there must be some convenient representative of credit, which may pass from hand to hand as readily as actual coin, a general agreement and strength of custom among merchants have the three forms of credit paper—the bill of exchange, the promissory note and the bank check—all of which must, in the words of a great jurist, as couriers without baggage, and to all of which an innocent purchaser, for value, gets an absolutely clear title.—Saturday Evening Post.

A Peculiar Worm.

An animal peculiar to Java on the high and low water marks on the Japanese coasts is a mud worm called salcola. It occupies a hard, tiny tube of its own making and gets its food when the high tide comes up over its hidden place by throwing out a hard bushy with tentacles and sifting the grains of water loaded with minute particles of nutriment. Out of the wriggling creature the Alors people make soup, which is true vermicelli, not a paste imitation of "little worms," and is said to taste as holly as it smells.

Compensation.

"I must have an iron bedstead," declared a tourist at an inn.

"Mr. answered Boniface, "I am sorry there isn't a single iron bedstead in the house. But you will find the mattresses very soft and yed, sir!"—Lon. Jon Tit-Bits.

Forever.

She treated him as if he had
Been some unworthy thing
It seemed, indeed, to make her glad
To see him worrying.

She seemed to study how to make
His misery doubly sad,
She seemed to want his heart to break
His sorrow made her glad

At last, believing her to be Unworthy and unkind
He ceased his pleading, sensibly
Declining to be blind.

The moment that he turned away
And seemed to cease to care
She hurriedly called to him to stay
And wilted in despair.

He tenderly forgave her when
His love was begun to flow,
Kissed it to with smile and moan—
It was a kiss of woe.

And he thinks he is making a wonderful hit
When he tells you it isn't so bad.

Sing her, the professional optimist!

ONLY WOMAN FOREST FIRE LOOKOUT IN THE UNITED STATES

By ROBERT H. MOULTON

ALT, alone, 6,444 feet above sea level, on top of Klamath peak in Siskiyou county, California, a young woman for months at a time during the prevalence of the forest fire season last year, did her part, and did it well, in the effort the government is making to preserve the forests of the country from destructive flames which have for years cost causes an annual property loss of $25,000,000 and cost each year an average of 75 human lives.

She is Miss Hallie M. Daggett, and she is the only woman lookout employed by the forest service. As soon as the season of forest fires gives in this year, Miss Daggett will again be found at her post. Perched in her small cabin on top of the mountain peak 7,000 feet dizzy as land yearl, to scan the vast forest in every direction as far as she can see by naked eye and telescope, by day for smoke, and for the red glare of fire by night and report the result of her observations by telephone to the main office of the forest patrol miles and miles away.

Few women would care for such a job, fewer still would seek it, and still less would be able to stand the strain of the infinite loneliness, or the roar of the mountain storms which sweep the peak, or the menace of the wild beasts which roam the heavily wooded ridges. Miss Daggett, however, not only seemed to be well suited for the station, but secured it after considerable wrestling, and now she declares that she enjoyed the life and was most interested in the work she had to do.

Perhaps the call of the wild is in her blood. Her parents are pioneers by rather. John Daggett, having crossed the isthmus in 1852, and her mother, a mere baby, being taken across the plains from Kentucky the same year. Miss Daggett was born at the Klamath mine, in the shadow of the peak on which the lookout station is perched. She spent most of her early years out of doors rides and tramping over the hills with her brother, so that it was natural that, with her born love of the forests, she should be anxious to take part in the fight which the forest service men are making for the protection of the forests. Debarred by her sex, however, from the kind of work which most of the service men are doing, she saw no opportunity until lookout stations were established, and then after earnest solicitation secured the place she held so well.

Some of the service men predicted that after a few days of life on the peak she would tell friends that she was frightened by the loneliness and the danger, but she was full of pluck and high spirit, and day after day as her boss eyes ranged the hills which constitute the Salmon river watershed, and she made her daily reports by telephone, she grew more and more in love with her work. Even when the telephone wires were broken and when for a long time she was cut off from communication with the world below, she did not lose heart. She not only filled the cabin with all the skill which a trained man could have shown, but she appointed when the fire season opened a few weeks ago.

Miss Daggett's earliest recollection, she says, although with smoke-clouded summer days and fires that wandered over the country at their own sweet will, unchecked unless they happened to interfere seriously with someone's claim or woodpile, when they were usually turned off by backing and boxing in another direction, she continue their mischief until they either died for lack of fuel or were quenched by the fall rains. Consequently, she grew up with a fierce hatred of the devastating fires, and welcomed the force which arrived to extinguish them. But and the lookout stations were installed did there come to her a chance to do what had for the time been a man's job; although she and her sister had frequently been able to help on the small things, such as extinguishing spreading camp fires, or carrying supplies to the firing line.

Then there was a misunderstanding and controversy of no officials in her district, she was given the position of look-out at Eddy's Gulch station in the Fourth district of the Klamath national forest, and entered upon her work the first day of June 1913, with a firm determination to make good, for she knew that the appointment of a woman was rather in the nature of an experiment and currently felt that there was a great deal that she could do, and had been willing to give her the chance.

It was a swift change in three days, from San Francisco civilization and sea level, to a solitary cabin nearly 6,000 feet elevation and three hours hard climb from anywhere. But in spite of the fact that almost the very first question asked by everyone is: "Isn't it awfully lonesome up there?" Miss Daggett declares that never for a moment, after the first half-hour following her arrival, did she long for the pack animals, when she had a chance to look around, did she feel the slightest desire to retrace her steps. While she had been on the peak before in her early rambles, she had never realized it as a home, and in her pet dreams had always been of a log cabin, and here was an ideal one, brand new the sun over before, and in a spot where it could be wished, while outdoors, all outdoors, was a grander floor and ceiling than any cabin in the land can boast. It was a prospect of glorious freedom from four walls and a roof.

Klamath peak is not really a peak in the conventional sense of the word, but it is rather the culmination of a long series of ridges running up from the watersheds of the north and south forks of the Salmon river. The highest point in the district makes it, however, an ideal spot for a station. Miss Daggett describes it as the hub of a wheel with the lines of ridges as spokes, and an unbroken rim of peaks encircling around it, some eternally snow-capped, and some bare of snow for more than itself.

To the east there is a shoulder of snowy Shasta and an unseen neighbor lookout on Eagle peak; to the south, the high, jagged sides of Trinity country, and, just discernible with the glasses, a shining new cabin on Packer's peak; to the west, behind Orleans mountain with its ever-varied contour, a faint glimpse of the shining Pacific shows with a tremendous sweep, and all in between is a seeming wilderness of ridges and gulches, making up what is said to be one of the finest mountain views in the whole of the West.

"Bird and animal life were also very plentiful," she says in her report. "Filling the air with songs and chatter, coming to the doorstep for food, and often invading the cabin itself. I positively declined to assign a cat on account of its destructive intentions on small life—a pair of owls proving satisfactory and much more entertaining, besides being as watchers as well. Frequently deer fed around the cabin in the morning, and there was a small bear down by the spring, besides several larger ones whose tracks I often saw on the trail. In addition to these a couple of porcupines helped keep me from becoming lonesome, by using varmint traps which I had to find a way into the cabin at night.

"All these animals being harmless, it had never been my custom to carry a gun in so-called western fashion, until one morning I discovered a big rattlesnake crawl out on the trail, and then in deference to my family's united request, I buckled on the orthodox weapon, which had been accumulating dust on the cabin shelf, and proceeded to be courageous, but to no avail, as the beast did not again return.

"At many of the stations the question of wood and water is a serious one on account of this elevation; but I was especially favored, as wood lies about in all shapes and quantities, only waiting for an axe to convert it into suitable lengths, while water (mineral) could be melted from the snow banks which lingered until the last of July, although it did dwindle a little and to go far water with a shovel. In addition to a bucket, Later the supply was packed in canvas sacks from a spring and water hole, which I found in the timber. This was always a job roughly by anyone coming up on horseback, but I had to make the lightest efforts of the guards who passed that way, and my few visitors. It was always easy to keep the pot boiling. My sister brought me my supplies and mail from time every week, a distance of nine miles."

The daily routine of life at Miss Daggett's lookout area small, merely consisting of an early morning and late evening tramp of half a mile to the point of the ridge, where the trees obscure the north view of the cabin, and a constant watch on all sides for a trace of smoke. A watch of this nature soon becomes an instinct according to Miss Daggett, for the Gulch herself offers a vantage to the sight for a look around. In fact, she soon became to feel, as she expresses it, that the lookout is "an crimes of prevention." Then there are three daily reports to be sent to the district headquarters in town, to prove that everything is serene, and extra reports if they are not, and lastly a little, very little, housework to do.

Not a very busy day, as judged by our modern standards of rush, but a lookout's motto might well be "They also serve who only stand and wait." And there is always the great map spread out at one's feet to study by new light and shadows while waiting, and the ever-busy phone with its summons and its chance for a human voice within hearing, so that one cannot wander far.

That phone, Miss Daggett says, with its gradually extending poles, made her feel exactly like a big spider in the center of a web, with the fires for flies, and that feeling was certainly tempted to exactly the speedy fate of the other unworthy prey. Through all the days up to the close of the term on November 5, when a light snow put an end to all danger of fires, she felt an ever-growing sense of responsibility, which finally became to be almost a feeling of proprietorship, resulting in the desire to protect her domain from any harm to her "door-yard."

The sense of loneliness and isolation was brought vividly to Miss Daggett's mind one afternoon soon after her arrival, when an extra heavy electrical storm, which broke over her caused one of the electrical arresters on the outside of the cabin to burn, an unprecedented occurrence, and she was cut off from the world for a few hours.

Miss Daggett describes it as the hush of silence and set things aright. They close like ones, she says, when a man who has been under a law for safety, but it wasn't quite so funny at the time.

There seems, however, to be very little actual danger from these storms, in spite of the fact that they are very common in the district at high elevation. One so so became accustomed to the roar of the wind, Miss Daggett says, that it has damage these scenes cause by starting fires lies their chief interest to the lookout. For instance, a tree was struck by lightning, among the rags of logs which arise in their wake, the small cuff of smoke, which rolls and expands into a formidable spot, generally it shows at once, but in one instance there was a lapse of almost two weeks before the fall of the smoldering top fanned up enough smoke to be seen.

At night the new fires show up like tiny candle flames, and are easily spotted against the dark background of the ridges but are not easy to exactly locate for an immediate report. Upon the speed and accuracy of this report, however, depends the efficiency of the service as was proved by the summer's record of extra small acreage burned, in spite of the fact that it was a dry year.

To the electrical storms Miss Daggett adds, as attributed to her lonely life, the fancies, the wonder and chilling alike are daily feeling more responsible for the preservation of the forests entrusted to her, and although some still hold to the same views as one oldtimer, who made the comment, when learning that a woman was assigned, that he guessed that was the Almighty's way of giving the forest a chance against the women, seems to be almost gone, and the rising of forest service men and women to be a fact, and the forests are safer for on the limits of that idea.

COULD NEVER FORGET CRIME

Washington Man Surrenders Fourteen Years After He Had Slain Neighbor for Small Offense.

After eluding officers for more than fourteen years, during which time an active search was conducted for him and a reward offered, for his arrest, Samuel N. Clemens, formerly a prominent farmer in this county, surrendered W. L. Dale, a Collax postman, and gave himself up. Clemens was wanted for a homicide, committed near Palouse, January 7, 1900, which aroused great feeling in this district.

Clemens, who is now sixty years of age, told the authorities that he had been suffering mental agony because of his crime and had been unable to live an normal life. He was placed in the county jail after a long conference with H. M. Harperson, prosecuting attorney.

January 26, 1900, Clemens, then a prosperous farmer, shot and killed George Boland, a young man whom he suspected of having taken his daughter Ethel away from home. Ethel was a school teacher, and was the idol of her father's wishes. The daughter and another girl were with Boland and a friend in a buggy after the dance when Clemens rode up and shot Boland. Killing him instantly.

Clemens then disappeared. Posses were sent after him and the surrounding country was thoroughly searched. No trace was ever found, although a reward of $500 was offered for his arrest. J. L. Cassel, at present a real estate dealer at Tekoa, was sheriff at the time of the murder and led the search and hunt for Clemens. Other officers also participated in the search. Mystery since the crime.

When he arrived at Colfax from Spokane, Clemens refused to state where he had concealed himself. He expressed repentance for his crime and said he had lived a life of misery. Dale, but had been prevented from doing so by the recollections of his crime. Spokane (Wash.) Dispatch to the New York Sun.

Jesus Can Heal

Rev. FARLEY E. ZARTMANN, D. D.
Secretary of Extension Department
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

"Take ye away the stone." Mark when had the withered hand, stand forth. Stretch forth thine hand." Mark 3:3, 5.

This miracle was performed by Jesus on the Sabbath day, while his enemies watched him to see whether he would heal on that day, that they might accuse him. And still Jesus is performing the miracle of healing the sick, even his enemies being witnesses.

This command is a demand to a man who was sure he could do it, and who had not the strength to do it. It is a call for the adventure of faith, even as Abraham was called to go out and do so, not knowing whither he went. It is a call to do the impossible and disclosed the source of power to do it, revealing the unsuspected, human Jesus as the one able to do it, a man with a withered hand. Stand forth. Stretch it forth. Whoa as the other. And Jesus. What a gospel the man received. What a Savior it revealed! How it rebukes our faithless! God says is better than good advice. This man needed good news; he got it; he believed it; he received it; he rejoiced in it; so may you.

Helplessness.

There was a man there which had a withered hand. This is a typical case, an illustration of what Jesus Christ can do for this and other spiritual disorders and diseases set forth by all his cases of healing. And no case ever is too hard for the great physician. There was only one thing wrong with this man, he was by so means the worst in Capernaum. A withered hand is not so bad as leprosy. But the man was helpless. Tradition says he was a carpenter; what could he do with a withered hand?

What is your condition before God? You may think it only as insignificant as a withered hand, but you are a sinner. The withering of the muscles, the paralysis of nerve, is no more disastrous to bodily affect than the blighting and enfeebling power of sin is destructive of all holy, elegant, service toward God. Your poverty of life, your feeble sensibilities with reference to righteousness, your faint or no desires for a godlike life—how disgusted you must be at your weakness! And if your right hand is withered you know it, and other people know it, and you sit with it and you out. Your sin makes you helpless, your work is useless; and your testimony is fruitless. May the presence of Christ help you to see this condition, and vital is the helplessness of a withered hand. Remember that Christ said, "Ye shall deliver me from this body of death?"

Hope.

Christ's gracious presence brought every hope to that afflicted, helpless sufferer. So far as the record goes, Christ's gracious intervention was solicited. But he was willing to heal for, and help, and heal the despairing. Do you not remember the man in the "pool of Bethesda? When Jesus saw him he said, "Wilt thou be made whole?" He seeks out the sick, the sinful, the sore distressed. He knows about the sheep that has strayed, he goes after it until he finds it. The sinner may be content to "sin that the Savior seek the sinner—blessed be his name. That is my sister's hope in the dark night of my life; that is the comfort in my hour of sorrow; that is my joy when I see others in sorrow and sin and sorrow my soul. "But God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Thank God for one in whom we may hope. He is here, just now, facing us, and for the very same purpose. He desires to heal incompetentness, he says, "He me to the hope.

My hope is built on nothing less
Than Jesus' blood and righteousness
On Christ, the Solid Rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sand."

Healing.

How simple is the command to the man. Stand forth. Christ said the man on his lowest level, taking him just as he was. No change, no improvement, and no new feeling was asked, nothing except to set at cross and between Christ bade, "Stand forth. The man could do that, and he heard, "Stretch forth thine hand." and so it was, but also it was the step from mere helpful possible, you cannot save yourself, but you can take the first step which helping grace provided by the death of Jesus. Of course Satan says, Do not stand forth; the crowd will laugh at you, and that Jesus will deceive you. Stand forth. Jesus is in it, and you must.

Stretch forth thine hand. But that is impossible, you say. But the only way to overcome was the obedience of faith. Christ saves by the impartation of power, but with the concurrence of human effort. The man could not stretch forth his hand, but he did it because he took Jesus at his word. Not waiting for feeling in the withered hand, not even most earnest praying. Just courage to act at Christ's command, to act without feeling, or in fact opposition to it. "And he did so; and his hand was restored whole as the other."

As they went they were cleansed. It is a splendid illustration of the obedience of faith. By this faith we lay hold of the Saviour's promise, Hebrews 11:6. Christ's Blood is the New York Sun.

The Onlooker

By HENRY HOWLAND

UNCLE HENRY and the SCIENTISTS

The scientists keep right along a-digging after trouble.

Here's what he says this wonderful best home day, John Howland:

Another scientist says that the sun is cooling off and shrinking.

One of 'em claims some time there'll be no more sun to rise and set.

Then there's comes to pass about twelve hundred million years from now.

But what's the use of settin' down and fretting, anyhow?

I read somebodies the other day, some time back, that the world was made in 4004 B.C.

That in four million years from now the world will be in the middle of the sun.

The stars, he says, are wasting down in the country, slow but sure.

Although as yet it's pretty hard to notice where it's hurtin'.

They tell us what would happen if somebody hit the sun.

But still the world runs on about the way it always was.

As far as I'm concerned, I can't see any sense in fretting

About a future dying up or some fundamental settlin'.

The scientists, it seems to me, are always a-worrying

All kinds of future trouble, but no two of 'em agree.

I wonder why they don't let up—don't ease a bit, anyhow.

And just pitch in and help to keep things running smooth now.

Another Chance for Stage Realism.

Plays that exhibit the inner workings of institutions with which the public is not familiar are immensely popular at this time. Machine shops, newspaper composing-rooms, wireless telegraph offices and police department executive processes have recently been staged with great success. Why doesn't some playwright provide a new thrill by furnishing a drama in which a real operation for appendicitis is performed on the stage?

Friendly Advice.

"Author! Author!" yelled the people.

"Listen," said the young playwright. "Take the world and all of them and make a speech."

"Don't do it," replied a stage hand who had a kind face. "The fellows that are yellin' 'Author' are sorry in the front row and we have heavy canes."

NOT WITH MALICE.

"Look here," said the head of the firm, "I want you to give you a pointer."

"Yes, sir," the office boy respectfully replied.

"If I hear you humming any popular songs around the office I discharge you."

"All right, I won't do it no more. I didn't know I was hum'n' 'em, anyhow. I guess I can't whistle."

Work.

"It seems to me that there can be no real punishment than to be compelled to work when one does not feel like work."

"It is hard. But would any work over be done if people had to work only when they felt like to do so?"

The Suicide Club.

"Come, let's go around and see how our suicide club's getting along."

"What do you mean? I didn't know there was a suicide club in this town."

"You didn't know it? Why, man, we have one of the strongest football teams in the state."

Poor.

The man who cries around telling other people that "if it wasn't for the children" he wouldn't submit to his wife's nagging another day is a poor thing on which to waste pity.

Unimpressed.

"Oh, well, you needn't try to make me feel jealous. My mother has learned to talk French."

On the Shaky Ladder.

Many a man has spent the best years of his life climbing the ladder to fame only to have the thing fall over backward just as he grasped the last rung.

Generally.

Generally when a young man takes a post-graduate course in college it is a sign that he has settled on his alma mater's football team.

Aye.

"Do your friend is an artist?"

"Yes."

"Lightingered or the other kind?"

Solidity.

"Is he solid financially?"

"I regret to say he is. He has invested in a stone quarry.

Books Made by Slaves

Some publishers in ancient Rome could turn out books rapidly and cheaply. A publisher of the Augustan era produced 1000 copies of the second book of Martial in two hours and these, sold at about 12 cents apiece, gave him a profit of 100 per cent. This was done by employing slaves carefully trained to write swiftly and legibly. Working in batches of 100, with an overseer dictating the book to read, the task was accomplished in a very short time. As soon as the copies were written they were revised, corrected, rolled up and bound, under the slaves. The men required only maintenance from their master, and thus he could afford to sell their productions at a very low rate.

Boyne Citizen: Two sets of twins in one day is not so bad for a city of 5000. That is the record hung up here Sunday last. Chas. Johnsville, of East Main street, became the father of a nine pound boy and a six pound girl, while Chas. McClintock, of Bruce street, vied with him by reporting the arrival of Jean and June, twin girls.

Petoskey News: Will Ingalls, well known west elder and chicken fancier, says he has a hen that for large eggs has everything else in the city faded. His fancy had led him to breed Black Minorca hens, and of his present flock he has one hen that very often lays unusually large eggs. The other day she produced an egg which weighed just five and a half ounces. The egg was taken to the Bendemeer store and there be weighed and at the same time three ordinary eggs were placed on the scales and weighed just six ounces. Mr. Henderson offered one dollar a dozen for the large sized eggs.

Alpena Pioneer: The shoal trout season is now on. This is the work that is ringing loud and clear in the ears of many Alpena citizens. Many have gone to Bell, Presque Isle, Middle Island, Thunder Bay Island, and many other places where the fish come to spawn. Every night from now until the season closes will be seen the glare of the torch light as the night fishermen row along trolling for the shoal trout. The fish come on the shoals where they spawn and the fishermen spear them. They leave the city after the day's work and return along about daylight. In many cases they return with large numbers of trout. George Kauffman of Presque Isle speared 19 fish in a short while at Bell a few evenings ago.

Central Lake Torch: The big barn belonging to Henry Ellinga near Atwood was totally destroyed by fire Monday at about 11:30 a. m. The barn was 100 feet long and housed about thirty cows, which, fortunately, were not in the barn at the time. The men were in the act of filling a 14x30 silo and had it just about filled when the conflagration started, and it was all the men could do to save themselves. In three minutes everything was burned to the ground. It is thought that the fire started from the engine that was used to fill the silo. Besides the loss of the barn and silo, the chicken coop and some farm machinery were destroyed. The loss was about $1500, partly covered by insurance. The live stock was all saved.

Traverse City Record: W. H. Baldwin of East Jordan accidently ran over the eleven-year-old son of Mrs. Pratt, who is employed at the Cottage Home hotel, corner of State and Cass streets. The boy was behind a wagon on State street and when in front of Goodis's garage ran from the wagon directly in front of the auto. Mr. Baldwin did not see the boy until he was struck. The car was immediately stopped and a physician summoned to care for the injured boy. He was taken to his home and all attention rendered possible. The boy was only bruised and he is all right today. Mr. Baldwin felt very badly about the affair as it was the first accident he had ever had and did everything he could for the young man.

A two days' vacation was spent by Herbert Brotherton and Leo Hosman of Petoskey as cave men in the northern part of Emmet county. It all resulted from a dip in the lake on the shore of which they camped. While they were swimming some distance from shore their clothes mysteriously disappeared and the rough shack they had constructed was torn to pieces. Dashing through the woods in pursuit of the culprit the boys came upon a camp where, while we contently cheering Brotherton's red flannel shirt and other wearing apparel which had been hung from the roof of the shack. The boys beat a hasty retreat and finding a cave were obliged to spend the night in it wrapped in leaves and straw. Late the next morning after breakfasting on wild berries they managed to hail some other campers fishing on the lake and were supplied with a miscellaneous assortment of clothes.

Survivors tells graphic stories of the destruction of the British armored cruisers Aboukir, Hogue and Cressy. Describing the sinking of the Cressy Chief Gunner Dewhurst said:

"Suddenly I heard a great crash and saw the Aboukir heeling over and going down rapidly. We came to the conclusion that she had been struck by a torpedo, and kept a sharp look out for those craft while standing to the assistance of the Aboukir.

"The Hogue was also closing up toward the sinking ship with the object of assisting the crew, who were dropping into the water, when we heard a second crash. As the Hogue began to settle we know that she also had been torpedoed.

"As we drew near, some one shouted to me, 'Look out, sir, there's a submarine on our port beam!'

"She was about 400 yards away. I took careful aim at her and she disappeared. Up she came again so I fired my third shot and succeeded in the top of the conning tower.

Let Out a Great Shout of Joy.

"The men standing by shouted, 'She's hit, sir!' and then they let out a great cheer as the submarine sank. And while she was going down two German sailors footed up from her, both swimming hard.

"After that we shot at a trawler which was 1,000 yards away and evidently a German boat is disguised, directing operations. We hit her with the first shot and set her on fire.

"By this time we already had been struck by one torpedo, but the damage was not in a vital spot and we should have kept afloat all right. We saw another submarine on our starboard side and made a desperate effort to get her, but failed, and her torpedo got home in our engine room.

"When the Cressy began to turn over, and this I will say for the men," said Mr. Dewhurst proudly, "they acted like British sailors, and those who died died as a Briton should.

"Our captain was on the bridge and to those critical minutes he spoke some words of advice to the crew. 'Keep cool, my lads, keep cool,' he said in a steady voice. 'Pick up a spar, my lads, and put it under your arm. That'll help you to keep afloat until the destroyers pick you up.'

Water Thick With Drowning Men.

"They were clambering corpedoes at us while the water was thick with drowning men. When I dropped into the sea, clinging to a bit of wood, there were men all around me. We shouted cheery messages to one another. I was afloat for four hours."

Says a Maidan, Holland, dispatch to the London Daily Chronicle:

"The men of the Aboukir afloat in the water hoped for everything from the arrival of her sister cruisers, and all survivors agree that when these also sank many gave up the struggle for life and went down. An officer told me that when swimming, after having lost his jacket in the grip of a drowning man, his chief thought was that the Germans had succeeded in sinking only two comparatively obsolete cruisers which shortly would have been scrapped anyway.

"Twenty-four men were saved on a target which floated off the Hogue's deck. The men were gathered on it for four hours waist deep in water.

"The firing of these Germans was amazing. They must have seen us a long way off. We could not see them, and they came right up under the noses of our guns."

MEXICO'S NEW REVOLUTION.

Villa's Plans For March on Mexico City to Oust Carranza.

Now that General Villa has definitely broken with General Carranza and announced that he will fight to the last Torreon becomes the center of interest in the new war in Mexico. It is at Torreon that Villa expects the big battle, and he is preparing that city for a vigorous defense and a possible siege. All troops ordered to Sonora by Villa have been recalled and are being hurried to the south. All troops in Chihuahua City are being sent to Torreon, and every garrison in the north is being stripped of men to mobilize at Torreon the greatest army that Villa has put into the field. Villa has made plans for an immediate movement against Mexico City.

Villa holds all northern Mexico and in this position has advantages which will count seriously against Carranza. Villa will be able to control the rail communication with the United States.

Paris Woman Far Outnumber Men.

The war census of Paris is complete. The population is now 1,897,064, a decline of 1,028,307 from normal figures. There are in Paris now 949,097 women, 854,450 men and 293,471 children, of whom 20,000 are under fifteen months old.

Traverse City Record: The potato crop this year promises to be the largest in the history of the Grand Traverse region, owing to the favorable season. The tubers are now beginning to come into market and are bringing 50 and 60 cents per bushel for ripe stock. One bad feature is that some of the farmers are digging their tubers before they are ripe which not only makes the potatoes look sick but, but seriously interferes with their sale on the market. The general yield is reported to be good and all former crops will be eclipsed by the one this year.

In order to dispose of the enormous Michigan apple crop everybody is being urged to buy a barrel this fall. This is not only good business, but an excellent way in which to preserve the health of the family during the winter months. A barrel of apples in the cellar is better than a doctor on the household pay roll. Apples and health go hand in hand.

Farmers in all parts of the country are watching with interest an experiment which is being made in Brooks county, Georgia. The people have been objected to the commercial system under which they were receiving but seven and eight cents a pound for the pick which they raised, while they saw the ham and bacon of commerce retailing in their own markets for 25c a pound. They resolved to re-establish the ante bellum smokehouses on their farms and immediately carried the resolution into effect. Then co-operation they have commenced marketing their products in the finished form. They find that the profits which they make from curing their own meats are relatively large, considering the time and expense involved, than those which they were receiving from marketing hogs on the hoof.

The following appeared in the Troy (O.) Record and was printed from an advertisement. It is herewith passed along "Refused Notice." Every editor has received them. The postmaster sends them to the editor. For instance there is a man by the name of John Smith who refused to take his paper out of the postoffice. He did not want it any longer, and we wondered what was the matter. Upon investigation of our subscription book we found that John was owed $5.70. He stopped the paper as a matter of economy to us. One evening we went to church, and John's stalled one voice rang out loud and clear in that soul-stirring song, "Jesus Paid It All." We might have been mistaken, but his earnestness impressed us. The next day we sent him a receipt in full, begging his pardon for not knowing he had made arrangements for his liabilities to that manner.

Why the Boiler Rumbles.

That note you hear rising and entering in the kitchen boiler after the gas water heater has been lighted for some time has waited many a woman. The editor of the Housing Gas Chat says it need alarm no one, as it is caused by the expansion of the water as it is heated from the cold of the boiler. The colder water inlet, rushing up to displace the expanded water above, will after cause a commotion.

Are you planning your Christmas work? You will find many suggestions, embroidery patterns, lace instruction, etc., at the Public Library. They are yours for the asking.

Fire Friday noon destroyed the kitchen annex to the residence of Mrs. J. M. Clark, on south State street. The main structure was saved by the prompt work of the fire department.

D. S. Fayton, R. C. Hammet and Chas. Mosely went to Phelps Tuesday evening and organized a good road club with 23 members. Another good club was organized at Ironton last night.

Among the successful Optometrists who took the state board examination at Detroit Sept. 9th, was J. Leahy who is well known here. He now has the endorsement of the state board as to his proficiency.

M. J. Stockman has erected on the site of the recently destroyed boat houses at the foot of Clinton street, a much larger and more convenient building, divided into compartments, which will be rented. The structure is covered, slide and roof, with metal.

The funeral of Mrs. James Alexander occurred at Charlevoix Thursday. Mrs. Alexander was the mother of Sam Alexander, for many years ferryman at Ironton. She was upwards of eighty years of age and has spent many years of her life in Charlevoix county, being one of the early pioneers.

Capt. S. M. Rose has resigned his command of the game warden patrol boat and the deputy warden ship, and Capt. Sam Smith has taken charge of Bridge street. The place will be refitted, and, as Sam is a barber of experience, with many friends, he cannot fail to do well.

Robert Hansen, a "hand" on the U. S. dredge Gen. Meade, got drunk Saturday night and received a entrance of himself in Geo. Glados' place. Officer Jeffries drove him aboard the dredge, after which the boatman very "easy" by Charlie. A warrant followed and he spent a day and two nights in jail, after which Justice Cooper assessed him $10, including costs.

DEATH OF CAPT. JOHN GENEIT

Died, Tuesday morning, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry Grossinger, this city, Capt. John Geneit, aged 66.

Capt. Geneit some weeks ago suffered a stroke of paralysis, but partially recovered, and was able to be about the city. On Sunday he suffered an attack of cerebral hemorhage, which rendered him unconscious to the hour of his death.

Deceased came to Charlevoix twenty years ago from Oconomowoc, Wis. He has followed the water most of his life, mostly in the fishing industry.

He leaves two sons and three daughters—Grover, of this city; John J., of Oconomowoc, Mass; Mrs. Sherman Leslie, of Petoskey; Mrs. Harry Grossinger and Miss Maata Geneit, of this city.

His wife died nine years ago.

DEATH OF AN EVELINE PIONEER

Joel King died at his home near Ironton Monday, of heart disease, aged 74.

Deceased was another of those early settlers who are fast passing on. Mr. King was a "homesteader" in Eveline in 1874, living continuously on the place since. He had been a Sentinel subscriber for nearly forty years.

ANOTHER OLD SETTLER GONE

Word was received here Tuesday of the death of Charles Chaddock, at Glen Haven, where he was visiting his brother, Edward. The home of the deceased was at East Jordan, where the remains arrive today.

Charles Chaddock was one of the earliest of Charlevoix county pioneers. He "took up" the homestead near East Jordan in the middle '60s, and the place has been his home up to the time of his death.

Charles Chaddock was the first marine engineer on our inland waters, having run the Fox & Co's tug Commodore Nutt from 1867 up to well along in the '70s. He also enjoyed the distinction of being in those days, an old-school "fiddler," for many years playing for the good old fashioned dances, his only competitor be Louis Gobo.

He was a most upright man and good citizen.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Capt. Silas Swallos Narrowly Escapes Drowning, and Breaks a Leg

Capt. Silas Swallos had a narrow escape one day last week in two ways—drowning and the loss of a leg and his "pinck" and the quick action of a ship-mate preserved life and limb.

Capt. Swallos had charge of the Booth boat Arbutus on a raft towing expedition for the Charlevoix Lumber Co. When off Middle Village with the raft in tow, Capt. Swallos left the pilot house and went off to play out more line.

In some way the line got a cinch on his leg. A sidewalk saw that Swallos would lose his leg if something was not done quickly. The impulse was a heroic one, and he acted. Picking up Swallos he threw him overboard line and all, and he having been released from the timber-head.

Of course this released the line from Swallos, but the boat was under way, and he found himself nearly two hundred feet from the boat. And here is where Silas pluck came into play. He swam to the boat and pulled himself aboard.

It was found that his ankle was not only broken but badly mutilated. Although in great pain he bore up bravely until the boat and raft reached Charlevoix where Dr. King reduced the fracture.

Capt. Swallos will be laid up at least a month.

LOYALTY IN CITIZENSHIP

It is a poor stiff of a man who will not stand up and fight for his home town in both prosperity and adversity.

And it is likewise unfortunate that there are men who will roll as a sweet morsel under their tongues any untoward or disastrous conditions that may, through temporary financial reversals, work damage to a neighboring town.

Charlevoix, when the twelve months increment are averaged up, is on the safe side, as regards the future, and reasonable minds, wheresoever located, will wish for prosperity and progress throughout the boundaries of Charlevoix county.

Northern Michigan is an entity, and a conspicuous one, in the manifest and rapid forward movement of Michigan, and Charlevoix county has ably demonstrated its right to membership in the Grand Traverse family of counties. In the work of development it should be "one for all and all for one," in sunshine or shadow.

PETITIONS POSTED

Wets Start Third Local Option Battle —To Submit at January Session

Although there has been very little noise made, it is understood to be a fact that the wets have their petitions ready for the board of supervisors at either the October or January session.

This means that the winter will be a hot one, as the battle will be waged every minute until the spring election.

GOVERNOR FERRIS VISITS CHARLEVOIX

Hon. W. N. Ferris, democrat candidate for governor, was in Charlevoix Tuesday afternoon; also W. N. Ferris, governor of Michigan. Physically these persons are one and the same.

With the first phase of the visit we confess to being one of the "ones." But to W. N. Ferris, governor of Michigan, we claim an interest as every citizen of Michigan should. There is a distinction between Ferris the candidate and Ferris the governor. He is the candidate of a party with which this paper is not in harmony; but he is the chief executive of the great state of Michigan, and a clean, honest, conscientious gentleman.

We will not yield to any democrat in honoring the governor of Michigan. The true test of good citizenship is when partisanship is made secondary to citizenship. It is this spirit that represents true democracy.

We are glad the governor came. He has not dishonored the exalted position he holds. We only differ in matters of public policy. We bury politics deep down in the ground when the governor of Michigan comes, whatever his politics.

County Normal Notes

HAZLE PEARL

Com. J. H. Milford was a visitor last week.

The Normal students were entertained with a beach party by Miss Himes and Miss Whiting. A fire was built and marshmallows roasted. Everyone had a very pleasant evening.

Miss Rose Groening and Miss Clara Thorsen are housekeeping this week.

Mr. Ward Gerrett and Miss Lillian Akins are editors.

We had the opportunity of going to the Life Saving Station Thursday and Friday morning to watch the Life Savers drill.

Miss Whiting began our work last week in Primary Methods. The work is very interesting as well as educative.

CONSCIENCE VS. POLITICS

One characteristic of Chase S. Osborn's nature, always conspicuous, but more recently emphasized, is that conscience and conviction are placed ahead of personal political success.

If his convictions conflicts with party expediencies, office be hanged. Osborn is very "hot" in his way, but his tenacity of purpose finds its source in his intense loyalty to his convictions.

It cannot be said that during his two years tenure of office this quality of his nature worked harm to public interests, but, on the contrary, beneficial laws now operative may be traced unmistakably to his comprehensive grasp of economic conditions, fortified by a firmness of purpose not unlike that which was displayed by Grant from Shiloh to Appomattox.

Grant never sought civil or military preferment; neither has Osborn ever sought office.

This paper has not always been in harmony with Osborn's political policies, but it has always conceded his honesty of purpose, and his loyalty to the interests of the common people. Owing to a meeting of the employed officers of the state and of the state secretaries it was not possible to have reached the work of the financial canvas for a week. The matter will be taken up again on this week Wednesday and continued through as rapidly as possible so that the work may be finished up so that it can be taken up anf given the full attention of the County Secretary.

THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION AND THE TICKET

The most enthusiastic and altogether short the best convention the Republicans of Michigan have ever held was held in Kalamazoo last Wednesday. Not a note of discord was to be heard and when the big armory was emptied everybody was feeling good, everybody was full of fight and everybody was cut to win this fall. The ticket nominated is a strong one, as follows:

For Secretary of State—Coleman C. Vaughan, of St. Johns.

For State Treasurer—John W. Haarer, of Ann Arbor.

For Attorney General—Grant M. Fellows, of Hudson.

For Auditor General—O. B. Fuller of Ford River, Delta county.

Chairman of the State Central Committee—Gilman M. Dame.

SHOOTING SCRAPE AT BOYNE FALLS

Joe Aikatlins, of Boyne Falls, was taken to Petoskey Thursday night suffering from severe gun shot wounds and the Petoskey hospital where his condition is critical. It appears that the man and one of his neighbors had had trouble over a fine fence and a patch of potatoes and that the neighbor indicted a young lad trying them to take a shot at Joe from behind a nearby fence. Joe received the whole charge of No. 4 shot in his arm, arm and leg. His abdomen and one lung were penetrated by the shot and his recovery is doubtful. The young man who did the mischief was brought to the county jail at Charlevoix and the neighbor with whom Joe had the trouble may be arrested.

THE FARMERS' PRODUCE EXHIBITION

Friday and Saturday of this week are the dates of the Farmers' Exhibition at the Vought garage.

Make those big days. These events are milestones in our progress as an agricultural section and community.

They serve a double purpose; they mark the degree of advancement from year to year, and bring the farmers and merchants together; they display not only the improved and increased products of the field, but bring the good housewife to the front as a teacher of domestic science and economy.

Let's make the 9th and 10th big days for all concerned.

People of Charlevoix County Seem to Feel Interested in It

Previous to September 15th, says the Boyne Citizen, the County Committee of the Charlevoix County Young Men's Christian Association had concluded that it would be necessary to suspend the work of the Association for an indefinite period. At the meeting held on the Thirteenth after a great deal of careful consideration the committee voted that the best plan would be to present the matter to the people of the county for their verdict. Secretary Hall visited the County Secretary with the assistance of three men from the State Secretarial force and hence and at most meetings of the committee have been interviewing the residents of the three towns as to their desire in the matter. To date it appears that it is the desire of the people aggregated to have the work continued and though the financial canvas has not been completed $800. has been secured in subscriptions. Owing to a meeting of the employed officers of the state and of the state secretaries it was not possible to have reached the work of the financial canvas for a week. The matter will be taken up again on this week Wedn

WOMAN'S PART IN AVIATION

FIFTEEN hundred feet above my credenza—hung in space twixt heaven and earth—at peace with God and the world and yet traveling at the rate of sixty or more miles an hour!

That's what I felt on my first aeroplane trip, and nightly since my ears I to have to come back to earth, writes Irene Vandy in the New York Press.

There is nothing in the world quite like flying. Some have compared it with sailing—water sailing; others have compared it with sailing on a very smooth road; but it is incomparable. Once or twice during my trip I looked aloft almost expecting to find the blue-winged mechanical bird there from a wire attached to gigantic telegraph poles and operated on a pulley, so easy did it ride on space. Once or twice the machine rocked a bit, and the passenger was startled for a moment lest the airplane rocks, one can scarcely believe it is movable, so much does it seem a part of the air.

Once we got lost in a cloud—I and my aviator—but I never knew it, so smoothly we moved, and realize that the world is round, for if there is any vantage point from which to prove the roundness of the earth it is in an aeroplane, provided you are high enough.

"Why I tried to explain, "I never knew how small the world was before!" For it seemed all stretched beneath us, like a map, with the rivers wide pick up the houses in one's hand and play with them; but the rush of wind cancels the words and I thought I should never scale or we never closed, when there was a slight dip on one wing and this machine turned in another direction.

We were now passing over the Belmont racetrack, and the humans above looked like ants, so many matches, or maybe toothpicks, painted white. The grandstand was no longer the proud and imposing structure I wished there had been some activity. It would have been interesting to see those horses.

But I was to be rewarded for my love of the Plains. As we passed over Westbury we were having a practice game on the polo field. I looked down and saw the midget beasties racing hither and thither, with momentary glimpses of a mallet raised in the air, like a splinter. I saw a train pull into the Hempstead station—a train no larger than those one buys for baby on the street. "Can onto the train?" I saw the Garden City hotel St. Paul's school, the Salisbury golf links, with men and women moving about like tiny China dolls, the bulldings no bigger than toy blocks that a baby could handle.

Imagine the glory of all this under a perfect sky and a setting sun reflecting that peculiar radiance of scintillating lights on a background of greens and browns, with here and there a red roof blending into the whole, and trees you want to pick for a bouquet!

Somehow it never occurred to me to be afraid. A little nausea came over me, and I gave myself up to the thrill of the beauty all round me. It seemed as though upon leaving terra firma my last worry had vanished. I wished I might spend my summer vacation in the air.

But that I felt such absolute confidence in the ability of my aviator—absolute confidence in the stability of his aeroplane, which I suppose is half the game. The flight was from the Hempstead Plains aviation field, which, by the way, never had the right to the name, because it lies in Garden City, and not in Hempstead at all. It is second

We were now passing over the Belmont racetrack, and the hurdle showed plainly below like so many matches, or maybe toothpicks, painted white. The grandstand was no bigger than a copy of some popular novel. I wished there had been some society. It would have been interesting to see those tiny horses.

SAVED SEEDS OF THAT MELON

Champagne-Soaked Food Seemingly Made a Hit With Tastotaler Farmers.

Dan J. Callaghan, chief steward of a leading hotel in Louisville, was called on the other day to serve a tremendous for an unusually swagger dinner party, and in order to make the menu just what the rather pur ticular host desired, I was required to saturate the meal of the evening with a quart of champagne. This was quite an overnight process, but the result was a success.

"Which reminds me," remarked Callaghan, "of a little incident that occurred out at the farmers, Ky., Lexington, while I was steward there. A big convention of farmers was in progress, and some of the board of trade fellows decided to give a dozen of the leading agriculturists a blowout at the Planters.

"In arranging the menu one of the board of state officials remarked to me, 'Callaghan, all of these men are strict teetotalers, and we don't serve how they received the melon, strict teetotalers as they were. Would you rather have that same melon, or the whole bunch smeaked half a dozen of the kinds of that wine soaked melon into his vest pocket?'

"Answer, Encouraging.

"One of the most encouraging sights I ever saw was to be found in the last that a man may be defeated in a political campaign without being report and to have taken a tip up and first

FARMING IN ALASKA

Tanana Valley Fields Surpass Yield of Dakota Land.

Would Be Arid Desert Were It not That It is Frozen Surface to Bedrock, and its Moisture Conserved.

Fairbanks, Alaska. — Imagine a great level tract of land 100 miles long and 10 miles wide. Sprinkle it with a layer of dirt. Light it with a sun that beams down with tropic fervency 22 of the 24 hours of a day. Give it the climate of arid Arizona, with its ten inches of rainfall every year.

Now you have a fair picture of the Tanana valley located almost in the geographical center of Alaska, whose farms surpass in productivity and wealth of yield the best Dakotas or the cream of the Canadian Northwest prairies, to which thousands of our middle West farmers annually migrate, says the Technical World Magazine.

Spared from the softening influence of the warm Japan current by a range of high and precipitous mountains, which include such giants as Mount St. Elias and Mount McKinley (altitude 20,300 feet), the loftiest on the American continent, this valley is only made endurable for giant life by the fact that the whole region, except the surface, is frozen.

The moisture arising from the Japan current in the form of clouds settles against these mountains and is precipitated as snow, forming the tremendous glaciers in the southern portion of Alaska. The air is thin, freed of its moisture and comes dry into the Tanana valley. The valley has no more moisture, no more rainfall, than Arizona. The Tanana valley would be an arid desert were it not for the fact that it is frozen from surface to bedrock and every drop of water and every snowflake which falls in that country is conserved. It sinks into the ground and is frozen there. It is maintained in cold storage.

When the warm spring sun touches the ground and the plowman turns up the clods, he begins thawing. Then the Fairbanks farmers plant their gardens and as the moisture is needed it comes from below. The thaw, or moisture, all summer. The Tanana people have a sub-irrigation system which nature operates for them that holds her irrigation system in any of the western states, and which does not now and never will need it sent to maintain.

The clearing of farm land about Fairbanks is a big business. Last year the area under cultivation was nearly double all that which had been cleared and cultivated in previous years. The yield of these crops is a matter of amazement and surprise to the producers themselves, because, as already stated, it has been proved that the lands were worthless for farming purposes.

The United States experimental farm is located at Fairbanks. There, at height of 200 feet. However, the aviator does not really care about flying so low, and if you show no sign of fear you are liable to go higher, and there is less danger, for it is harder to shut off the engine and volplane down from a height of a few hundred feet than it is from a height of 1,500 feet, and the last volplaning down means sometimes landing with a thump. The thump, a tremendous shake and jar, and the tests the Aero club requires before granting a license.

My trip was with Mr. Albert Heinrich of the Heinrich Aeroplane company, who owns one of the lightest and prettiest craft afloat—a hummingbird of about six hundred and fifty pounds, with a very narrow, graceful fuselage, laced up the center—daring and attractive to women especially. He finished second last July in the race round New York, and has never had a fall since the days when he was learning to fly. That is perhaps the reason I lost all sense of fear. I could readily realize the fascination of flying to women, and, once in the air myself, the desire to learn to fly an aeroplane of their own.

But the monoplane had tipped its nose groundward and we were volplaning down. The tip I scarcely felt, but when I realized the engine had been shut off and we were coming down, riding on air at an angle of more than forty-five degrees, it sort of caught my breath, but we landed easy as a bird, and I felt as without an ache.

And then, for the first time since the flight began, I felt fear. I felt it here.

"How did it feel? Didn't you feel a sort of nonchalance all here?" placing their hands on the pit of their stomachs. "Didn't you feel afraid when you got in the cloud? Could you see on?"

These were a few of the questions fired at me from the rapid-fire gun of my bundle of friends, but the answer—the absolute peace of it all—was upon me.

"How long was I up?" I replied, ignoring their questions.

"Just twenty-three minutes," they answered, and I looked my amazement, for it seemed but five at the most.

"No," said I to all their questions, except the one as to how does it feel, and to that I gave the same answer that Colonel Vanderlip, Anne Morgan, Mrs. Charles Whitman, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. Clifford B. Harmon, and a host of others who have flown have given, "I have never felt anything more in my life!" And I was not surprised, as I used to be, that women had gone into the same.

But, why you will ask, if this is so have the women who flew dropped out one by one, till today there is but one of the trio who used to appear at international meets, left flying—Mlle. Helen Dutrieu, a French woman?

There are several reasons. One is that the day of aviation as an exhibition is over unless one can cater to a morbid public. The aviator who today can fly upside down and inside out, who can loop loops, who can tango and hesitate in the air, balancing fire on one wing, then on the other, and wearing the influence in momentary expectancy of seeing his machine in flames, or a wreckage of engine, wires, wood and canvas, is

FARMER'S WIFE TOO ILL TO WORK

A Weak, Nervous Sufferer Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Kasota, Minn.—"I am glad to say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than anything else, and I had the best physicians in the country. I was so weak and nervous that I could not do my work and suffered with pains low down in my right side for a year or more. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now I feel like a different person. I believe there is nothing like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weak women and young girls, and I would be glad if I could influence anyone to try the medicine, for I know it will do all and much more than it is claimed to do."—Mrs. CLARA JEANNE, R. F. D. No. 1, Gaylord Farm, Kasota, Minn.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should be convinced of the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health by the many genuine and truthful testimonials we are constantly publishing in the newspapers.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

HOW TO MAKE YOUR HANDS GRACEFUL.

No one who uses her hands well can be entirely lacking in grace. The majority of us carry them as much they were awkward pickups.

If you are one of those whose pride is "What shall I do with my hands," begin at once to cultivate ease and grace by getting the fingers into condition. It is not enough to exercise the hand from the wrist or in connection with the arm—exercise the fingers as distinct from the hand in order that they may respond readily to emotion and work in harmony with the hands.

Try these exercises.

First.—Fingers together, outstretched. Work them up and down.

Second.—Open and close the hand, energetically spreading the fingers

Third.—Clench the fist and exercise each finger and the thumb in turn.

Fourth.—Spread the fingers apart and work each finger up and down, keeping the others as still as possible.

Fifth.—Hold the hand stiff, then suddenly relax the fingers.

Sixth.—Dactylize the hands at the wrists.

Seventh.—Hold arm straight out, palm turned downward, and with fingers twitching each other. Turn hand on the wrist. The thumb should fle close to the palm.

All movements of the hands should appear to be directed by the elbow of the shoulder and should express perfect freedom, yet absolute control. We should receive, never talk, things that are handed to us. Every movement should suggest receptiveness, yet be directed—vital, as it were.

It is most interesting to watch the hands of well trained actresses, for they are always expressive.

DELICIOUS ACCESSORY.

How to Use Flaming Fruits With Ice Creams and Cold Puddings.

Burning fruits, or, literally, flaming fruits (des fruites flambes), as an accessory to ice cream or cold puddings are a French novelty which American hostesses are adopting. There is something just a little daring in the process, which appeals to many women, and by preparing the brandied fruit in a small chafing dish at table it is possible to introduce an interesting feature just at the close of the meal.

Any of the seasonable small fruits, such as red raspberries or cherries, are suited to this use, and larger fruits, peaches, plums, pears and apricots, cut in medium sized bits may be used in the same way. The fruit is covered with equal parts of brandy and kirsch, the lamp of the chafing dish lighted and the mixture stirred gently as it cooks, sugar being sprinkled in from time to time. When hot apply a match to the liquor and have the dish passed while the contents are flaming. It will be found that the hot sauce does not melt the frozen pineapple short at the last moment. The shell of a large grapefruit holds sufficient for two portions, and the burning fruit sauce is served at a restaurant noted for its French novelties of service.

When the burning fruit is to be served at a dinner party it is a pretty idea to have the mold of ice cream placed on a large platter with individual sponge cakes at intervals as a border. By previously reserving the inside of the little cakes there will be sufficient room for a generous portion of the brandied fruit, which should be flaming when brought into the dining room. Each guest takes one of the fruit filled cakes with a portion of the cream.

The same idea may be carried out with a rich and ice cold rice pudding or with a mold of bavarian cream. When fresh fruits are not obtainable, canned or preserved fruit, drained from their juices, will answer the same purpose, and unique methods of serving will oudly suggest themselves to the hostess who is searching for novelties.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

NEW celery has a perfect forest of leaves if its cost of those leaves from field to kitchen is something as they occupy at least half of the space of the whole bunch therefrom. (Must they inevitably go into the waste can) No, it is wholly unnecessary. Every foot leaf may be cooked to the real enhancement of the mess on which it appears.

Celery is lower in price now and better in some respects than at any other season of the year, but except for the hearts the most of it is better cooked than raw, although poorly cooked celery is a dreary dish. We may dry some of the leaves for future use, although this is less done than formerly because the raised is in season practically all the year around now.

In a dish over the cooked celery tops, consisting of the leaves and the small stalk above the joint, which is rarely or never eaten raw, is about the most savory thing in the whole dish.

For greens we can use white and green leaves alike, picking them over as we pick over old greens, and removing carefully those which are tough or coarse and also the fibrous stalks. Any very green and heavily ribbed other stalks may be peeled and as rhubarb is peeled, then cut up in small pieces and cooked with the greens. The inside is white and juicy. More than half of what is usual going into the trash way as refuse can be put to very good use. The leaves from two good stalks of celery will furnish greens for three or four people, or a salad for that number.

Celery Greens.—Do not remove the leaves from the stalk unless the latter is quite very large. After cutting, wash very thoroughly in several waters, then drop into boiling water and blanch for five minutes. Drain, put back in kettle, cover with boiling water, slightly salted, and cook until tender, or about half an hour, not allowing the water to boil violently but to just boil. Serve just as you would other greens. Fresh butter and then a little lemon juice or vinegar may be added.

A little of these greens, buttered and seasoned with a few drops of vinegar, was taken to some one who had never heard of using celery tops in this way, because very few people probably have ever tried cooking them, and she at first seemed quite perplexed as she tasted, thinking them like asparagus and they're mild enough to suggest that.

Cooked Celery Top Salad.—When the leaves are cooked, drain and add a little butter while they are hot, then serve cold with only a few drops of vinegar, or do not add the butter and serve with a French dressing. A guest who happened in while these were being manipulated in various ways said very positively that she had eaten far worse salads.

DIABLO AND SOLDIER

One of the Many Tales Told In a Mexican Market Place.

By J. S. M'GRATH.

Once upon a time a country whose name is always in the big history books had come to be many wars with a neighboring country, but it was over now, so the soldiers were quiescent until the next war, because in time of peace their services were all needed.

One Heath especially, who had been one of the most valiant in the campaign, found himself without knowledge or means to gain a livelihood, as outside the business of killing men he had learned to do nothing. He took his gun, then his only possession, and started out seeking some way to preserve the life which so many times he had risked in battle with bended bayonets.

For some time he lived more on alms than anything else. One day when he was very tired from having walked a few leagues he noticed himself under the shadow of some trees by the roadside and he a little was stepping cautiously. Presently he was at a shrend and raised the lead he had before him a very grand personage.

Hiefly dressed indeed was he, with a chain of dark red silk and a gem set around at his belt; but he had a fierce face, and very fierce, with a long pointed nose. The soldier understandment with which he was addressed, but the stranger was no other than the devil himself.

"I know very well what you need, said the strange man.

"Well, is enough—money, much money," exclaimed the soldier.

"You shall have all the money you care to, and I will do all I told you. But first I wish to be advised you are not a coward."

Soldier and coward! You should know that caused him to be.

"We shall see. Turn your head."

The soldier turned his head and saw coming toward him a man dressed with open mouth and the intention, without doubt, of devouring him. The soldier aimed his gun, saying meanwhile:

"It seems you like to scare and growl. I will relieve you of the baby by putting a bullet into your cage."

The gun was fired, and as the soldier had said, the bullet entered by the mouth, bringing the bear to the ground.

"I see you are very courageous," said the devil. "Now if you want to be very rich you must do as I say."

"I will, unless it be to sell you my soul, replied the soldier.

"That will depend upon yourself. Listen. During the next seven years you must not salve yourself, cut your hair, nor your finger nails, nor wear any other clothes, nor cloak than this of mine which I shall give you. If you do these things, when the seven years are completed you will remain entirely free and rich—rich as the richest. But if you do before finishing the seven years your soul will go to the infernal regions."

"Accepted!" cried the valiant youth after reflecting a moment.

The devil threw him the long mantle which he wore, saying:

"Above the hand of money you will have no more to do than to put your hand into it and your pocket will take out all the gold money you want."

And without another word he disappeared.

The young soldier put on the cloak the devil had given him and wished to make the trial at once, so he turned into the pocket, and sure enough took it out full of shining coin.

He very happy then set off to try his luck and enjoy without cost all that can be acquired with money.

All went well during the first year, for although he did not wash himself nor cut his hair nor his nails he did not yet inspire great repugnance. But when the time was half about half issued his face had become more like that of a wild beast than of a man, and he had to pay well in gold for all he got. Even, in the day carriage when no one would whether him, he was so ill looking.

With his long hair, the face of the poor soldier was hidden, the look of a wild animal, and his nails resembled the claws of a tiger; his clothes were torn and dirty. More than once he had to sleep out of doors because no one would rent him lodgings, not even the poorest, and the seventh year of his probation had not arrived.

One day when the poor soldier was half sitting, half lying on the grass under some bushes in the country, pondering over his condition and wishing it was all over, he heard the voice of a man. It was the devil who approached and said.

"You have won. You were courageous. Free you are and free you remain forever, and forever rich." And then he showed to the disgust, but the soldier, amused to him.

"Hear me, Senor Diablo. It falls to then rid me of all this load I bear and make me clean as I was seven years past."

There was no way out of the devil had to obey. And the soldier, very happy at the soldier as handsome as before, and even handsomer, also which he disappeared, grumbling and muttering to himself.

The happy soldier hastened to the first city on his road and there bought the finest suit he could find, and then splendidly attired went to the house of the good and beautiful Dolcella.

He was recognized him. All thought him a great senor. So the two older girls retired to array themselves in costumes to receive him worthily, while the youngest remained near him, sad and generous.

Then the soldier filled a crystal cup with wine and dropping the half of the ring, which he passed, into it, profoundly it to the girl to drink. This she did and saw the place of ring. Always she produced the other half and, to the delight of her suitor, the soldier embraced her, saying:

"You have been natural and remembered me. I then have come to keep my word."

"Now, Henry," said Mrs. Weakness, as she rose from the breakfast table and lighted a cigar, "don't neglect anything while I am at the office. When the milkwoman comes get a double quantity and see that she gives you full measure.

"Then ask the maitwoman about those letters that were to be sent here instead of the office, and when the plumbeess comes to fix the bathtub get her to attend to the faucet at the kitchen sink.

"I think, in all probability, the painress who is going to varnish the hall stairs will be here today, and I am sure the woman who installed the furnace will be here this morning to open it up for the winter.

"Then I wish you would call up some bricklayeress, my dear, and get an estimate on a little strip of three foot wall to run from the stable to the garage, and while you are about it see if you can't get a competent woman to clean out the cistern and put in the coal, won't you?

"I'm going to change the stable into a garage, but I shall think about that today. I want to keep my mind clear about all worries, for those Wall street speculators are getting too keen for any use. They keep me guessing all the time. When I am a bulbous I am where I should have been a year and two years.

"But I'll beat 'em yet. Just watch me. I haven't been going to a novelty conference for a year for nothing.

"And, now, whatever you do, keep a sharp eye upon the gardeneresses and trampeess. Don't let them in the house. And as for Bill, the chauffeuress, if I hear of your making eyes at her again I'll discharge her to-morrow."

"And, finally, if any such thing as a bad overall should happen to you I am sure where I should have been a widow and view weeds.

"But I'll beat 'em yet. Just watch me. I haven't been going to a novelty conference for a year for nothing.

"And, now, whatever you do, keep a sharp eye upon the gardeneresses and trampeess. Don't let them in the house. And as for Bill, the chauffeuress, if I hear of your making eyes at her again I'll discharge her to-morrow.

Northern Michigan

Frankfort Patriot:- Chas. Donlin, of the Northern Michigan Transportation Company was in town Tuesday looking over the needs of Frankfort station. Frankfort is promised some important changes for the coming season. Among others a boat making week end trips and also service north from here. This has been a long felt want and will be the means of bringing some people to town that go to Northern Resorts that we have not seen in the past.

Williams Bros., of Cadillac, having on hand a large amount of cut-over timber lands have adopted a plan for selling their land that should prove to be a winner. They require a very small payment down and the balance is to be wholly paid from potato crops raised on the land. The purchaser agrees to clear up and crop to potatoes a certain acreage each year, and the crop is to be harvested. A fixed portion of these potato crops is to be marketed each year and the proceeds applied to the purchase price of the land until it is fully paid.

Farmers in this section are complaining bitterly of the fact that there is no sale for apples this fall. Very fine Wealthy apples are being peddled out for the ridiculously low price of thirty-five cents per bushel. Farmers having large quantities of the very finest of winter apples, such as Wagners and Wolf Rivers, can ship them to Chicago or Detroit, and if the commission man does not beat him out of the whole amount, he may receive enough to pay the actual expense of picking and shipping the fruit. This is a great country in which to raise fruit and other crops and steps should be taken by proper persons to secure a good market for the products of our farmers.

Elk Rapids Progress:- Deputy Sheriff Shannon made a hurried trip to Charlevoix Tuesday afternoon after a party named Charlie Wheaton, whom Bob learned reached Charlevoix by boat that morning. Bob had been laying for his man for some time, and finally landed him. He is a persistent Sleuth, and when he gets after a culprit he generally gets him. Bob reached here in the early evening with his prisoner, who is charged with stealing a bicycle some months ago from H. Alpers. Yesterday afternoon Wheaton was taken before Judge Daniels and arraigned on a charge of simple larceny. He pleaded guilty and said some one had stolen the machine from him. The judge was merciful and meted out a sentence of a fine of $25 or six months in the county jail. Being insolvent and financially embarrassed he chose the free board and lodging for the winter.

THREE MILK HINTS.

Many Cleanliness, Economy, Health, May Be Furthered.

In the interests of cleanliness, economy and health it is of the utmost importance to know how to take proper care of milk. No other article of food becomes so easily contaminated. Many go to much pains that the milk you buy is pure is not sufficient, for there are countless ways in which it can be rendered unfit for use after it reaches your home.

Before removing the cap from a bottle of milk the cap and the neck of the bottle should be washed and carefully wiped with a clean cloth. The cap should not be pushed down into the milk. It may be easily removed with a sharp pointed instrument without injuring the contents.

The bottle when once open should be kept covered, and the milk should be kept in the original bottle until it is used up. The original cap should not be replaced, but instead an inverted glass may be put over the top of the bottle.

The bottle when not in use should, of course, always be left in the refrigerator, and any milk that has been poured from it into another vessel should not be poured back.

Onions and other foods having a strong odor, especially during the hot weather, very easily impart their distinctive smell to milk that is left uncovered. This is an additional reason for always keeping milk in a covered receptacle.

BERLIN WILD AS KAISERIN SMILES

Thousands at Palace Windows After Hearing of Victory.

NEWS AS GERMANS GET IT.

Stories of Great Success Against the Russian Forces in East Prussia—Russians Rode into Months of Machine Guns, and Hundreds Were Killed. Say Czar's Men Are Careless.

New York.—The enthusiasm of the crowds in Berlin over German successes is depicted in a dispatch to the Kolnische Zeitung from Berlin. The dispatch contains the first mention of the kaiserin's presence in Berlin since the beginning of hostilities and gives a touching scene around the imperial palace. The dispatch says:

"A large crowd of people assembled in front of the palace last night and with great enthusiasm called time and again for the kaiserin. As stated in the Vossische Zeitung (the official organ) the latter appeared twice at a window and waved to the crowd, deeply moved. A man in the crowd made a short address, and the kaiserin waved her thanks to him. Then she withdrew.

"But the crowd continued to wait for her to reappear until a late hour. At 11 o'clock it was scarcely believed by any one that the kaiserin would show herself again. Suddenly the curtain of her window was seen to move. The kaiserin appeared and waved to the crowd. Behind her stood the crown princess. The whole scene lasted only a minute or two, and then everything was dark again. Then a movement was noticed behind a large balcony window in the middle of the palace. The doors were opened, and the kaiserin and the crown princess stepped out, followed by a man in civilian attire.

"Northcraft deeply moved, the kaiserin waved her handkerchief. The crown princess with an extremely graceful gesture asked for silence. The crowd suddenly became quiet, whereupon the man in civilian attire, a brother of War Minister von Falkenhahn, made an announcement which was interpreted by the crowd as another report of a victory. They ceremonies of great by have forth auth as will never be forgotten. The scene in the balcony was equally impressive. The kaiserin in tears embraced the crown princess, and the mother and daughter kissed each other. After the crown princess had kissed the kaiserin's hand, both were compelled to wave acknowledgment of the crowd's joyous cries."

A dispatch in the Kolnische Zeitung contains a description of a battle between the Germans and Russians on the border line in East Prussia, and the latter, who proposes to have taken part in the victorious German assault, retirem the valor of the Russian officers.

"The Russians," he says, "rode practically into the mouth of our machine gun fire as a result of their unusual carelessness. In a few minutes the entire cavalry force of horsemen were piled up in a shapeless mass. On closer examination we found that practically all of the horses as well as the men were dead, so terrible was the effect of our fire at a range of scarcely more than 250 yards. We were astonished when we discovered that in the southern corner of dead Russians, except for a few petty officers, there was not a single officer of higher rank. The panic was soon solved. A patrol that we sent out found the entire company of officers together a mile or two to the east. They preferred to view the fighting from a safe distance and to let their men run up against a practically without any direction. They were, of course, made captives at once."

When "Grape" Was Popular.

Sixty years ago it was quite permissible for the commissioner of a regiment to make money out of the ranks and die. In those days when a certain sum of money was annually allotted for the clothing of each regiment the colonels usually bought the cheapest clothing they could procure and put the balance of the allowance into their own pockets. This varied from one to $1,000, and many an officer preferred to munch a "clothing contract" rather than be promoted to higher rank. The miseries of the badly clad soldiers in the Crimean war at last caused so mighty an outcry that the system of "clothing colonels" were abolished.—London Chronicle.

REPUBLICANS UP AND COMING

Not since the campaign of 1896 have the republicans of Michigan shown such determination and such unity of action in behalf of their party and their candidates as is being evidenced this fall. Republican county and district committees throughout the state are beginning to do their work more thoroughly than since that national crisis of eighteen years ago.

The enormous state tax put upon the people by the present democratic governor, the issues that have come to our attention of money was annually appointed for the clothing of each regiment the colonels usually bought the cheapest clothing they could procure and put the balance of the allowance into their own pockets. This varied from one to $1,000, and many an officer preferred to munch a "clothing contract" rather than be promoted to higher rank. The miseries of the badly clad soldiers in the Crimean war at last caused so mighty an outcry that the system of "clothing colonels" were abolished.—London Chronicle.

BEAVER ISLAND LUMBER COMPANY QUITS

On account of scarcity of timber on the Island, the Beaver Island Lumber Company have closed down on all lumbering operations and is selling off its movable property.

This concern has cut a big figure in the prosperity of the island for more than ten years, and its loss will be felt. The company has about fifteen miles of narrow gauge railway, two locomotives, a fine dock and a large area of raw estate, much of it excellent farming land, which will now be attractive to people who realize that Beaver Island is one of the most promising locations for fruit growing in Northern Michigan. Considering the permanent welfare of the island, fruit farms have saw-mills "Beat a mile." Moreover, there is no more attractive spot anywhere than the vicinity of St. James.

When the saw-mill is gone, with its ever-present pyramids of saw-dust piles Beaver Harbor can be made a beautiful place.

THE BANNER EXHIBITION

Charlevoix Retail Merchants and Farmers Produce Exhibition Throws Previous Shows in the Shade

Complaint Judges Pronounce Fruit Display Superior to Those of County Fairs

It was a happy inspiration when the business men of Charlevoix, three years ago, inaugurated the autumn exhibitions of the products of the farming section contiguous to Charlevoix; but success was made doubly sure when the farmers, from the start, joined hands with the merchants in the enterprise. To say that last week's exhibition excelled all previous displays is putting it mildly; to use a popular slang term—"it beat them a mile."

Several prominent and interested parties talked to the writer about it and they all talked alike. They had been the guests of the northern Michigan county fairs, and they assert that the apple exhibit on Antrim street last Friday and Saturday was far ahead of any Northern Michigan county fair exhibit, with the possible exception of Grand Traverse county and need not yield to that in the matter of quality. Nearly half the floor space of the big garage building was occupied by the display, the fruit occupying a sloping wall space that constituted a picture that was bring joy to the heart of an artist. The display on that wall not only told what we are already doing, but was eloquent in its prophecy of the future of this favored section. Of course apples were the "piece de resistance," but they were not all; there were pears and grapes and other rarer fruit—apples, apples, shining, glossy apples, of as many tints as there are in the rainbow, dominated all.

And the vegetables. Nothing was lacking in vegetables that can be grown in Michigan. This display alone seemed to be a rivalry in the vegetable kingdom for superiority. The big, hard cabbages seemed to be making faces at the cauliflower, and the big white potatoes winked their eyes at the great red onions alongside, while the squash jostled the pumpkin and turnip made very faces at the whole outfit. It used to be a common saying that "Northern Michigan is not a corn country." The corn exhibit here last week gave the lie to the statement. No section of Michigan can show up better. And so it was all through the vegetable listexcellence everywhere.

And dairying—science—the kitchen and the dairy—constituted a spread that would make a hungry man envy. The good housewife was represented by her handiwork—a work no less important and profitable than that which attaches to field and fallow.

The highest price paid for a bushel of apples was $1.00. Total receipts $100.

FISHERMEN COMBINE

The fishermen of Charlevoix and Beaver Island met here one day last week and pooled their interests with reference to fall prices.

They made demands of dealers, at what they consider living prices, and have given dealers until the 20th to come to their terms.

Meantime the dealers claim they are paying all that present market conditions will warrant, but both parties will probably get together.

Mr. Eckinger, of the Boutel Co. went to Bay City yesterday to consult the manager.

COUNTY ROAD IMPROVEMENT

On Monday the road commissioners met here in conjunction with the annual meeting of the board of supervisors, and mapped out their plans for next year's work, which will be submitted to the board. The plans embrace the following extensions of work done and now in progress.

Charlevoix, three miles toward Boyne City from Hammond's work north; Boyne City, three miles toward Deer Lake and two miles toward Charlevoix; East Jordan, three miles toward Charlevoix, Boyne Falls, two miles toward Boyne City.

The commissioners recommend a highway tax of three mills.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY'S SHARE OF THE STATE'S BIG TAXES

Taxpayers of This County Will be Interested to Digest Information as Cost of Trouble of Two Years Ago

Charlevoix county taxpayers are interested in the outcome of the election this fall as they have not been interested in many years. All of them have felt the burden of recent unusual state taxes, but it may not be known to many of them that the appropriations approved by Governor Ferris brought to Charlevoix county an increased tax of $6,340.05. The entire state tax for the Ferris administration was $14,718,768.89, almost three million dollars in excess of the state tax permitted by the Osborn administration.

If this was all the loss our county has been required to meet through the unfortunate election results of two years ago we would be very fortunate. But we have had to share in the loss to every line of business that has come to our state and to our country as a whole through the changing of the tariff and through the direct assults on Michigan interests that have been made at Washington.

The republicans of this county were divided two years ago and their division, of course, assisted in bringing the trouble for our state and nation. But they are united now and their votes for Governor Osborn and for our candidate for congress and the county candidates will indicate their protests against Democratic state taxes and against all the losses they have been compelled to endure through Democratic direction and mismanagement.

THE BOYNE CITY HARVEST FESTIVAL

Mr. E. W. Abbott, land commissioner of the B. Y. P. A. R. R. Co., with headquarters at Boyne City, is doing good work in advertising the Harvest Festival which is to be held at Boyne City Oct. 23d and 24th.

It is proposed to make the event an exhibition of the products of Charlevoix county, along the same line as that which our Retail Merchants' Association have inaugurated and so successfully produced.

Mr. Abbott's unique and energetic way of exploiting the enterprise cannot fail to make it a success.

Y. M. C. A.

The result was satisfactory, more than satisfactory when viewed in the light of conditions as they existed up to September thirteenth when the County Committee of the Charlevoix County Young Men's Christian Association met in East Jordan to consider arrangements for suspending, for an indefinite period, the work of the Association, at that time the finances of the association were in a very decrepit condition (to the conditions) come to take the matter up with the people of the county thus ascertaining whether the necessary financial support was available. October tenth was the date fixed for the conclusion of the financial canvass. When the committee met on the eleventh they went over the result of the work finding that $600.00 had been raised in new pledges, thus insuring the continuance of the work another year, and 186.00 paid in old pledges.

CAPTURED CITY

Co. "X," East Jordan's Splendid Military Organization Stormed Charlevoix

Capt. Henry L. Winters, and his infantry company, of East Jordan, fifty rifles, broke through the outer defenses, captured the water-front, and entered the city at 8:30 Tuesday evening.

Considering it useless to resist the invasion, the keys of the city were handed over to Capt. Winters and Co. "X" had peaceful and welcome possession for two hours. The company was put through the manual of arms, and occupied the street in a most excellent drill, that exhibited a precision, alignment and accuracy that would do credit to any company of the Michigan National guard. After inspection the company broke ranks and spent a half hour about town.

East Jordan has something good in Co. "X," and we hope it appreciates the fact. A good military company in a town is an asset, and Co. "X" is certainly quite up to the standard. It can go anywhere and line up with the best of them.

IMPORTANT RESORT HOTEL IMPROVEMENTS

Those enterprising resort hotel people, the Bakers, are grading down the recently acquired lot on the hill north of the bridge, upon which they will erect a twenty room cottage, for an auxiliary to the Beach Hotel. The work involves the construction of a stone or stone retaining wall on the street front.

Plans and specifications are also being prepared for the building of an addition to the Beach Hotel to contain thirty sleeping rooms. The extension will be on the north side of the house.

Considering the large number of neighboring cottages owned or controlled by the Bakers, practically a part of the Beach Hotel, that enterprise is one of the most extensive and popular resort hotel propositions of Northern Michigan.

WORKING TOGETHER THIS YEAR

Republicans of Charlevoix County and of Entire State Forgetting Divisions and Putting Aside Personal Opposition

Those who are greatly interested in our home community and in our county have always urged united action when matters of large concern were at stake. "Let us forget our differences and act together for the good of the community and the county," they have urged. This advice has been good and we have been fortunate in it was not adopted. Just now this appeal most apply applies to the Republicans of this county. This is the time for them to put aside whatever differences may have existed in the past and to act together for the well being of their party in county and in state. Throughout Michigan there is more unity of purpose, more forgetting of past divisions and more putting aside of opposition to individual candidates than for many years. This is a year when Republican victories will mean better conditions in every way. The candidates of our party are worthy of your support. They were selected by votes of the people and by unanimous action of the Republican State Convention. You will not only be doing a service to your party but to your state and county as well, through assisting in their election this fall.

THE USUAL CAMPAIGN LIES

The extremes to which opponents of Chase S. Osborn, the Republican candidate for governor, are going in an effort to swing votes away from him is shown by the story circulated in Detroit that Osborn addressed a Detroit saloonist Saturday to secure his support, when as a matter of fact Osborn was in Iosco county at the same time.

This is about on a par with the campaign stories that some of the Charlevoix good people and others circulated about Fred Gooll preceding the primaries;—that he was drunk on a certain day at Petoskey during the Elks' convention, when, as a matter of fact he was the guest of a friend, the president of the Emmet county saloon league.

They also circulated the fool lie that Gooll attended a meeting of the white slave league dealers' association in Detroit. According to the program now, the time is approaching when these things will trek back to the local option fight.

Hopeless Lung Trouble Cured

Many recoveries from Lung Troubles are due to Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey. It strengthens the lungs, checks the cough and gives relief at once.—Mr. W. R. Wilkins, Galen, N. If your cough is dry and hacking let it trickle down the throat, you will surely get relief. Only 25c. at your druggist.

BIRTH OF BOBSLED

Charlevoix County Man Credited With Having Been First to Conceive the Idea

The Late Amos B. Noyes, Pioneer of Norwood Township the Man

(From the Hillsdale Daily.)

Probably the only person now living who was present and took an active part in the "birth" of the bobsled is J. S. Whittaker of Corydon, Iowa, a former resident of Hillsdale county and he declares that the very first bobsled came to existence in the township of Adams, Hillsdale county, and that the man who made the first bobsled was Amos B. Noyes. "Bob Sled" was "born" in 1883, and now, after an absence of 31 years, there is hardly a northern farmer but owns one. Mr. Whittaker gives the following account of the first bobsled:

"The man who was really the 'dad' of the bobsled was a farmer. He owned 80 acres of land jutting on the Hillsdale county (the farm now owned by Mrs. John Holcomb.) He was born in New York state about 1812 and moved to the farm on which "Bob" was born about 1860. The north end of his 80 joined the south end of my father's farm, with the township line between them. His name was Amos B. Noyes, but we called him Ame. He worked his farm during the summers and winters travelled over the country selling crockery.

"In talking with my father, he said that there was so much breakage of the crockery that he was compelled to sell it higher than he liked. He explained—'I have a rather large box (bed) fixed on my sled, and of course the crockery is piled up till the bed is pretty full, and as the box is about 11 feet long a culvert is generally made by placing two logs side by side pretty close together, but wide enough to let the water pass between them, then cutting notches in the logs and putting a couple of planks on them and fastening them down with wooden pins. The bridges are generally from ten to fourteen inches above the road, and banked up a little on each side. When I get over them the front end of the sled keeps getting higher and higher till it gets to the middle of the sled, when it comes down with a bump, and smash goes a lot of crockery. I tried to put in spring poles under the box, but they did not work well.'

"Along in the latter part of March, Mr. Noyes came over to our house and told father that he thought that he had got the bump in the sled cured. He said that he had been investigating the matter pretty carefully. When he came to a culvert he would get out and drive slowly over it to see when the bump came in, and he said he believed that if he would cut the sled in two in the middle and move two sids of it hitch the hind one to the front one, put in two bolsters, one on each sled, and put let the sled tongue in the middle, each sled would go over by itself and it couldn't bump. He said he was going to make the short sleds and try it.

"Mr. Noyes went to the timber the next day and got four crooked pieces of timber that had the desired bend in them and made the two sled, and bitched them together as he had planned, and they worked exactly as expected. Mr. Noyes went to town next day with the sled and everybody was on hand to admire it and he was explaining it. He said that it did not give back of the people and by unanimous action of the Republican State Convention. You will not only be doing a service to your party but to your state and county as well, through assisting in their election this fall.

"Ame said, 'Well, it looks like two sleds bobbed off.' So they called it 'bobbed sled.'

"Mr. Noyes never got a patent on it and I presume never thought of it, he seemed anxious to have every man get one."

Council Proceedings

Council Chambers, Oct. 12, 1914

The Common Council for the City of Charlevoix met on the above date—Mayor Nicholls presiding.

Aldermen present: Priest, Cartier, Carney, Shapton and Carey. Absent: Sen.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The street committee reported that the cement walk on west side of Michigan Avenue, in front of property owned by J. S. Baker, was torn up and the bid of G. W. Lusk to rebuild said walk on the proper grade at 6c square foot was accepted.

Moved by Alderman Priest and seconded by Alderman Shapton that the sewer trench on Hariburt Avenue be tamped with water at a cost not to exceed $15.00. Motion carried.

Moved by Alderman Carey and seconded by Alderman Cartier, that Asst. Chief of Police, Jefferies, be laid off taking effect Thursday, October 15th, 1914. Motion carried.

Moved by Alderman Cartier and seconded by Alderman Carey that the recommendation of the Board of Public Works in regard to installing water meters be adopted. Motion carried.

There being no further business the council adjourned.

P. E. VANDERMADE, City Clerk.

County Normal Notes

LILLIAN ASINS

The normal class had the pleasure of going on board the government dredge and observing the work being carried on as the harbor was being dredged Monday afternoon.

Tuesday we went to hear the address given by Governor Ferris. It was very instructive and we considered our time well spent.

Ward Gessel and Cora Driggett are editors of the normal notes this week.

Experiments are being made in connection with agriculture to determine the amount of water retained by the different soils.

Our work in primary methods is becoming very interesting.

A class meeting was held Thursday and the following officers elected:

President—Cora Driggett.

Vice President—Fred Gregory.

Secretary-Treasurer—Bessie Allen.

Cleo Thorne and Clare Thorsen are housekeepers for the week.

Thursday morning we witnessed the final transformation of the milk-weed worm when a large Monarch butterfly emerged from its pupa case. The incident was quite interesting.

Judge Correll gave a talk upon the subject, "success," in the high school room Friday morning.

Friday afternoon we went to see the Farmers' Produce Exhibition and were much interested in the splendid display.

CHARLEVOIX TO GET $2,000

The allotments recommended by congress for river and harbor improvement this year were approved the 5th by the board of army engineers.

The allotments include:

Michigan—Ontanagon harbor, $10,000; St. Joseph harbor, $3,000; South Haven harbor, $4,000; Manitepo harbor, $4,000; Ludington harbor, $6,000; Frankfort harbor, $4,000; Charlevoix harbor, $2,000; waterway across harbor of refuge $75,000.

RESCUE SHIP of the ARCTIC

HISTORY again repeats itself. Seventeen years ago, in November, 1887, the United States revenue cutter Bear was dispatched northward to rescue the crews of eight whaling vessels icebound in the Arctic ocean somewhere in the neighborhood of Point Barrow, Alaska. Now the same ship is off once more for that frigid region, but this time to effect the relief of that part of the crew of the ill-fated Karluk now marooned upon Wrangel island in the northeast of Behring strait.

As will be recalled, the Karluk set out to explore the Arctic region north of Beaufort sea and if possible get across the shore closely Crocker land, which was sighted by Peary on the 24th of June, 1906, from a distant point. The discovery of Crocker land gave tangible support to the old contention that the Arctic region was not a great treeless sea, but instead that a vast continent existed there beneath its eternal cloak of snow and ice. Stefansson was one of those who believed in the existence of an Arctic continent in that wide untraversed realm, and his aim was to trace a part at least of its boundaries.

To the casual observer, the untimely ending of his expedition may seem to have been without purpose and to have rendered useless the venture. Instead of the Karluk, bearing the man crew in itself, has, paradoxically, added a cumulative evidence of the existence of the shores that Stefansson and his fellows did not see. To make this clear it is necessary to explain how the searching mind of the scientist has already determined the probable existence of an uncharted Arctic continent or a vast area of land. Crocker land is a comparatively small area of quite 500,000 square miles—an area more than ten times as big as the state of New York or as large as Alaska itself.

Have you ever spilled a drop of water on a level bit of ground? If so, you have probably noticed how far the liquid spread. Again, you have no doubt poured a bucket of water into a barrel and been discussed at the same degree it went toward filling it. In a popular way this illustrates the manner in which the waters of a plane tide set water upon low-lying lands and, again, how the same tide is relatively powerless to be noticed when the basin is deep and broad.

Without entering into the details of Arctic tides, it is a fact that they are normally of much greater range, and in some places the rise and fall is considerably less than it should be if the water were free to circulate from shore to shore or from side to side of the Arctic basin. Indeed, so we are told by R. A. Harris of the United States coast and geodetic survey, at Herschel island at Teuktu bay, Franz Josef land, the range of the diurnal wave has dwarfed into insignificance when the tidal forces acting over an unimpeded Arctic basin would produce. In other words, the normal or theoretical flow is somehow impeded, and the question is, What is the nature and the extent of this obstruction or series of tidal checks?

The semi-diurnal tides found in the Arctic ocean are derived almost entirely from those of the North Atlantic, because the semi-daily forces vary with the moon and are very small in the higher latitudes," Mr. Harris continues. "It is a case of getting new water into a basin. These tides enter the Arctic ocean proper by way of the great tide wave which flows around the east coast of northern Greenland. They are propagated through the Arctic to the New Siberian islands in the form of a rise and fall at Bennett in and being 2.5 feet.

Now, upon the assumption of an uninterrupted Arctic basin the tides at Point Barrow and at Bennett island should be of nearly equal range, from the tides which would, upon the same assumption, be found at Bennett island. But as a matter of fact the rise and fall of the semi-diurnal tide is 6.4 feet at Point Barrow and 0.5 at Bennett island.

But the presence of an obstruction, assuming the water for the tidal movements to come, as Mr. Harris says, from the Atlantic ocean via the passage between the northeastern coast of Greenland and Spitzbergen, is further evidenced by the directions in which the ebb and the flood tides flow, in no uncertain manner, and the convergence of the flood from east to west then the ebb would run east to the outlet between the two points mentioned. In short, it would leave by the shortest route to the original point of entry into the Arctic basin.

Other records are available that help to bear out Mr. Harris' argument in favor of a vast uncharted continent or extended group of big islands of which Crocker land is but a part. In September, 1879, the Arctic exploring craft Jeanette was crushed by the ice and frozen in near Wrangel island, where the Karluk's men are now marooned. She was carried by the ebb tide along with the ice floes and was crushed and sunk on June 12, 1881, to the northeast of Bennett island.

Again, Stefansson's ship Karluk, bound for the northward of Bennett island on September 22, 1913, and after drifting generally westward got clear on Oct. 11, 1914, in a point north of the coast of Spitzbergen. Now let us see what happened to the Karluk.

On October 6, last year, Stefansson's ship was swept from her moorings by a gale and pushed off shore at a point northeast of Barter island near Mantlike point. There she was caught by the Arctic pack, from which it was impossible to break her loose, and thence she, too, drifted to the west northwestward with the pack and floes and sent to the bottom north of Wrangel island

Popular Illusions in Manhattan

SKIMMING down Fifth avenue or Broadway you frequently see enormous "sightseeing cars" laden with expectant tourists. One is marked "Chinatown," and the occupants are holding their breath in anticipation of the thrills of horror they are to experience when they behold the dark wickedness of the Celestial empire, which is secretly practiced in the heart of New York.

Then arrive at a pigeonhole district where there is a fair sprinkling of children to be seen about the streets, and they are allowed to peep into what they think is an opium den, but what is in reality merely a dirty little chop suey house.

There are a few unprepossessing Chinamen sitting or lying around with their pipes, in an opium stupor. "Ordinary smoker," whisper the thrilled tourists to each other, as they shudder gaunt gaze on the dark spectacle.

But is it an opium den?

And are they really smoking opium? Most assuredly not.

Upon entering the mayor of New York wouldn't stand for it a minute.

It is only a nicely arranged little "fake den," run for the special benefit of the too credulous tourist, who gracefully takes charge of your lady's coat.

Inside the cabaret a smiling waiter attaches himself to you and abandons you devotedly for the remainder of your stay. He finds just the right table for you, brings your Tom Collins and your lady's orangeade and two small sandwiches—a moment order which should cort about 60 cents. But does it?

Just wait until he brings your check!

While you are dancing he hovers near your table, watching to see that no fashionable pirate carries off your lady's gloves and vanity be, and guarding your half-eaten sandwiches from being devoured by someone else in your absence.

All of which serious service is duly charged for on your check, which is brought to you marked $1.80. If you had paid for everything it would be cheap at the price.

Haven't the nerve to put up more two-dollar bills on the tray.

Give that waiter a ten-cent tip! Impossible.

So you stich inwardly, while outward you outline your plaint on the tray, and carelessly wave aside the waiter's deferential bows.

On leaving you find the devoted footman again awaiting you with your hat and cane and your lady's coat and an air of expectancy.

Of course, a dime is customary, and a 25-cent tip.

Can pay it like a little man, as the footman drops it in his pocket.

But the point is: Did you tip the waiter?

No, indeed. The tried waiter, who got a penny of those tips, is allowed to the boss. You simply add an exhorbitant price for a few cents worth of refreshments, and then add an extra 25 cents for the lady to be turned in to the manager of the cabaret.

There is one place, however, which hasn't been relegated to the mythical. There most certainly is still a Coney island. And whether you go quietly with a friend or whether you go with a crowd in a labeled and consecrated sightseeing car, it is the same Coney island, with its blaze of lights and its blare of orchestras and its bewildering whirl of things to ride and things to see, and things to do, and things to eat and drink, the latter consisting chiefly of "hot dogs" and beer.

But, however genuine Coney may be, there's no denying the spirit of graft that pervades the atmosphere of sayscraper land.

On every hand some persuasive or some organization is trying to get something for nothing, and if you are weak enough to be caught, it's like paying 25-cent silk stockings, and serves you best right.

Perhaps some evening after the theater you stop in a high-class cabaret to enjoy a dance or two and a supper, and the minute you are met by an attentive footman, who very politely but most insistantly relieves you of your hat and cane, and most Testifies She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lackawanna, N. Y.—"After my first child was born I felt very miserable and could not stand on my feet. My sister-in-law advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and my nerves became firm, appetite good, step elastic, and I lost that weak, tired feeling. That was six years ago and I have had three fine healthy children since. For female troubles I always take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it works like a charm. I do all my own work."—Mrs. A. F. KREAMER, 1574 Electric Avenue, Lackawanna, N. Y.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard remedy for female ills.

Women who suffer from these distressing ills peculiar to their sex should be convinced of the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health by the many genuine and truthful testimonials we are constantly publishing in the newspapers.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

"A point of ice under water ahead the engine room, the weakest place in the vessel, as there are no athwartship timbers there, forced the port side in sufficiently to buckle the engine room floor plates. Men were immediately sent with ice chisels and the ice was cut away. As soon as the ice was removed the pressure of that point ceased and the floor plates dropped back in place.

"The after section of the rudder was strained about six inches to port. The ice was driven around the rudder and the pressure on that was removed. So far as can be seen no material damage was done by the nip. A vessel less strongly constructed would have been crushed at once."

On more than one occasion that year the little Bear was hard put to it and her mission of mercy was frustrated by the ice. Indeed, on one occasion during that Arctic summer she had to blast a channel open to clear water, and this exploit was not always immediately successful, while the odds and ends piled up in a disconsolate heap behind. However, the ship kept steadily at her task, and in the end the ice-bound whalemen were succored and carried back to civilization, the Bear forcing her way through the ice floes.

Ice was not the only peril for with the rudder shackle there was for a time a great deal of trouble from strong winds or gales that meant danger under that barren coast. As a part of the relief expedition a sled party was dispatched overland to relieve the Bear could now her way into the Arctic ocean and of the sailor work of those men Americans and the personnel of the revenue cutter service may well be proud.

In closing his report to the treasury department Captain Tuttle said: "The officers and men of the expedition underwent much of the greatest patience, complaints being almost unheard of. The courage, fortitude and perseverance shown by the members of the overland expedition are deserving of the highest commendation.

"Starting over a route seldom traveled before by dog sleds, with a deep of great ice ridges to drive and cars for, they pushed their way through what at times seemed insurmountable obstacles, across frozen seas and over snow-clad mountains with tireless energy until Point Barrow was reached and the object of the expedition successfully accomplished."

Such is the tale of the men now aboard the little cutter and there is every reason to expect the same splendid performance of their present mission as was witnessed under somewhat similar conditions 17 years ago.

GOOD EATING FOR NEIGHBOR

Man Discovered, Altogether Too Late, That He Had Been Killing His Own Chickens.

A good story is told about two well-known residents of the North end. Both kept hens, and as each has a garden they have been rather fussy about keeping their henhouses locked up and the birds confined. Both have the same pound of bone, chiefly a few dirty egg shells for food that's how hens and hens scratching and ruining his garden. He looked at his neighbor and said it was all about up and he immediately suspected his neighbor fowls. The announcement and finally one day he said to his friend:

"Say, your chickens are raising Hoop with my garden."

"Is that so?" said the other. "Now if you find any hens over on your place just kill them."

"Do you mean it?" said the other.

"Certainly I do," replied the man. A few days later the man's wife saw a beautiful chicken thrown over on her lawn. She picked it up and carried it home and told her husband about it when she came home to dinner.

"We will eat it," he quietly said. Two days came over, and the family had more chicken dinners. A few days ago the man who had been doing the butchering met his neighbor on the street and said:

"Say, do you know, I have been killing my own hens?"

"Well, I declare," said the other, "and I have been eating them."

FRENCH YOUTH HAS ITS DAY

Writer Gives Reasons for Asserting Supremacy of Young Generation of France.

One finds in France a true jeunesse, a younger generation, into whose hands, apparently, the whole intellectual culture is given for conservation, for growth, for use, until our Anglo-Saxondom, youth, like woman and democracy, seems to be taken seriously. It is the thinking youth who measure for the nation the distance it has to go, who inform the parents of the day, and stamp upon the age its characteristic impress. And the older generation, having shaped its role of youth, is not averse to devoting itself to discovering what the new issues guns are thinking and dreaming. By means of reviews, or a sort of social introspection, the literary journals keep the public informed as to the intellectual tendencies of youth, even, in these latter days, of the feminine youth of France and thus seek to make an entry into the youth articulate. The French education seems to set for its goal above all other considerations the quality of thought and expression. And the new result seems to be that in French youth intelligence is robbed of the morbid terrorm which so affright the Anglo-Saxon youth, and is made the faculty of expression and thus forced to work on its strength. Because of our less developed social sense, introspections are forcibly kept indoors, and youth is thrown back on itself. It always not what I find in my soul but what we find in the world that matters.—Atlantic Monthly.

CASE FOR EUGENICS

By THOMAS CRAWFORD.

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

"And cousins can't marry, eccho Miss Jones, the village gossip, triumphantly.

That was the law in that particular state, but it was more than a law. It was becoming public sentiment. Arthur Davis believed in eugenics with all his heart. He was sure that the marriage of cousins was undesirable and detailed physical disaster upon the children. But he loved Nancy Reeves as much as twenty-five ever loved twenty.

The Reeves and Davis families were the leading ones in the town. Hiram Reeves had been a near-do-well in his youth, and Brady thought unhappiness on his pretty young wife. At last he took her West, to retire ten years later with a fortune and a pretty little girl, Nancy, who had come to them when he had given up all hope of having children.

The Reeves family had re-established itself. As Nancy grew older, Arthur Davis was her constant companion. He loved her before he had ever heard of eugenics—indeed, before anybody else had.

Then came the avowal of love, and all the village was shocked. There had been a eugenics lecturer there that summer, and he had painted in hard words the awful consequences of an inter-marriage between cousins. And Arthur and Nancy, asked to the second row from the front, felt their hands tremble and their hearts beat slowly with horror.

Silently they went home. They parting with averted faces. Next day Nancy wrote her sweetheart an impassioned letter, saying that they must never meet again. In any event, she said, she could not marry, because, now that her father was dead, and her mother gone to the grave, she must devote herself to the old woman's comfort.

"I reckon Mrs. Reeves will set her foot down hard on that nonsense," said Miss Jones. "Nancy's the apple of her eye, and she couldn't stand seeing how many years it was before she had her."

Her childishness had been a bitter thing for Ada Reeves to bear. Sofiend though it was by the realization that her worthless husband would not be likely to prove a good father, it had comforted her that Nancy would at had come back from Idaho with Nancy, and with Hiram, rich and a returned prodigal, to make a triumphal entrance in her manner that had unexpurated the gossips so had formerly applauded her.

And just as Arthur Davis was preparing to leave his native town forever, an incredible rumor came to his ears. Nancy, it was whispered very furtively by the gossips, to whom gossip are always cordials, but it was blotted that Nancy did not receive the letter he had sent her. Then she had commenced to learn anything about her.

"I reckon Mrs. Reeves will set her foot down hard on that nonsense," said Miss Jones. "Nancy's the apple of her eye, and she couldn't stand seeing how many years it was before she had her."

"My dear Clarice," I said, "I may say, in the circumstances my very dear Clarice, I like being engaged—to you that is, no, I've never been engaged before—but I don't see the sense of getting married. Even the state has power to forbid the idea of our union."

"What do you mean?" said Clarice, in almost alarmed. Have they found out that you've lost your tooth? Is ache as a boy?"

"It isn't that," I said, "a question of eugenics. I was getting a copy of my birth certificate today and—"

"Oh, surely didn't say anything about our engagement. I didn't suppose they were so stiff and formal."

"It news travels space," I said. "But by the way, I was about to say that red hair seldom fades."

"They surely didn't say anything about our engagement. I didn't suppose they were so stiff and formal."

"Yes, I was saying, red hair is a color used for indicating notable things. The state considers a birth is a notable event. Birth certificates are prepared in red."

"And death certificates," said Clarice, "in black, I supposed."

"I say, that's a clever idea that they use the state's seal."

"Birth certificates," asked Clarice.

"Yes," I said, "that's the strange thing. Nothing may be implied really, but it is significant that they print them."

"Purple!" said Clarice, eagerly.

"Verdant green," I said—Punch.

Why Flats Are Popular.

People are still fond of asking us nervous the question of why apartment houses are so popular, but the answer should come it would seem, without much of a struggle. It is simple. It is due to the attitude of people to have some lifful surroundings, the difficulty of securing domestic help and the growing indolence of the human race. It is not quite fair to talk about the indolence of the human race when it seems that every man and every woman is now interested in the effort with affairs of one kind or another to which they are completely or give attention. They have so many things to do that they do not get time to do the things they would like to do. This is the argument. It will not apply to the small rich such a great extent.—Construction News.

Elaborate Cape of Black Satin

ONE of the most elaborate of the many developments of the cape is pictured here. It is a two-piece garment in which a very full, long cape is set on to a surplice. It is the most ample and enveloping of all the capes which the season has brought out. The material used is a soft, heavy black satin, with a lining of white satin, lighter in weight but equally as soft.

The surplice portion of this garment crosses below the bust line in the front and hooks in the back. The material is turned back in the form of revers, and provided with a ripple collar across the back of the neck. The lower or cape portion of the garment is set on to the surplice by means of a piping. In order to provide for the ample fullness which ripples about the bottom the cape is cut in circular form. It is 13 inches longer in the back than in the front. The fronts are rounded off and sloped gradually to the longest point at the middle of the back.

Made in this way the lining is always in evidence and may be featured so that it becomes the most conspicuous part of the garment. Instead of the plain, white satin there are rich and brilliant brocades, or broad and pronounced stripes, or a great variety of plaids of all descriptions from which a choice of linings may be made. For general utility the white lining will serve best.

There is plenty of room in this cape to draw it up over the arms if one wishes to do so. Some people, and too frants will hang fairly straight and the cape have the appearance of a loose garment with flowing sleeves. Few capes this season are capes pure and simple, but of cape-like garments there are many. This model may be recommended for anyone who aspires to the really magnificent black velvet or velvet in colors for evening wear. The style is suited to rich fabrics and dress occasions, and it is unsuited to ordinary cloths or to bulky woolen fabrics.

One may not hope to find anything more graceful than the cape, for evening wear, and the individual wearer who improvises her own special style in managing the cape and thereby achieves distinction.

The Latest Showing in Girdles

WITH the disappearance of the normal waist line girdles have become important. They may be used to the figure in many cases from below the bust to the thigh, making a straight line instead of a curved line at the front and back. Less extreme and more popular are those from close to twelve inches wide, which are adjusted loosely around the waist.

Two girdles of this kind, which must attention because they show new features in their construction, are shown here. One of them is made of moire ribbon not more than three inches wide. It is in golden-brown color, shading from one side to the other. Lengths of moire ribbon are sewed together by hand in the very most invisible manner, and it takes no narrow for the present styles can be used to make wide girdles.

Using the same idea, one can make other kinds are widened by machine stitching them to a foundation ribbon. A very attractive girdle is made by using velvet ribbon on both edges of a colored satin ribbon or one of brocade.

Lengths of silk may be bordered in the same way. By this means short lengths of ribbon may be used, and may have on hand are easily transformed into girdles. It seems the smart woman can handly own too many of these charmed accessories.

The striped girdle shown in the picture is made of satin ribbon striped with velvet. It will be noticed that no bows and loops are used in these particular styles, although there are plenty of them to be found. These girdles are decorated with covered buttons or bacaier made of the ribbon and are fastened with snap fasteners.

Almost without exception the fashionable girdles are boned to hold them in place. Even when a long sash is wrapped about the waist and tied in the back the girdle portion is boned at the front and sides.

HOW CHRISTIANITY CONQUERED

(By His Eminence JAMES, CARDINAL GIBBONS)

"The Bible and a knowledge of the Bible are both essential to the salvation of this country." Mark A. Matthews, D. D., Past Moderator General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church.

Alexander the Great, the most successful perhaps of ancient captains, suddenly singlemanned by wading through the blood of his fellow men. By the sword he conquered and by the sword he kept his empire in bonds of sage. But scarcely was he laid in the tomb when his empire was dismembered, and his subjects shook off the yoke that had been forced upon them.

The apostles gained nations to Christ not by the sword, but by the cross. They conquered not by persuasion, not by shedding the blood of others but by shedding their own blood, not by enslaving the bodies of men, but by rescuing their souls from the yoke of ignorance and sin. And the fruits of their victories remains unto this day.

The apostles were few in number. They were without wealth or position, without high mental endowments or acquired learning, without the prestige of fame, of obscure origin, and of neither social nor political consequence. They belonged to a race hated and despised by both Greeks and Romans. They were, in fine, men quite without those qualifications which are commonly thought to be essential to success in any great enterprise.

Well indeed could St. Paul exclaim "The foolish things of the world hath God chosen to confound the wise; and the weak things of the world hath God chosen to confound the strong; and the base things of the world, and the things which are despised hath God chosen, and the things that are not, that He might bring to naught those things which are; that no flesh may glory in his sight."

If the gospel had been propagated by the power of Tiberius Caesar and the governors of the Roman provinces, the world could reasonably say, "There is no miracle here, for Christianity was established not by the finger of God, but by the might and majesty of kings."

Or if armies had been sent to forces the new religion upon the world men could say with truth, "There is no marvel here; the Christian faith was promulgated not by the sword of the Spirit, but by the arm of the flesh."

Or if the orators, statesmen and philosophers, the historians and poets had united with voice and pen to change the creed of the infant church, the world could say that there was nothing supernatural in all that, that the gospel was recommended not by the folly of the cross, but by the persuasive words of the wise men, and that, forsooth, it was the wisdom of the world.

But when to the personal insignificance of the apostles and the poverty of their doctrine is added the violent opposition which they met at every turn from the Jewish and Pagan world, we are lost in wonder and admiration at the stupendous conversion.

Upwards of fourteen hundred years ago St. Augustine proposed to the cavaliers of his time an argument which has greater force today than it had even then. Either, he says, the Christian religion was propagated by miracles or without them. If the former is true, the church is manifestly divine. If, however, the world was converted without miracles, this of itself would be a miracle so stupendous that no other could be compared with it.

WHAT IS A MIRACLE?

By CHARLES A. BLANCHARD, D. D., President, Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill.

When I was a boy I think perhaps the common definition of a miracle was that it was a suspension or a violation of the laws of nature. In our time more careful thinking has resulted in a modification of definition which I think has been a help to faith. Law in the physical universe is simply a description of uniform action. The law of gravitation tells how bodies affect one another as regards pull. The law of falling bodies tells how far falling bodies travel in certain circumstances in given periods of time. The law of cohesion tells how the particles of matter in given substance adhere to one another, etc.

So far as we have knowledge these laws cannot be violated or suspended. They are permanent factors in the universe of God. They are the manifestations of force which are absolutely invariable. We see results, we do not see causes, and the law simply tells how these secret, hidden forces act.

While, however, laws are never suspended or violated, it is one of the commonplaces of human experience that one force overbalances another force, so that what would take place because of one force does not take place because another force is in action.

By example: The law of inertia is that all material being naturally remains in that state of rest or motion in which it is. The waters of the sea, under the operation of this force, which seeks to keep bodies as they are, would remain in the sea. When, however, the force that we call heat is applied to the sea, vast volumes of water are lifted high in the air. Every day millions upon millions of tons of water are thus raised to the skies.

The book which lies before you on the table will naturally continue to lie there, but if you take the book in your hand the force which we call muscular energy, directed by another force, unseen, intangible, that we call the human will, may lift the book, open the book. The law of gravitation is not contradicted, it is suspended. It is overcome for the time by the law of muscular energy, just as the waters of the sea are lifted into the air by the power which we call heat.

There is nothing new in these statements. They are obvious to any thinking person, but if persons do not think they will not have these facts in mind. The moment that a miracle is not a suspension of natural law nor even at a violation of natural law, it is the overcoming of one force or force by another force which is greater.

Take, for example, the resurrection of the dead. If such a case ever taken place or shall ever take place, it will not be the suspension of force or the violation of force, but the overcoming of the forces which tend to disintegration by another force which, equally hidden, is more potent and gives us life instead of decay.

CHAUCER'S "POOR PARSON"

By ALBERT F. CONANT, Ph. D., Lit. D., Professor of English Language and Literature, Yale University.

The lowly man is one who is not always demanding his rights but is willing at times and where occasion requires to yield those rights for the welfare of others; he is, in other words, the man of humble and lowly spirit. Where this spirit is found in any church, unity prevails; its absence means friction.

The meek man is the man who thinks as little of his personal claims as the humble man does of his personal merits; he gladly gives place to others and is willing to take the lowest room. How many seeds of strife and roots of bitterness would be destroyed if this mind were to be all-self-importance and love of office, and a craving for appearance and leading places, has's the unity and peace of the church.

The long-suffering man is he who is not harsh or censorious or impatient in his dealings with those who are weaker than himself and who have not yet reached his attainments. He is forbearing with the weaknesses and faults of others and does not cease to love or interest himself in his neighbor, even though he has faults and weaknesses.

There is next presented to us those fundamental virtues on which the unity of the church is based, namely, love, hope, one faith, one baptism, one God, one and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Ephesians 4:6.

The Epistle to the Ephesians falls into two divisions: The High Calling and Glory of the Church (ch. 1:3), and The Practical Walk of the Church in View of the High Calling (ch. 4:6). We are now considering the second division, which may be summed up in three words: First, the walk of the church, which should be characterized by unity (4:1-16); second, the walk of the individual Christian, which should be a walk of purity (4:17-5:21); third, the walk of the family, which should be characterized by loving submission and service (5:22-6:9). The difference between the two main divisions of this epistle may be stated thus: In the first, the church is presented as an organism which God alone rears; in the second, the church is set forth as an organization such as God would have men rear.

Looking now for a moment at the church as characterized by unity, we notice three forms of unity. First there are those specific virtues which serve and maintain the peace and unity of the church: the lowly mind, meekness, long-suffering and forbearance, and love.

The lowly man is one who is not always demanding his rights but is willing at times and where occasion requires to yield those rights for the welfare of others; he is, in other words, the man of humble and lowly spirit. Where this spirit is found in any church, unity prevails; its absence means friction.

He is forbearing with the weaknesses and faults of others and does not cease to love or interest himself in his neighbor, even though he has faults and weaknesses.

There is next presented to us those fundamental virtues on which the unity of the church is based, namely, one body, one spirit, one hope, one God, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all.

Now, what is the unity of one body? This is the teaching of Scripture. At the time of his conversion every believer was baptized by the Holy spirit into the body of Jesus Christ. One spirit, the holy spirit, permeates all the members, indeed, only spirit-quickened men belong to the real church which is the body of Jesus Christ. There is one hope of our calling, that is, friendship with God, the joy of the Lord, the inspiration of our hope; one object, one calling, one goal, one prize, one prize to win, the crown of life. Are we not acting in the same way when we looking for the same Lord? The oneness of aim of believers makes unity and fellowship a reality. Jesus said "The church is in reality now, and may be, the world, the church is manifestly dominionless, yet one body, one spirit, one hope, one God, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all." Ephesians 4:6.

At a certain well-known eastern restaurant in St Louis the proprietor had a parrot that often furnished a great deal of amusement. One evening when the strikes was filled a tiny fox terrier pup slipped in. Polly happened to be off of her perch, waiting in her pigeon hood manner as fast as her chain would allow. The pup sqiled her and came one grand dash for her. Polly, grabbed her, and gave her the worst shaking she's ever had in her life. When they were finally separated Polly, standing in the midst of her ruined finery, cocked her head on one side and exclaimed: "I like that pup."

The Art of Advertising

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Mr. Broadrib, the proprietor of Broadrib's cleaning powder, gave me a territory to sell it in, sold me a stock on credit, and I located in a small town called Meyerville in the center of my field of operations. I advertised largely in the county newspapers and contracted for a brassy, cackling sign, package of the cleaner on the floor behind the seat. My field of operations was unfortunate, inasmuch as it was already occupied by a cleaner called the Excelsior dirt remover. I couldn't discover that there was any office for the agency of the article in my district. Indeed, the advertisement read that by addressing M. E. Tuttle, box 24, Hammerton postoffice, the remover would be sent for trial.

I found myself up against the Excelsior dirt remover continually. Wherever I called to sell Broadrib's cleaning powder I found that they had just received a package of the Excelsior remover for trial, and since the article was satisfactory there was no chance to that family for mine. I concluded to kill competition by means of the newspapers, not by attacking the mover, but by calling attention to my own goods by ingenious advertisements.

My first ad. I was well pleased with. It stated that a woman had put a number of soiled clothes to soak on Saturday night and on Monday morning had found them laundered. She was at a loss to understand how this had come about till she noticed that a tear in the paper covering Broadrib's cleaning powder on a shelf above the clothes had let out some of the contents, which had fallen in the wash tub.

Every one who met me after seeing my ad. laughed heartily, and I noticed it rose an increase of sales. But I soon saw that the Excelsior agent had resolved to fight me on my own ground. The Union County Clarion appeared with this ad.:

The contract to remove the dirt for the foundation of the new schoolhouse has been awarded to the Excelsior dirt remover.

Being in for it, I sat down to think of a new way of overtopping the Excelsior folks with the following result:

A farmer, having bought a package of Broadrib's cleaning powder at Greenville, Connecticut, and having, in a modinda Cleaning, some of the powder under the wheels of his wagon, the soil was removed from a smooth bedrock, and the wagon wheels alone stick and spin in the mud.

How long this war of ads. would have lasted had not an incident become personal I don't know. The next ad. that appeared was as follows:

The sons of Broadrib's cleaning powder wanted his face yesterday, dropping a little of the powder in the water. It made soap bubbles. Seeing this, I was ashamed of my face, and the water charged with this cleaning powder had passed through the ears and nostrils and washed out his brain.

Fearing that the champion would degenerate into mind slinging, I resolved to find the Excelsior agent and gain his consent to a division of the territory. I addressed a note, signed with a fictitious name, to M. E. Tuttle, box 24, Hammerton postoffice, stating that I would like to buy a couple of dozen packages of the Excelsior remover and would call at his office for the purpose if an address were given. Tuttle brought the street and number, and I called.

I found a little cottage on a side street. Upon asking for the agent of the remover a young woman about twenty years of age entered the room and asked what she could do for me. I asked her if she was the agent, and she said she was. I told her that I was the person who wished to buy a couple of dozen packages of her Excelsior remover, but feared when I told her why I wanted it she would refuse to sell. She asked what I wanted it for, and I told her that I should use it to remove from that territory the agent of the Excelsior, or she was interfering seriously with the sale of Broadrib's cleaning powder, which I was handling.

There was a slight quirking up of the corners of her pretty mouth as she replied that it would require a thousand packages to remove the agent, but if I cared to buy so many she would sell them to me at the wholesale rate and with all the discounts she had obtained from the owner. I asked her if the thousand packages were her entire stock and if she would guarantee not to buy any more; also if there would be enough to remove the agent to my office as clerk and advertisement writer.

"Not if you propose to store the Broadrib cleaning powder and the Excelsior remover in the same building" she replied.

"Why not?"

"Together they would eradicate the animal under the building and it would collapse."

When we spoke seriously I learned that she was trying to support an invalid mother by selling the remover, and I took myself off to another field, leaving the one about Meyerville to the Excelsior man. I did not stop to write ads. for me as" made a fortune out of them.

I didn't feel like keeping all the profit to myself when the girl had produced it by her ingenuity in writing ads. So I offered to divide it with her. She refused to take it as a gift, whereupon I prevailed upon her to go as my wife.

ORIGIN OF METALS

Varied Theories as to How the Ores Are Formed.

NATURE HIDES THE SECRET.

Science Has For Centuries Tried to Divest It Of Its Mystery, but Geologists and Mineralogists Are as Yet Unable to Agree Upon the Process.

You have read of that legendary Indian who while shooting game on a Bolivian mountain side aimed a bush for shelter. He was disappointed. The bush being pulled loose from its scanty hold on the rocks, he saw its crooked roots grasping masses of crumbling white ore and thus became the discoverer of the famous silver mines of Potosi.

You have also read, perhaps with itching fingers, of prospectors picking up nuggets of gold worth a thousand dollars each or opening veins of quartz all aglitter with heavy threads of the yellow metal.

You know that ores of gold and silver or of any other precious or useful metal are not to be found in everybody's back yard, but must be sought for in certain favored parts of the earth.

But has your intelligent curiosity ever led you to inquire how those ores came to be where they are and how they rose? Have you ever wondered what makes a gold nugget?

Probably you think that gold and other metals grow somewhat as fruits do—in soils and climates that are specially suited to them. Well, there is considerable truth in that idea, and the word "grow" is, in one sense, surprisingly applicable to such deposits.

But there is a great deal more in the matter than you would imagine, and no added law science fought more battles royal than on this of the origin of metallic ores. It has that interest some geologists who would rather find out this secret in the very bottom than be rewarded by the richest lode that the rifts of the earth contain. If they could do both that would be perfection, and we must not forget that knowledge is power.

Until about six years ago everybody who thought about it at all believed that veins of gold-ore were distributed under the influence of the planets. At that time astrology held the place of science.

Finally George Agricola, a German mineralogist, who lived about the time when the gold and silver of Mexico and Peru were making Spain the temporary mistress of the world, hit upon a theory which came in substance very near the truth. He taught that water, penetrating into the earth and becoming heated, took up scattered minerals in solution and afterward deposited them as ores in certain in the rocks. The mineral solutions he called the "juice of metals."

A couple of hundred years later the German geologist Werner set forth a view that became very famous under the name of the "Neptunist theory." Neptune, the god of the sea, was Werner's idea was that as the earth cooled down from the primeval molten state of which it was formed it was envloped in a universal hot ocean, holding in solution all kinds of minerals, and that when the rocky crust was formed the water leaking down into it deposited its metallic contents by chemical precipitation in veins and lodes wherever the circumstances were favorable.

But a hundred years ago the Neptunist theory, which had swept everything before it in the minds of men of science, met its Waterloo at the hands of Hutton, the Scottish geologist, with his "Plutonic" theory (from Pluto, the god of the infernal regions). Hutton's idea was that the materials which fill the metallic veins were melted by heat and forcibly injected into the clefts and fissures of the strata from below.

The "Neptunists" and "Plutonists" had a hard fight, with the latter holding the upper hand, until their theory had assumed a kind of compromise form, with vapor again playing the principal role. The American geologist, Rogers, adopted a form of one of the latest theories, according to which metallic vapor (condensed atmospheric vapor) penetrates deep into the earth's crust, and, with steadily increasing temperature, takes up mineral matter into solution. Spreading, as it goes deeper, the water reaches larger openings in the rocky crust, in which it accumulates, with decreasing temperature and pressure.

There it deposits the ores, whose metals it has collected in its wanderings and carried along in solution.

But this is not the last word, and in recent years there has been a partial reaction toward the Plutonic theory. Besides, a great deal seems to depend upon the nature of the ore whose origin is in question.—Detroit F. Sernin in New York Journal.

USE BICARBONATE OF SODA.

How to Destroy the Offensive Onion Odor.

What is the secret of destroying the "onion breath?" Not all the spices of Arabby can do it, but there is a simple deodorant that has its place on every cupboard shelf which will do the trick.

Boil low and long an ear-pick bicarbonate of soda, saleratus or baking soda—take your choice of a name, the effect is the same.

Gargle with a solution made by dissolving one to one and a half teaspoonfuls of the soda in a glassful of water, and gargle and gargle and gargle then emptying forth to your dance with a clear conscience and a sweet, clean breath.

The virtues of bicarbonate of soda as a deodorant are known and appreciated by very few—most of them laymen and physicians. What woman will not be glad to learn, for instance, that it is a perfect neutralizer of perspiration odors? There are many expensive powders put up for this purpose, and some of them are effective, but plain sodium bicarbonate in 6 cents a whole lot is quite as good as the best of them. It may be rubbed on the skin or through the armholes of a white shirt waist and be relied upon to neutralize any odor. The armpits may also be bathed with a solution of it before dressing.

CARE OF SWEATERS.

How to Wash the Knitted Jacket Successfully.

The following method, if carefully followed, will result in great satisfaction to the one who wants a shapely sweater after it has been subjected to the process of cleansing. After the ordinary methods, as everyone knows, the sweater is such an unshapely object as to be forever shorn of its original beauty.

Prepare a suds with lukewarm water, being particular to have plenty of water so that the sweater can be thoroughly cleansed. Pass it through the suds, gently pressing and lifting until it appears to be perfectly clean. Then rinse several times in clear water and then through water slightly blued. Do not wrung or twist in any way. Next fill a clean piece of muslin firmly on a board, wide enough to take the sweater in its natural shape. Place the sweater on the board dripping wet with front and sleeves and shaping it until exact shape and size as when worn. Put in a strong sun and when front is thoroughly dry turn over carefully and dry the back. When it is thoroughly dry you will find that it is in its natural shape, with pockets, cuffs and sleeves in perfect proportion.

HOW TO MAKE GIRDLES FROM REMNANTS.

The e are charming possibilities in the numerous bargain table remnants today, when a little money plus some ability will accompish a smart waist, garditure or short order.

An attractive girdle can be made from a yard and a half of black messaline or any desired silk weave.

Crush an eight inch strip around the waistband divide the rest into one long strip the full eighteen inches of the material. Sew along the selvage edges on the wrong side, turn and finish each end in a point. Knot this over the girdle, which fastens with hooks and eyes a few inches to the left of the center front, and have one end six inches longer than the other. Sew a lot usual or bait to the end of each plant. A homemade trimming may be made instead by winding two small circles of cardboard with a hole in the center with heavy rope silk. When closely wound cut the threads between these two rounds of pasteboard and tie them tightly by strands of the rope silk slipped through the cardboard and tied tightly around the center, with and long enough to make loops. Make fourteen such balls. Fasten one at each point of the sash, crochet or chain stitch three ends three inches long; attach a ball to each, then continue the ends for four or five inches more and finish with another ball on the end of each one.

FOR THE CUISINE.

How to Serve Cheese Daintily and With Satisfaction.

The housekeeper of economical mind should not fail to make a thorough study of cheese. They go far toward giving zest to a meal and are really nourishing. They contain nitrogenous matter and are therefore a muscle or tissue building food. Cheese is a concentrated food, however, and should be eaten in small quantities as a relish rather than as the fundamental element of a meal.

The common American cheese is generally supposed to be the most digestible of the family. In reality it is not so easily digested as those which are known as ripe or old cheeses, such as Camembert, Roquefort and Brie. The housewife of systematic habits will stock up her pantry with different cheeses for different purposes. For flavoring, making rarebits and for cooked dishes she will use a good grade of American cheese or Parmesan. The latter can be bought ready grated in bottles.

The best cheese to serve with ales are the medium rich, such as pineapple, Edam, English dairy and American full cream. The Neufchatel or cream cheese is also served with salad, but is less easy to digest than are the medium rich cheeses mentioned before.

The most popular after dinner cheeses are Roquefort, Camembert, Stilton, Limburger, Brie, Schweitzer and Gorgonzola, all very rich and ripe. Frequently they are imported cheese, quite often, however, they are made in America, and dealers claim they give just as good satisfaction as the imported article.

When cheese is served both with the salad and with the coffee course a very dainty accompaniment for green salad with French dressing is this: Spread thin saltines with a mixture of grated American cheese and butter in the proportion of two tablespoonfuls of cheese to one of butter. Dust lightly with cayenne pepper and stand for a moment or so in a quick oven. For cheese serve with the final dinner course there is nothing more appropriate than hard crackers split and toasted a golden brown.

Stationers.

When pens and ink and other writing materials came into common use a great many years ago they were sold by peddlers from house to house. After awhile a few desires in writing materials spread abile and remained stationary at their place of business. To distinguish the two classes of paper sellers the men in the mail was called a stationer, and the goods he sold came to be known as stationery.—Wisconsin State Journal.

SYNOPSIS

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Dolly Simon, leaves his native Texas and goes to Chicago to make good. He gets a job at Bethel and Truitt's department store, and in one of his over-time jobs meets Mark's employer, Hedley Bethel, who works in a department where the shoplifting gang. His success in that work wins him a place in the firm. Mrs. Anderjaspt, upon hearing Bethel's report, tells him that Mark is a relative. The relative is an adopted counter, known only as Uncle Jaspt, who has been in Mark's interest in Texas. SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native village, to make his fortune. Truitt finds a job in the office of Hedley & Hedley, lawyers, at a steel plant at Bethel and gets into the good graces of Hedley, one of the firm's partners. Mark's ambition is to become a lawyer. Hedley promises him the opportunity he wants if he proves worthy. Hedley's son, Hedley, is a dissolute young man. The success in their work arouses the jealousy of Hedley, junior. Andersjaat, open-hearth foreman, objects to Mark's presence in the office. Andersjaat, Pratt, Simson's son, is the disgraced daughter, shows her resentment by making life miserable for Mark's mother, a Mrs. Hedley, whose husband is a cripple. Mark's mother is a cousin of Mrs. Hedley senior. Mrs. Hedley senior and Mark's mother have a row. Later Simson also succumbs and Mark gets his job back. Andersjaat is fired and tells Mark to find another boarding place.

CHAPTER X.

Wounded on the Field.

The accident was one that happened often. Occasionally, after a hot cinder got that far, some slag would harden and be broken without delay. Not seldom the water would be conveyed under the crust, come into contact with the still molten slag and be converted suddenly into steam. Then there would be an explosion. Men might be seriously injured, or even killed, which was very rad—but one of the hazards of the employment. It happened when Mark had been following his straight road ahead for more than five years.

Five years during which he had won success, substantial if not brilliant. The lack of brilliancy might have been disputed by those few who knew that sundry labor-saving devices installed in the Quinby mills during this period were of his invention.

When Hedley heard of the accident he frowned; Hedley detested accidents, which spoke of inefficiency somewhere. But when the information was added that the foreman of the open-hearth battery was among the injured, he said "Tsk!" and in person at once called the hospital and his own physician by telephone and through these agencies commandered the best surgical skill and care for that valuable workman.

The doctors gathered in solemn conclave and did various things to Mark's shattered body. They dogged his wave into the very shadow of death and would not let him die. They did that, knowing they condemned him to a life of pain, and having the security of Thomas Hedley's word that their bills should each and every one be paid.

While Mark still lingered in the valley of mystery that leads to full knowledge, two men began their daily—and nightly—watches. One was a little faded man who wore the rusty black of the country preacher. The other was an awkward, shy little man who would sit motionless by the hour, never taking his eyes from the stiff form under the white sheet.

Mark knew, when his flicker-body began slowly to mend. He passed out of immediate danger; he was able to be moved to a bed and to be talked to a little. But in the manner of the nurses, who at visiting from Bethel even of the calloused doctors, were a grave gentleness, an absence of the exultation to be expected after triumph over death in Mark's ward.

He put the question to his father: "What are they keeping back from me?"

Simson's glance did not waver; nor did he let his face show a soothing lie. "Well never walk easy again. Yell have to use a crutch; boatways a cane, always!

"It's my hip?"

"Yes."

"Is that all?"

Simson's hurt inwardly. Yell have to be careful always. No more work for the mills.

Mark closed his eyes, uttering no complaint. Simson knew that spirit of protest and rebellion. A cripple, a partial invalid for life! Half a man! So bad could the Reaper deal a pagan of conquest. Tears of futile rage crept out through his closed eyelids.

His recovery was slow and very painful; at years of intervals he was top speed had left him but little reserve vitality for the emergency. The mood of rebelling droll down from sheer exhaustion. He accepted his misfortune, but sullenly, with no swell ing heroic resolve to defy unknown circumstances.

There was no conscious desire to return to the mills from which he had been banished. They were too much the object of his smouldering resentment just then. He felt toward them as he betrayed toward the traitor.

I think," he said once to Simson and Richard Courtney, who had not yet left the city, "I'll go back to Bethel.

"It will be a good place to recuperate," said the preacher.

"But I can't work there."

"We shall be glad to have you back." Thoughts of beded naturally of memory of Unity Martin. Mark found a certain grim humor in the recollection.

He had had his period of tragic remorse for Kasia. He had not, however, let conscious pick to the extreme of disembodying the fatal Jenny just mentioned. Now was he long to relations a comparative peace of mind in which he could congratulate himself on having avoided a serious blunder. Not many months later he by chance met Kasia and was surprised to see that Kasia had married Whiting. Pratt's manner of narration implied that, though Whiting was a poor village Kasia had been fortunate to escape Mark. He seemed disappointed that his auditor showed no fiery emotion.

Mark's letters to Unity had ceased, at erratic intervals. Soon her replies, too, began to dwindle in number and in length; they had never had much to zest in the way of intensity. And then he said to himself that she failed to answer at all, leaving their love affair suspended, so to speak, in the air. One of Simon's rare and misspelled missives informed Mark that she was, in the phrase Hedley used, keeping company with one Slocum, a prosperous young farmer of the vicinity. This may hardly be regarded as poetic retribution. It caused Mark a few days' surface indignation and a secret relief; one can not feel deeply the loss of a shadow, even though one has paid a price for her.

Kasia married. Unity, having jilted him, keeping company with plodding Bill Slocum! His tragedy had ended in sheer farce. We do well, he concluded, not to take our dramas too seriously.

* * * *

An amazing thing happened one day. There was the sound of a quick unfamiliar tread in the corridor, the door was pushed briskly open and into the room stepped Thomas Hedley.

"How are you, Truitt?" he inquired, shaking hands. "I was going by, had a few minutes and thought to find out for myself."

"Well enough, I guess," Mark replied out of his amazement.

"Good!" said Hedley. "Your father, I presume?" He nodded toward Simon.

Mark made the necessary introduction. Simon said: "Pleased to meet ye," and nudged for his son, who had been sitting in the relationship.

Toward the other visitor Hedley planted a deferentially a bouquet, then held out a hand.

"Ah, Doctor Courtney! Do you happen to remember me?" The question, obviously, was in playful irony.

"I happen to," answered Courtney, who did not share Simon's shyness.

"I remember you, too, I was just sent this young man to see. I," said Hedley gravitously, "am in your debt."

The preacher's shadowy smile appeared, is in fact.

Hedley laughed pleasantly. "I fancy he is. And I have a notion the debt will grow. I am finishing your job, Doctor Courtney."

He turned to Mark. Simon and Courtney pushed their chairs back from the bedside. The silent man might hold the stage.

"Mark," Hedley asked, "do you expect to come back to us?"

Mark winced and retorted to the enlistment that was becoming his habit. "I'm going back—home."

The pause and the slight emphasis on the last word were not lost on Hedley, a sensitive to their import, stirred. But.

"Exactly right," he exclaimed heartily. "Stay as long as necessary to get your strength together. You're too valuable a man to lose. Your place will wait for you. By the way, I'm about to make a change in the office, spoke of before the accident. I suppose the place never left your mind, and you have your hands on them?"

"No," answered Mark. "You can't say you have. Not yet. They're in my head."

"An excellent place to keep 'em," Hedley agreed. "Suppose then, when you're feeling up to it, I send some of our engineers after you to go over the plans with you? If there's anything in the idea, we want to install the machinery before winter."

"You can send them, if you want to. But I won't go over the plans with them." Mark discovered that he was a little fretful.

Hedley stiffened. "I'm not in the business of stealing inventions."

"I'll say that you don't steal this," Mark responded ungraciously. "Because, when you pay for it, you've got to pay for what you get. We put a hand on the injured hip. "That is, if I ever get the idea in shape."

Hedley waved a hand to intimate that allowance must be made for an invalid's humors. Of course, we expect you to be business like. Just what do you mean by that, if?

"I mean I'm through with the mills."

"Eh?" Hedley's stare swept Simon and Richard Courtney sharply, "who has been putting foul ideas into your head?"

"You, for one, when you come here because I'm a valuable man, not because I'm a man. Would you come to see me if I hadn't a new invention in mind?"

"Nonsense! You're sick, that's all." Hedley smiled kindly but confidently. "I've seen men in your case before. They think you won't come back. But you will. Why? Because you're a valuable man—I stick to that. You're a genius for mechanics, you know how to handle men and you've got a sense of organization. Most men would think twice before they let go of a job like of those. What does it mean? That you fit in here, of course. And when I say that I speak for the good of the business. I'm more keen than matter stick you avoid the stage of the room. Ana." Hedley stopped, to let the subject, for he repeated, "I would like."

"No," said Mark testily. "I suppose you wouldn't. I don't know. But if I do it, it will be with my eyes open." Which seems a most unforeign saying.

There was an evening when he was alone with Unity on Squire Martin's front porch. It was one of the languorous nights that sometimes come to Bethel in early September. Mark talked little and that in low tones.

Once he leaned toward her. He had to peer closely to make out her look of content.

"Do you know," he remarked, "you ought to be glad I came back!"

"Indeed! And why?"

"Have you looked in the mirror lately? When I first came you looked—well, crazy and as though you didn't care whether school kept or not.

"Well, of all the conceit! I suppose you take all the credit." Thus she admitted certain improvements.

"And why not?" he laughed lightly. "When you come right down to it, Unity, you never really, definitely threw me over.

"It isn't too late."

"Yes, it is too late."

She said nothing. But when he came to take her hand he found it a tightly clenched little ball.

"Unity, do you remember the drive we took that Sunday before I went to city?"

"I think I do."

"Do you think she does?" he apostrophized the night. "I have a scheme. Tomorrow, right after dinner, I'm going to drive down your way. Unity, let's have the Sunday over again—in every detail."

Again she was stingy.

"You don't agree?"

"I—I'm not sure."

"That you love me?"

She made no reply. "That I want to marry you."

But when he drew her down and kissed her, she did not resist. "Wait, I'm not quite sure that I want tomorrow. Then you will be convinced—Although what virtue the morrow would hold he did not say. He probably did not guess.

Unity did not confide to change the current of another's life, she saw no reason for acquiring the habit. Mark loved Mark. But she did not believe his expressed resolve to stay in Bethel was could be genuine; or if genuine, that its execution would be good for him. And, irrelevant as it may seem, he knew no more than she wanted.

Next day they drove over much the same road they had taken seven years before. They chatted in lighter vein, with intervals of eloquent silence. On a clifftop whence they could see only other hills and the sinking sun they ate the lunch put up by the thoughtful Simon. Then they waited to watch the sunset.

Unity, what must I do to convince you?"

"Nothing," she murmured.

He considered his happiness.

And after a while she said: "Tell me about your life in the city. You've never said much about it."

Innocent demand! Not in vain is the ear set in the ample sight of a young man in love. He began to describe the life he had led in Hedley's and in his words crept the unconscious sequence of a real enthusiasm. His face grew animated. Unknown to him, he was on his feet declaiming to her, with his hat in extemporaneous gesture. He saw what he described.

"Ah! she breathed, as he reached a period "What a life! And you could leave it?"

"I'm forgot," he reminded her, "I was put out of it.

She leaned forward suddenly, resting her hand on the one that held the stars. "Mark, why don't you go back to it?"

He jerked his head free, as if he had felt a twinge of pain. "Don't suggest that, Unity!" he cried. "There's that other side. It's hard and cruel and narrowing. It cats up all the best of you. Sometimes it kills you. It makes you a machine, not your own man. I used to feel it when I was there, sometimes terribly. Here I see it from a distance and understand better. It just does not fit into the life I lead. He stopped abruptly, with his eyes on her intently.

"If I go back, Unity, you won't—this now could be good enough for me? Interpret the hot surging that drowned it?"

She sighed happily.

He was soon to learn.

WHALES SWEPT IN BY BIG TIDE

TAKEN FOR WARSHIPS

Pair Battle Valiantly in Vain Struggle Against the Waves. Leaping Water Into Frame—Natural History Museum Gets Bodies.

New York.—These she blows! Whales in the offing!

A young man, bareheaded, with stentorian lungs and wearing a proper bathing suit, raced down the boardwalk at mean high tide at Long Beach the other morning. While his otherpeaked cries might not have aroused the placid inhabitants of New Bedford, it did stir up a sensation at Long Beach.

He was terribly in earnest, and passers by he explained as best he could that there was the sight of their lives swatting those who had confidence enough in his word to go up the beach a short distance beyond the bathing.

Much one unusually high and strong sweep of the waves mother and baby were thrown high and dry on the shore and so far inland that no succeeding wave was strong enough to sweep them back into the water.

Their death struggles were not long drawn out and so there was no necessity for the use of harpoons.

When the excitement had abated, and a few tears shed by sympathizing young women who possibly thought that rescue such a time would make a rich suitable young man, word was conveyed to the beach by telephoned from Nassau to the American Museum of Natural History and the necessary permits were obtained for the mammoth mammals. Early in the search by the officers before the mob was placed in jail produced from Graham's clothing a little bits of razor and a pocket knife.

The use of lime as binding material for mortar originated in the remote past. It is probable that some savages when using limestone rocks to confine their fire noticed that the stones were changed by the action of the heat. "Pulse" she certainly did for with a sound that threw her great bulk—you body up in the air until her white underbelly glistened in the sun, the mother dived "deep water have found shallow bottom" right there, for in less than a minute she was back alongside her calf and being swept to the shore by the force of its tide. For perhaps five minutes more the pair struggled against fate, lashing the water into foam and giving to the onlookers such a sensation as it generally vouchsafed only to summer resorts only when the sea serpent puts in his annual appearance. But there was no "fake" about this show.

STORIES from the BIG CITIES

Chicago Judge's Dead Pig Is His Bailiff's Jinx

CHICAGO.—Judge Adam J. Petit of the circuit court directed his deputy bailiff, John Hickey, to take a dressed pig to the Judge's home in Rogers Park. Hickey started to wrap the pig. "Don't you know it's against the law to take a pig on the L?" said one of Hickey's associates. "A friend of mine was arrested last winter by health officers because it is against the law to take dead animals among passengers in public conveyances."

"If they don't see the pig they won't know it," said Hickey.

Before he could leave the county building other deputies told newsboys Hickey was going to carry out the body of a dead baby that had been used as an exhibit in a murder trial. The crowd followed in front of the building.

"Where coming sahoo" was enough to bring the bather out of the way of possible danger, and as soon as wraps could be doned there was a rush for the rolling chairs in order to get a sight at the unusual visitors who had dared to disturb the serenity of Long Beach.

Such unwonted excitement had changed the cry of whales into a yarn that the capture of more were a couple of German cruisers chasing a British ship in shore for refuge. Glasses that some of the crowd had reduced the cruisers to submarines, when the owners of the glasses described the two black objects that were creating very much of a hubbub in the waters as they splashed their flukes and sent the spray skyward in something like miniature waterspouts

"Those who were earliest to reach the spot where later the visitors landed were sure that the strangers were nothing more than huge porpoises. An extremely long and exciting half hour solved the mystery, for there was then

Getting Cheering Information From a Hospital

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Medical men sometimes tell about the old, inefficient times in hospital management when, for six hours after a well-known man had died, a hospital telephone girl continued to tell his friends who inquired about him that he was "resting as well as a man in his situation could be expected to rest." Of course, such a thing could not happen nowadays, but—

Willie was in an Indianapolis hospital recently. The first morning after a slight operation his daddy telephoned to ask about him. "He had a good night, has had his bath and has eaten his breakfast," said the girl at the other end of the line. It was indeed reassuring. The afternoon the boy's mother called on him and he was indeed, all right. The next morning the answer at the hospital was just the same. It was suspicious. When the same words, precisely, were used the third morning and the fourth, the father began to be suspicious. He called up the hospital and was informed that early that morning, after the boy had been taken home the evening before, Willie ended the hospital and had died in his sleep. "Why, daddy, he was alive, in fine condition, when I left him," he said. "He had a good night, has had his bath and has eaten his breakfast."

"That's just what you always say," insisted daddy. "Have you really had information about Willie this morning."

"Why, certainly!" came the sweet voice with an undoubted indication of an offended air about it.

He didn't tell the girl any better—what was the use?

AMERICAN SOLDIERS CHEERED THE BULL

Mexicans Could Not Understand the "Gringo" Idea of Their National Sport.

Vera Cruz, Mex.—The bull doesn't get a fair chance, was the status which General Funston gave for prohibiting bullfighting in Vera Cruz. It's a thoroughly good American reason.

As soon as bullfighting ceased a quick-footed, moore-mad little Spaniard, who runs a theater in a big frame building here, dug up a moving picture film which had been taken at the height of the season in the great bull ring at Madrid. Five of the greatest bullfighters in the world—Pastor and Gaona, Mexican idos toreados—were shown killing one bull each. Each bull in turn was shown on the screen in the act of killing six or eight splendid horses.

The many Americans in the audience on the first night were sickened with disgust. The Spanish and Mexican can trick of permitting a bull to toss a heavy horse about on its horns until it is tired out was soon spoiled by the American beholders. They saw that each "valiant" matador, just before the final thrust, was fearful not a solid, ferocious bull, but a pitifully exhausted and weak wreck that could barely go one.

The film showed the sixth bull entering the ring, to be faced by the great Spanish fighter, Funston. And all of a sudden the picture stopped, several printed lines were thrown on the screen, explaining that the next day would show how Funston had been terribly injured by the bull. An hour later the film was in Vera Cruz. It was pay night and many soldiers were in the crowd. The picture was resumed. The bull nonchalantly tossed matador, the matador slipped; the bull caught the fallen matador on his horns, ripped up about the ring, shaking him like a rag.

Some one in the rear clapped some one near him joined him. In a minute the clapping was drowned in cheers for the bull. Yelled an army captain. "Funston, you lied!"

Suddenly a soldier grabbed a Mexican by the nape of the neck, knocked him on his feet and then knocked him down. The son of a gun was blessing the bull. He objected to a comrade as the lights went on.

BIRD A MURDERER'S MASCOT

Little Sparrow Comes to His Prison Cell and Grows to Be Familiar.

Reading, Pa.—Calcagnot Strazzieri, a prisoner in the county jail, made application for a new trial, has a great way of getting his bird in his cell. He has for his companion a sparrow, which came to him a week ago. The bird is now tame and is taken as a good omen by the prisoner.

During the short time the bird has been in the prisoner's cell he has taught it many tricks. When he goes to sleep the bird will sit on his head, but content till he places it in the pocket of his pajamas. Here it will remain all morning. When he wakes up his clothes, out out of his hand at will and does not appear to be satisfied unless it is constantly fondled.

MAN SAVED BY SCARED MULE

Frightened Animal Pulls Its Driver From Rest as the Train Smashes the Wagon.

Beverly, N. J.—A frightened mule saved the life of a Beverly man last night in this city, when a midnight eastbound passenger train struck the wagon at the unprotected grade crossing at Hallowell avenue and Mount Holly road.

The driver failed to see the locomotive, but the mule saw it and became so frightened that it violently started ahead, pulling its driver from the wagon, and the wagon was smashed into a pile of splinters, the Hedley's Elegantes, who had the times about the wagon, and fortunately for the man jerked from the seat as the pilot hit the wagon, demolishing it.

Providence Mob Wrecked Stores.

Providence, R. I.—A mob of more than 300 persons angered at the increase in the price of foodstuffs, especially macaroni and spaghetti, broke into a riot at Providence, marched through a large portion of the city, wrecked six stores. The trouble started after a large number of women had been held among the Italian residents at which addresses were made by New York and Boston agitators.

This Hog Has Eight Feet.

Owanka, S. D.—Pickled pigs' feet will no longer be a luxury under any kind of a guarantee. Gilbert Michael Bangost, a stock raiser of Owanka, is able to continue raising hogs with eight feet like one he recently marketed. The animal had an extra foot attached to each ankle and all were well developed and of ordinary size.

NEWS and GOSSIP of WASHINGTON

Uncle Sam's Marine Band Is Now 116 Years Old

WASHINGTON.—A recent writer, in discoursing about the Marine band, of which the Marine band, which was formed in 1798, remained in 0. Sousa approved an act establishing it as a permanent organization. The original law provided for a fife and drum corps, consisting of 16 drummers and same number of fifers, one of whom was to act as fife-major. This aggregation of musicians constituted the Marine band until the arrival of the Neapolitans, some three years later.

An old tradition has it that the original Marine band was recruited from Sicily. According to this account, one Captain McNeil of the frigate Boston was cruising in the Mediterranean when an irresistible longing for some real music came over him. While sailing he was delighted and pleased with the performance of a Sicilian regimental band and at once conceived a plan for securing nearly all music during the remainder of his voyage. He at once blandly invited the musicians on board his vessel for the delectable purpose of playing for him. Probably induced by the prospect of receiving a liberal compensation, the members of the band accepted the invitation with alacrity.

Soon after the musicians with their instruments had gone on board Captain McNeil suddenly found it necessary to hoist anchor and set under way for the United States. The Sicilians protested but to no avail. The captain carried them bodily off and was entertained by their playing all the way.

No authentic record showing what finally became of these Italian musicians is now in existence, as many of the first Marine band were destroyed in 1814. It is shown, however, in official records that shortly after the organization of the Marine corps Lieutenant Commandant Henderson brought from Naples a group of 15 Italian musicians, whose addition to the organization made of it an instrumental band.

One of the Greatest Libraries of the World

ALREADY one of the greatest of the libraries of the world and the largest and most important in the western hemisphere, it is apparent that the library of congress is to become national in the broadest and most inclusive sense. It is that already—but not to the degree that will be one of it after awhile. The policy with regard to the library of congress is briefly yet fully stated by Mr. Herbert Putnam, librarian since 1899, in those words:

In each country there should be one library as nearly as possible comprehensive. This means industry, accumulation and preservation. In the United States that library is the national library at the national capital. Its possession of the American book, of the little-noticed one, has made the local libraries to get along without them. A book here is available to the entire country, and this means a great saving in the country as a whole.

Mr. Putnam points out that the word "comprehensive," as used by him, does not mean the purchase of everything in print. If congress each year were to give the same sum of money for which it was asked, it would be exercised in the purchase of books that selection which has been the policy of the land. The work of selection is being carried into the copyright deposits. It will be a portion of which are placed in the library.

"More bookstacks cost little," adds Mr. Putnam. "As against the cost of the building the cost of the bookstacks is a relatively small one. At the present rate of increase, which is about eighty to ninety thousand volumes a year, it would not exceed one per cent of the cost of the building.

"So far as the library building is for the reader, for exhibition purposes, and for the purposes of ordinary administration, it will be good for an indefinite number of time, in spite of our annual additions in the way of volumes and pamphlets.

Places of Historical Interest Near Washington

"WHAT a wonderful opportunity for the study of history is provided within a radius of 100 miles around Washington," remarked D. H. Sommers of Parkersburg, W. Va., the other day. "I recently took a quick trip through Virginia, and every moment of my time some point of historical interest was opened to me. Within ten miles of Washington are seven of the important battles of the Civil war, and there are still in the walls of the old courthouse in Fredericksburg still to be seen cannon balls. Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, is rich with historic spots. The present capital building was where the ordinance of secession, which was adopted by the Civil war, was signed. The James river is lined with interesting places. It was on the banks of this stream that the first permanent white settlement in the western continent was established. I saw magnificent brick palaces that even today are regarded as the finest residences which were built a century and more ago from bricks imported from England. At Cape Henry still stands the first light house ever built on the western continent, constructed from brick brought from England.

"It is remarkable that so few persons in Washington realize the wealth of historical interest that surrounds them within a radius of 200 miles. I dare say that the people of Europe know more about their native countries than we in the United States know about our own country.

Spaniel Enjoys Distinction in Official Society

SENATOR JAMES E. MARTINE'S King Charles spaniel enjoys great distinction in official society of which he is a member, for he is not only the closest member of official periodom, but he always has the entree at the White House, where he is a prime favorite.

Ambassadors, senators, representatives and minor officeseekers may cool their heels in the anteroom. But not so with Bruno. He enjoys the presence of the president and intimate friend of the president. He goes to the office if they lived in New Jersey, so when he arrives at the White House he simply walks and announced into the room where the president is, knowing that he will receive a warm welcome. Bruno is fifteen years old and thinks a good deal of the comforts of life. His special delight is to lie in a big rocking chair, of which the senator is also very fond, and sometimes get it before Bruno gets worries Bruno a good deal.

It has always been his habit when he wished to take the air to walk to the door and wait for his master to open it for him. Now, when senator Martine gets the chair first, Bruno frequently walks to the door, and when his master goes up to open it, he flies back and jumps up in the chair and settles down with a series of little grunts.

TOOK BISHOP AT HIS WORD

Footman May Have Been Considerably Astonished, but He Was True to His Master's Orders.

Bishop Hendrie the well-known English clergyman, sometimes tells this story against himself. Dining at the house of Mr. Wood, he entertained old story of the small boy who, going to a party, was instructed by his mother, as he had not been very well, "Not suppose they will give you any supper," he said. "Oh, you must still say, 'No, thank you.'" And if they do not insist again! "Oh, he wouldn't be so rude as to do that. Now, it is time you were off." The boy was returned home in tears. Asked what had happened, he replied with his mummy, they asked me to have cake, and I said, 'No, thank you'; and they asked me again, and I said, 'No, thank you'; and then they asked me again, and I said just the same, 'No, thank you.' The damn thing away—"

At that moment a passing footman caught the bishop's last words, and with a start swung down the hall, half-flushed plate, and bore it away.

ECZEMA ON CHILD'S BODY

870 High St., Oakland, Wis.—"When our little boy was three years old he broke sores break out on different parts of his body. We tried everything we could to stop the sores but they continued to spread and bleed. We had to tie his hands, even while he was asleep, to keep him from scratching them off the sores would be raw and bleeding by morning. His clothing or the least friction irritated the trouble. His face and scalp were covered. They called it eczema.

"We tried different treatments but none cured him. When our boy was 4 years old we commenced the use of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. It took hardly a year to effect a complete cure and he never had anything like it since." (Signed) Mrs. F. Schmidt, Mar. 18, 1914.

Local and Personal Notes

George Glados and wife went to Chicago yesterday.

A bouncing boy at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cheney.

Thos. Shawley and wife are visiting friends in Grand Rapids.

R. P. Foley left today for his winter hotel at Winter Park, Florida.

Mrs. Mary Baker, of Hayes, who has been very ill for two weeks, is improving.

The ladies of the Eastern Star will give a supper at Masonic Temple Friday evening, October 30th.

Chase Osborn refers to Mr. Ferris as "our good grey democratic governor." Chase was never anything if not chivalrous.

Mrs. G. W. Crouter left Saturday for Seattle to settle up certain business there in which her late husband was interested.

Geo. McNally, marine engineer, who has been in a timber towing tug on Puget Sound the past two years, is here on a visit for a month.

Capt. Peter McCafferty and John Kelley, who have been jogging in Chicago, returned here last week and will fit out the tug Major for fall fishing.

Now that Charlevoix is the home of Capt. James Sanford, he has had the boiling port of the steamer S. M. Stephenson changed from Sandusky to Charlevoix.

Prof. Babbit having removed from Charlevoix, Miss Mildred Eckinger has taken his piano class, and will take an additional number of pupils between the first and sixth grades.

The steamer Lena Knoblock, which has been laid up all summer, is being fitted out by Capt. Knight, and will do a general small freight business between points on this coast and the islands.

In the month of November will occur the experience meeting of the Congregational Ladies' Aid Society. All are asked to bear this in mind, and be ready for the evening which will be announced later.

The tug Margaret McCann, of St. James, came over Sunday afternoon for inspection. On the way over, in a lively sea Peter Burns, a passenger, slipped on the deck and fell, breaking his right arm below the elbow.

Isaac Mills, of Marion, brings us a magnificent bouquet gathered in his garden. The editor of this paper gets lots of bouquets, during the bouquet season, and some lemons at all seasons, but this acknowledgement is intended to remind less favored climes at this writing, October 12th we have not had a frost that would kill a tulip, and we expect to get more bouquets and, perchance some late strawberries.

Ben Brown is still expanding. He has well along toward completion a cement building in the rear of his present commodious store. The structure is 60x60, and will be fitted as a garage, salesroom and shop for vulcanizing and repairs. Mr. Brown has the county agencies for the Saxon and Krit automobiles, and proposes to push them, meantime doing an all-around general repair and supply business. The Ben Brown establishment is now the most extensive and complete of its kind in the county.

Forrest H. Blanchard is now confined to his bed at the Hotel Elston, a very sick man.

Don't forget the Firemen's Fish Supper at Coatta's Restaurant Saturday evening.

The Rummage Sale given by the ladies of the M. E. Church will begin Saturday at A. E. Mason's store.

Capt. John Nordrum left Monday for Gloucester, where he will resume salt water fishing but expects to return here in the spring.

Printed comparisons between the Republican and Democratic tariff which, dispatches say, the Democrats in power have refused to publish, evidently because they are afraid it will be used against them in the campaign, are not required by the American workingman. He knows what the Underwood tariff has done to him. The effort of Democrats in Congress, however, seems to be an attempt to befuddle the workingman on the tariff and lots of other things.

A Mr. Mayhew, of Ellsworth, driving his car, with John C. Smith, also of Ellsworth, as a passenger, at a point between Ellsworth and Atwood, last week Thursday, turned his car over into the ditch. Mr. Smith had an arm broken, shoulder and wrist dislocated, and three ribs broken. Mayhew was considerably bruised. Dr. King was sent for, and the Doctor brought Mr. Smith to Charlevoix, the X-Ray applied and the smashed anatomy readjusted, after which he was taken home to Ellsworth.

Plans are being formulated by the liquor interests to initiate constitutional amendment to be submitted at the coming spring election, which, if passed, would change the local option law so that instead of voting by county on the "wet" and "dry" issue like voters would vote by townships. Under this system a township voting "wet" could have one saloon for every 500 inhabitants, and it would be possible to have one township dry and the adjoining one wet. The anti-saloon league, it is declared, will vigorously oppose the amendment. Dry leaders have believed such a change in the state law would permit the number of saloons in the state to be greatly increased.

CHARLEVOIX CO., MICH.

"The County With A Climate."

There is a reason why the farmers of Charlevoix County, and the business men of the more old cities of Charlevoix County, should form an organization for the promotion of the best interests of the county. In fact, such an organization is a necessity at the present time in order to hold themselves together so that we may get what is coming to us.

Charlevoix County is a county with a climate. No other county in our state, nor any county in any other state has such a wonderful good climate as has Charlevoix County, and I honestly believe that, as a community of interests, we are face to face with the percentagy necessity of taking a deeper interest in the development of our county. It is the duty of every voter, as well as non-voter, to think seriously of the problems that confront us, in order that we may make effective contributions by word and deed to help form sound public decisions on the vital questions that pertain to the future welfare of our county. At much be Charlevoix County first, last and all the time. The things we complain of today can mostly be traced to our own neglect of public duties, either at the polls or otherwise. I firmly believe that if this county is to be put to the front of all other counties, it behooves us each and everyone to get up and work. Nous are so big that they can afford to ignore the necessities of these times, our none too year to lend a helping hand. The road can be worked out, and the country, as a whole, will be the gainer. It results will as compare all of Charlevoix County.

A road that will last one hundred years, with no charge for upkeep, which can be built in one year or two at the outside, and which would encircle Five Lake, would add to the value of Charlevoix County in ten years more than the entire road will cost, and now is the time to build it. Every dollar paid out for the building of that road will be paid out in Charlevoix County, except for the cement.

There! I have given my plan away, which I did not intend to do at the present time, but I have not so many letters inquiring about it that I feel it is pretty nearly time I should make it known, but will not give it all away. I want the farmers to think over and decide what they would like and how much they could save with such a road, one that would last one hundred years, and on that their children would have to help pay for.

It has been said of a chain (and truly so) that it is as strong as its weakest link. So is a road. Just as big a load, or more, can be drawn over the worst piece of road, just as good a road. A mile or so of fairly good road is no help. The road is as bad as the poorest part, but if it were good all the way and one could haul three times instead of a half or one, how much would a farmer add to his net profit when hauling a load of produce to market!

What I claim, and what we all know is this: That the present way of building roads is endlessly the most costly, as well as all. This excessive tax falls equally hard on the well-to-do or on the poor, the farmer and city man alike. There is a reason, and it stands to reason. Just a couple of miles built according to the present method, between any two points, which has to be rebuilt by the time the next two miles are finished or perhaps sooner, proves conclusively that there never will be a time when the entire road will be in perfect condition, and such is the case with our present manner of road building.

Now, why should we continue to pay out our money for the building and rebuilding of such roads, when a road can be built which will last one hundred years, the upkeep of which will be practically nothing for the first ten or twenty years. There is a reason for building a road that will last one hundred years. It will pay for itself. Of course road builders would have to be engaged, with competent engineers to see that it is built so that it will last one hundred years, and this can be done. Then, when we get our share from the state we will have something to show for it that will be of lasting benefit.

Compare this plan with the present way, and see what a great saving could be made every year on our road tax, and then add to it two important items, the saving it would be to a farmer who could haul three loads instead of a half ton or a ton, and the inducement it would be to the vast number of people owning automobiles to come up here to make purchases all along the line of this road. The top of every hill, as well as every hill side, would be dotted with just as nice cottages as any we have in Charlevoix.

The country is ripe for immediate action. The devastation going on in the Old Country will be an inducement for our people to spend, as statistics show, $600,000,000 here instead of abroad every year, and Charlevoix county with its unequalled climate stands the best show of any place in the United States, if we will give the people what they want in order to draw them here. California has spent many millions of dollars on its roads, and they have not so good a climate as we have, but they take thousands of people from the eastern states who go there with their automobiles and spend their money freely.

I recognize that this is a progressive step, but progress means success, and there is not a man in Charlevoix county, nor one that can't lead Charlevoix county, where on Charlevoix county, that would not be benefited by it, but we cannot afford to build for the present only, in building them so that they will last for one hundred years. The grand or rock road being built now will not start the test of heavy automobiles. That is acknowledged fact by all road builders, and something more expensive and durable has to be built, and the quicker we do it, the better we will be off.

Yours truly,

GEORGE H. VAN FELT.

At the meeting of the Board of Supervisors of Antrim county at Bellaire, last week, the matter of dividing the township of Banks, making two townships, is again up for action.

Central Lake Torch—As accident that came close to being fatal occurred at the fair grounds in Bellaire last Thursday. Merritt Hodge, a prominent Torch Lake farmer and fruit grower and well known throughout the county, not noticing the calls of warning from the marshals, attempted to cross the race track, just in time to be run down by F. H. Maltby's horse which was being exercised by Sherman Pendock. One of the shafts entered his side close to his heart, breaking one rib and injuring him severely. He was carried to the Riverside Hotel, where he was given all possible care by Drs. Lowell and Rodle. For some time his life was despaired of, but he gradually became stronger and it is thought he will recover completely.

Boyne Citizen:- W. F. Tindall, the strawberry man is still picking strawberries from plants which have been bearing since last July. The profits are from a single season as the plants were set out last spring. The berries are meeting a ready market here at twenty-five cents a box and several crates have been shipped to Chicago where they brought forty cents a box, the purchaser paying the express charges. From the patch which is bearing the late fall berries Mr. Tindall has averaged 200 to the acre. A positive proof to the skeptics who may doubt that these berries were picked as late as October 10, Mr. Tindall has had a photograph taken of the pickers in the field and the berries crated. To prove the date, a ripe watermelon squash and pumpkin, were placed beside the strawberries to show that when the photo was taken it was getting along late in the fall.

It Was Good Advice.

A wildly turbulent peasant was once in a village of Alsatia before Count Oldenburg. The counsel, after pretending him for some time, put a question to him, which reflected on the villagers' character.

"If you say one that again I'll give you a kick in the shin!" was the answer.

The counsel appealed to the court, stating that an assault was committed upon his client's person, and demanding redress for it.

"If you are resolved to repeat the question," replied the court, "I'd advise you to move a little from the witness" —London Mail.

NOTE THESE COMMENDATIONS OF CHASE S. OSBORNE'S RECORD

Among the other privileges that will be coming election will be that of voting for one of the several candidates for governor, whose names will be printed on the official ballot.

Two of these candidates for Governor have occupied the high office to which they again aspire. What has been true as to their records as state officials?

The taxpayers of Michigan know it to be true that the present administration, that of Governor Ferris, has been the costliest period in the history of our state.

The people of Michigan also know that Governor Osborn had the courage of his convictions and that he vetoed such appropriation bills as he thought were not immediately needed and cut out other items that he knew could be spared.

As Michigan's chief executive Mr. Osborn kept his promise to the voters in the matter of careful and economical administration of state affairs.

What further can be said of Mr. Osborne's record as Governor of the state? Just this: It was at his request of it just before he assumed the duties of the office he now holds:

"If I can do as much for the people of the state as Governor Osborn has done I will feel that I have made a splendid mark. I am delighted at the endorsement that Governor Osborn has received and I heartily agree with all of them. Two years ago I read his inaugural address to the legislature and concluded that he was a man of convictions. There are few messages that can compare with that document."

Lawton T. Hemans, who has twice been the Democratic candidate for Governor, is of the conclusion of Mr. Osborn's term as Governor, said of him: "I think that Governor Osborn has succeeded in bringing about a new era in Michigan politics and the people of Michigan will always have reason to feel proud that they made him their leader."

O. E. Wood, present secretary of the Democratic state central committee, at the same time said of Governor Osborn's record: "The legislation that has been enacted during the two years of his administration will stand as a perpetual monument to Governor Osborn's efforts to place Michigan among the foremost states of the union."

The voters of Michigan should have this record of the Republican candidate for Governor in mind when they prepare their ballots on election day.

County Normal Notes

HALE TEAM.

W. F. Bashaw, county truant officer, made us a visit last Thursday morning.

The class had a debate Tuesday of last week, the subject being: Resolved, that we should have medical inspection in schools. Both sides did very good work, and showed strength along that line. The class has been divided for the purpose of debating, Ward Gerett being chosen for one divisor and Clare Thorsen of the other.

Cho Thorne and Gladys Waterman are home from their visits.

Cora Driggett and Marie Siminan are the editors this week.

Mr. Willard Howe, of class of 1914, visited the Normal room last Friday afternoon. He is teaching school at Pomona, Manistee County. Mr. Howe gave a short talk of his experiences, and social life in the district.

The class attended the meeting of the board of supervisors, Friday forenoon. The board voted on the road tax and on other business.

DEATH OF A MODEL CITIZEN

Forrest S. Blanchard, Veteran Business Man, Closes a Long and Honorable Career

Although hope of the recovery of F. S. Blanchard was abandoned by his relatives and friends some weeks ago, the death of that prominent and respected citizen last Thursday morning was the cause of much sincere regret.

Mr. Blanchard has been for more than a year a sufferer from stomach trouble, but, due to his habits of business activity and against the wishes and advice of his friends, he continued the management of his business up to last week, when he suffered severe hemorrage and was removed from his room over the store to the Elston Hotel, where he died.

Deceased was born in Albion, Michigan, a little more than sixty-six years ago, and spent the years of his boyhood and young manhood there, coming to Charlevoix thirty-one years ago, entering the hardware business with his brother-in-law, the late L. D. Barth, olomew, under the firm name of L. D. Bartholomew & Co. About ten years ago he purchased the interest of Mr. Bartholomew and has conducted the business alone since.

Forrest S. Blanchard was the personification of personal and business integrity. He was one of that class of business men of whom it may be truthfully said "his word was as good as his bond."

He was married late in life to Miss Tallman, of Chicago, but was bereft of his companion about four years ago. He was a brother of Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew, of this city.

The funeral was from the Bartholomew residence on the north side Friday afternoon; interment at Albion.

SUPERVISORS AND THE LOCAL OPTION QUESTION

On a technical question involving the posting of petitions, in which there was a clear irregularity, the board denied the petitions for submission of the local option question at the coming spring election. Likewise they refused to continue the session by an adjournment till January, which would have given them the opportunity of renewing the fight for submission. The double-barreled action of the board clearly demonstrated the fact that the board is overwhelmingly a dry organization. This conveys a lesson, as reflecting the sentiment throughout the county on this question. Charlevoix county is against the return of the saloons.

The publisher of this paper confesses to have favored the submission of the question, on the grounds, first, that technicalities of this nature are doubtful refuge where a great principle is involved; second, that a square field fight on the merits of the case cannot fail to result in defeat for the saloons; third, that such a victory for the dry forces would undoubtedly settle the question for years to come; fourth, the well grounded assurance that Emmet and Otsego counties will vote dry next spring would make it an overwhelming victory for Northern Michigan, and multiply the moral effect of such victory.

This paper has been in two local option fights, and, notwithstanding the most unpleasant consequences that it always engendered, it is ready for another. Its opinion concerning saloons is unchanged. They are a menace to the public welfare and an enemy of domestic tranquility.

GOOD TESTIMONY

Mr. Abbott, of Boyne City, who visited our produce show last week, has this to say:

"I had the pleasure last Saturday of visiting the Fruit and Vegetable Exhibit at Charlevoix. I have attended a great many Fairs and Fruit Exhibits but I never witnessed so nice a display of fruit and vegetables as was exhibited at Charlevoix on Saturday October 10.

"As one of the judges of the Fruit Exhibit, I can testify to the perfection of the fruit offered. It was well colored, true to name, of uniform size and some of them absolutely free from blemish. I want to speak particularly of a bushel of King apples, two bushels of Lawrence, some Wagners and Greenings which were specially fine."

It also gives us pleasure to compliment the exhibitors upon their packing, many of them used the modern methods and even those who had packed them in baskets and crates had taken pains and we found that they were of uniform size and color throughout the package."

One of the most important good road affairs in Emmet county history was the banquet and meeting the 15th, conducted by the Petoskey Automobile club, and attended by the board of supervisors county road commissioners, city street committee and many other interested citizens. The event was held for the purpose of perfecting co-operation in building and maintaining good roads throughout the county, and to decide on the best methods of expending the $20,000, which probably will be appropriated by the supervisors for road work the ensuing year.

BIG SUPPLY OF APPLES

BUYING IN BARREL LOTS IS URGED

This Plan Would Dispose of the Large Crop and Put Money into Circulation

The production of apples in the state of Michigan for the year 1914 was 19,356,000 bushels, which means about 6,000,000 barrels of apples. There is every indication at the present time that the crop in Michigan this year will be fully 30 per cent greater than last year, and in many sections of the state the farmers are not picking the apples because it is claimed there is no market for them. Apples and potatoes in Michigan are what cotton is to the southern states, and if the south is going to be relieved at the present time by disposing of its cotton in single bale lots in order to provide a market and to provide funds for the grower with which to meet his living expenses, why should not the Michigan producer be cared for in the same patriotic way. A bale of cotton costs about $50.00. A barrel of apples would cost two or three dollars, at least half of which would go to the grower. If every family would immediately purchase a barrel of Michigan apples it would give an immediate stimulus to the apple growers of the state and would enable them to market this year's crop, a considerable portion of which is yet unpicked. If one million barrels of apples could be disposed of in this way within the next two weeks, it would mean the placing into circulation among the farmers of Michigan at least a million dollars and prove a wonderful benefit in the fruit growing districts of the state. Michigan is producing fruit which in the matter of flavor is far superior to that brought in from outside states, and every effort should be used to stimulate the consumption of the home product.

INDUSTRIAL COMMUNITY

Israelite House of David, of Benton Harbor, Prospering in High Island Branch Community

Fifty tons of hay and one thousand bushels of winter apples is what a representative of the High Island House of David colony is here buying for winter consumption. The steamer Rising Sun, owned by the community, is expected here this week to transfer these supplies and a large amount of other necessaries to the island.

This interesting religious cult owns large acreage on High Island, where they have a lumber and shingle mill. This year they have cut and shipped a million feet of lumber and two million shingles. They expect to exceed this cut in 1915, and, secondly, they expect to clear up a large acreage of farming land and have it ready for the plow next spring. They raised 1200 bushels of potatoes this year and expect to double those figures next year.

There are 30 House of David people on the Island now, but the Rising Sun will bring 180 more. They have a school, comfortable buildings, and are a law-abiding, industrious and honest people. It is the intention of the authorities of the colony to announce develop the Island into a strictly agricultural and fruit raising establishment.

Hopeless Lung Trouble Cured

Many researches from Long Fountain due to Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey. It strengthens the Lungs, checks the cough and gives relief at once.—Mrs. W. S. Wilkins, Gates, N. C. writes: "I used Dr. Bell's Pine-tar-Honey in a case given up as hopeless and it effected a complete cure. DRY ONE MORE YEAR AT LEAST

Supervisors Throw Out Local Option Petitions on Illegality Ruling by the Attorney General

Board Adjourns Without Day, Which Shuts Out Further Local Option For One Year

Charlevoix county will remain dry for one more year because the wets failed to do good head work in the petition formalities prescribed in the statute. Prosecuting attorney Fitch, as the legal advisor of the board, has been in telegraphic communication with the attorney general for several days, and an apparent delinquency developing in the matter of posting the petitions, the question, with all the facts, was submitted to the attorney general, and a written opinion from that official declaring illegality, the board was obliged to reject the petitions. Therefore, the wets are, for a second time, defeated by reason of faulty compliance with the law.

There were those among the dry advocates who considered it best to let the issue go to the people, being skeptical as to the advantage of claiming technical default. It was argued that, as Emmet and Otsego counties were to submit the question, Charlevoix county might as well go in and make a "battle of the Marne" of it, which would be a victory worth fighting for. There were those who believed that if the wets were defeated in this county and rejecting it would fix the dry seal on the county for a long time.

But it has turned out that the board of supervisors is a dry organization, and that Charlevoix county will have no salooons for at least one more year.

The wets threaten taking the case to Supreme Court with mandamus proceedings.

NOTABLE MASONIC EVENT

Charlevoix Council, Royal Select and Super-Excellent Masters, which for nearly a year has been working under a dispensation, has been granted a charter, and will be duly instituted on Friday evening of this week, by Most Illustrious Grand Master John H. McCollum, of the Soo, assisted by Grand Lecturer A. H. McCloud.

A large delegation from Petoskey Council is expected to be present, and there will be work in all three degrees.

It is intended that the event shall be a notable one in Charlevoix Masonic history.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

As we go to press the board of supervisors is yet in session. The principal committees are yet at work, but all reports are expected to be in today, and it is thought that the board will adjourn this evening, (Thursday,) or Friday at the latest.

The board has ordered a vault built in the basement of the court house for the storage of the records, and has a clerk was ordered built on the front of the county property between Antrim and Mason streets.

Levy of a three mill tax for highways was voted.

Miss Himes, principal of the County Normal School, was elected school examiner, vice DeVoe removed to other parts.

Wild ducks numbering five thousand, it is estimated, flew over Little Traverse Bay one day last week, spreading a black cloud, extending from Petoskey to Harbor Springs. They settled down in the bay and when darkness descended were still there.

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it.

This is the way it works: Your money, in the form of bills, is used to pay your employes for your services. They will repay the compliment by work for you if you will but give it the opportunity.

Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of this big sum of business when you are prone to envy, thinking they have a mysterious Midas touch. Almost without exception they began with no capital but a strong will and an inflexible purpose.

For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.50 a week. In six years he had banked $1000—enough to start a modest business of his own. MORAL—Bank your own money.

LONGER EARS FOR SHIPS

By ROBERT H. MOULTON

SIR HIRAM MAXIM

AS A RESULT of the Titanic disaster, Sir Hiram Maxim, the inventor of the Maxim gun, has evolved a plan for giving ships a "third sense" that will enable them to avoid icebergs in a fog by the same means by which a bat finds its way about in the dark. For a year or more he has been working on a device which he claims will enable vessels to detect a floating object several miles away, to estimate its size and distance, and to recognize the character of a neighboring shore, so that a harbor, for instance, may be easily entered in a fog. All this is to be done simply by receiving and counting the echoes sent back by the objects to be detected, but the sound that produces the echoes is so inaudible to the ear that it must be amplified. The vibrations are powerful and slow and are given out by a huge siren at the ship's bow. Sensitive receivers are carried aboard vessels, serve as ears, and which are able to give an unmistakable warning than a real ear could do.

RECEIVER

THE COLLOID-PROPELLER IN ACTION

AN INCLINED VIBRATOR OF WHICH IS SUGGESTED

This latest collision preventer is another adaptation of a phenomenon in the natural world. Sir Hiram Maxim has taken his cue from the bat, which he was "astonished to be added to tell the distance of objects by the beat of its wings.

In bats the sense organs are highly developed. When a bat flies about in total darkness the beat of its wings sends out a series of impulses of sound waves. These waves strike against all surrounding objects and are reflected back and received by the sensitive organs which form part of the face of the bat. The extremely delicate nature of the bat's wings, together with the sensitiveness of its sixth sense contained in its delicate face ears, enable the bat to judge the distance of any object by the lapse of time between the sending out and the reflection of the waves. It is this exceptional mechanism, and not any faculty of sight in the dark, which enables the bat to fly unerringly about the house in the dark. This was proved a hundred years ago by the Abbe Spallanzani, who made experiments by blinding the eyes of bats with red hot irons and found that they could fly just as well without eyes as with them. Other experiments, without cruelty, may be made to show the same thing.

We know that the bat can detect a mild bird and liberate it in a large room with closed windows. It makes a soft and furtive rush for what its senses tell it is an opening through which it can escape. Its eyes do not reveal the presence of the glass, and the result is a broken neck. A bat liberated under similar circumstances makes the same dash for freedom. The flapping of its wings, however, brings its sixth sense into action and it soon perceives that it is face to face with a solid wall and stops short before it touches the glass.

Sir Hiram proposes to apply this sixth sense to dangerous vessels. His apparatus will produce atmospheric vibrations of about the same frequency as those produced by the bat, but of energy at least three hundred thousand times as great. These will not be audible, but they will travel at least twenty miles, so that they could be received and recorded by a suitable apparatus at this distance, and would be able to travel at least two miles and return back to the ship a reflected echo that would be strong enough to be detected.

In describing his invention, Sir Hiram says that it might be considered an artificial ear. The apparatus is provided with a large diaphragm tightly drawn over a drum-shaped cylinder, and so arranged that the atmospheric pressure is always the same on both sides, quite irrespective of any air blast. It is therefore always able to receive waves in sympathy with the sound echo, and its vibrations are made to open and close certain electrical circuits which ring a series of bells of various sizes. If, for example, the object is very small or at a very great distance from the ship, a very small bell rings, while a large object at a distance of two miles would ring a larger bell, and a very large object a still larger bell. The apparatus gives an audible notice if anything is ahead of the ship.

Another apparatus, similar to the first, is provided, but instead of ringing a bell it produces a disarm — the disturbance in the air—that is, when there is no noise except that due to the action of the air blast, there is a wavy disarm is produced on paper, but whenever the vibrations sent out by the vibrator strike an object and return, the wave line on the paper becomes much increased in amplitude, so as to be easily observed and the distance from the object to the ship can be measured by the length of the paper strip between the time of the vibration and the receiving of the echo. In this way the distance of the object can be determined with a considerable degree of accuracy, and the size of the object may be determined by the amplitude of the waves that return.

The apparatus for producing the atmospheric vibrations should be placed in the bow of the ship, in a fog or any other position where it can be turned from port to starboard. Of course, there would be no use for the apparatus except in dark, stormy or foggy weather unless it was used in conjunction with other ship aids.

If the sea were perfectly clear the blasts sent out would be recorded at the very instant of their production, but no echo would be produced. But if there should happen to be an object of any considerable size at a distance of not greater than two or three miles the ringing line on the paper would be changed, and the ringing of the bell would be easier to see and would be very noticeable.

To make sure that the apparatus would be repeated repeated blasts would be sent out, and the repeated blasts would be sent out, and the repeated blasts would be sent out, and the LEGISLATION INDORSED.

Michigan State Grange Takes Action on Important Legislative Matters.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the state grange resolutions were passed indorsing, among other things a law guaranteeing bank deposits in Michigan and the complete tonnage tax law. With the elimination of salt and the fixing of graduated rates for iron the committee considered the grange's tonnage tax measure, which is now ready for circulation of petitions required by the initiative. The rate on refined copper is one-fourth cent, as previously fixed; while coal is fixed at 2 cents a ton.

Iron received the biggest share of attention, great effort and much time being devoted by members of the committee to distributing the imposition upon an equitable rate. The rate will average about 79 cents the ton.

Provision is also made in the tonnage tax measure, whereby 90 per cent of the specific tax is to go to the general fund of the state and the remaining 10 per cent to be returned to the counties "for purposes hereafter to be determined." The only those of the whole matter untouched by the proposed tonnage tax bill is what disposition shall be made of the money that is returned to the counties.

The grange declaration for guarantee of bank deposits does not go into detail, but broadly pledges the Michigan state grange on record as favoring such legislation. Discussions in the committee touched upon this guarantee for state bank only, but it was shown that this would exclude the private bank in the small rural community and eventually drive them out of business, since a few of the smaller institutions could capitalize at the $20,000 minimum now required of state banks. The formal attitude of the grange, however, leaves it up to the legislature to make a law covering these smaller banks. If necessary, several of the executive committee would favor admitting the small banks under some sort of provision whereby they would be substantially compelled to increase their capital stock as the deposits increase.

It will be seen that the Michigan grange is interesting itself in matters that belong to the state's interior as well as to those upon the surface, but all those are important considerations for the farmer as a citizen and taxpayer.

Rates to National Grange Meeting.—Preliminary announcement has been made of the railroad rates that will prevail on the occasion of the national grange meeting at Wilmington, Del., in November. The railroads have agreed to a rate of 2 cents a mile in each direction, along the routes by the same route. Tickets will be good going Nov. 6-11, and returning to the original starting point not later than Nov. 25. This is the announcement of the Trunk Line association, and it is a mighty small reduction all things considered.

How the Grange Help.—Union grange of Pennsylvania is a good illustration of how the grange can help in advancing the agricultural interests of the county. At one of its meetings it passed a resolution to help along the movement to secure a farm report for the county, "in every way possible financially and otherwise."

National Anniversary.—The National Grange Monthly suggests that the last session of the national grange take up the question of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the order. Good idea! Let it be done!

Granges Plan Corn Show.—The granges in Delaware county, Pa., will unite in the organization of the Delaware County Corn Growers' association, and committees are preparing to hold a corn show at Media in December.

H. L. Lentzke of Watertown, S. D., who is well known in western grange circles and who is the author of "The Grange Farm Problem," has become his hat into the ring for a senatorship from his state.

RURAL EDUCATION.

Importance of the Boys and Girls' Agricultural Clubs.

Extracts From an Address by Professor F. W. Howe, Director of the Division of Agriculture at Syracuse University—Benefits Summarized.

Public attention is being much directed to the amazing and astonishing issue of certain lines of club work for the benefit of boys and girls. While nearly all of this club work might be described as definitely or broadly agricultural, it takes a great variety of forms in the different states. Thus we find corn growing clubs, cotton growing clubs, potato growing clubs, fruit growing clubs, garden clubs, poultry clubs, sewing clubs, bird study clubs, domestic art clubs and high school and college improvement clubs. As a rule these clubs have an informal organization, and each elects a president, a vice president, secretary-treasurer and sometimes a patron or patron committee, the editor of the school district. Prizes are frequently offered through the efforts of individual citizens or local merchants who desire to show their interest in the educational betterment of the boys and girls in the community.

The kind of school or school-room work for boys and girls should be distinguished sharply from what is ordinarily known as school garden work. School gardens, as a rule, can be worked only with local improvements and fail entirely to give experience in the use of teams and improved implements of farm work. The term of school closes just after the school garden gets ready and just before the work is often abandoned. The school garden as usually managed fails to teach any love of the soil or to give any profits that might stimulate the boys' economic interest in agriculture as a vocation.

The most important benefits of boys' agricultural club work may be summarized as follows:

First—Individually the members of such clubs have been led to observe more closely, to recognize good and bad qualities in the tools they have grown and in the insects, fungi and other various conditions affecting their work; they have met and learned to solve some problems in the improvement of plants, fruits and animals and housework; they have learned that improvement in one direction is not always or even usually accompanied by improvement in all directions; they have learned something of the value of time, the cost of production, and the keeping of simple accounts with different farm and household affairs; they have been encouraged to read good literature and have learned some of the sources of good agricultural literature; their views have been broadened by contact with among and by visiting institutions of learning, highly developed farms and other phases of interest, and finally the power of taking the initiative has in many cases been strengthened in them as individual and responsible members of the community.

Second—Collectively they have learned the value of organized effort, of cooperation and of concentration, and the social instinct has been developed in them, a matter of great importance in rural districts, where the thin isolated condition of the people has long been a great hindrance to progress.

Third—The influence upon the community at large, on the parents as well as the children, has been wholesome, beginning with an awakening interest in these things—better seed corn, for example—communities have rapidly extended their interests to other phases of rural improvement, with the result that in a few years, as shown by the agricultural club movement there has come about a wonderful growth in the intellectual and activities of the people.

Pennsylvania Legislative Committee.—The legislative committee of the Pennsylvania state grange has formulated the following as its platform, which declares for:

Equitable taxation. Appropriation for charities in budget form. Repeal of Jones-Reynolds road law.

Reorganization of the highway department and distribution of aid for original starting point not later than Nov. 25. This is the announcement of the Trunk Line association, and it is a mighty small reduction all things considered.

A UNIQUE CLOSET.

How to Make More Space For Hanging Clothing.

A clever closet arrangement made by a woman who found too little closet room in her small house is an idea well worth passing on. She had a carpenter put up a shelf eighteen inches wide by fifty-six inches long and six inches from the floor. On top he built three hinged eighteen inches square, with drop fronts instead of doors and may catch boxes to fasten them with. Under the shelf he put a wooden curtain pole battery between the edge of the shelf and the wall and three inches from the shelf. The curtain (cretonne herself painted and enameled the shelf and boxes white, fastened a small brass rod around the shelf and made a curtain of dark blue denim, making a set out antique border of the wrong side of the denim, where two pale blue and buttonholes the edge with white. The curtain was quite full, and a few weights were put in the bottom hem to hold the folds in place.

She slipped her best gowns into wall lined muslin bags, thus loving Pa together closet for everyday use. The hollows removed the necessity of having bandboxes under the bed.

In the kitchen she had the carpenter build her a wide low box the width and length of the sill, six inches high and divided into three compartments with hinged covers, in two of them Nora kept her kitchen forks, knives and spoons and in the third small laundry accessories. This left the small table drawer for the towels. In the bottom of each half drawer she put a strip of wood to keep the towels from sliding out the back when she wanted to take out one towel without pulling the rest out. Nora's towels are kept in two hot water makes them tender and causes the threads to break. After washing out the dust in warm water soap them and allow them to stand for fifteen or twenty minutes. Then wash them by hand and always wring from curtains carefully through the wringer, never by hand. That strains them and causes them to break in places. Rinse well in cold water, then starch with warm starch. If this goes on does not bleach them, hang them out to bleach. This is the best way to wash fine curtains, especially ecru colored.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

How to Make a Homemade Fireless Cooker.

The cooker in question was designed by a young housewife and was made by her husband under her supervision. It is a compact box about thirty inches long by fifteen wide and fifteen deep. The cover, instead of fitting over the top, fits just inside, and it is fastened in place, when the box is closed, by two wooden buttons set on to the edge of the box by screws.

The box is lined on the inside with asbestos board, which is nestly tacked in. Two fifteen-inch squares of the same asbestos material divide the interior into three chambers or compartments of equal width. The round openings or "nests" into which the cooking utensils are made to fit are made by rolling pieces of asbestos into cylinder shape and fastening them together with a fine wire.

These round nests vary slightly in diameter the smallest being six inches and the largest seven inches. The spaces between these nests and the sides of the compartments are filled with sawdust, which is packed closely.

A large sheet of asbestos, cut to exactly fit over the top of the box, has three round openings for the three nests. This piece is tacked firmly in place and pressure a very cool appearance. It fits close in at the top of the box, so that when the cover is shut down there is no space between.

There are three small squares of the asbestos which are for covering over the nest openings when food is set in them to be cooked.

Two of the cooking vessels used in this homemade cooker are five pound lard pails, which have tight fitting covers. The third is a larger can, also of tin. The pails have wire handles and can be set in a small wire rack.

The cooker, which cost about $1.50, is expected to take the place of a range oven for its owner. She has a two burner alcohol stove, on which steaks and chops will be cooked and over which the potatoes and iron plates are heated. At night some water is heated over the alcohol stove to put into the "fireless" and kept warm for toilet use in the morning. The cereal also is brought to a boil and then set into the cooker. In the morning there is no boiling of fine accessary. The cereal is ready for the table and coffee can be made and eggs or fish cooked in a few minutes over the alcohol stove. While breakfast is being eaten the dishwater is heating.

After breakfast a rinsings or stew or brains is made ready for the cooker and set into it to cook for the midday meal. This does away with scrubbing pots in the kitchen, and the clever woman who contrived the cooker declares that it has already given her more worth much more than the small amount of money it cost.

Facing the Problem.

BRITISH RAILWAY PORTERS.

And the Magic of the Sixpence or the Shilling as a Tip.

I never had much fruit to find with the British porter and sixpence system of baggage, E. S. Martin writes in Scribner's. You have nothing to show for your trunk when you give it up but the British constitution, and that is not written, but you have to take things as you find them, and under the British system we usually found all the things we took, even our umbrellas.

And the British railway porter is a lovely institution. He is the real father of his country. I was in a perfect frame of mind to appreciate his fatherliness. I wanted him to do all the work, including the necessary thinking, and he did it. I loved to have him bustle in and find us proper seats in trains. In that particular service I am seldom able to realize Jenny's reasonable expectations, but the British porter did and I honored him for it with admiration and siblings.

And isn't a shilling a dear little testament? I was so pleased with them. They do so much for you and leave you with a cheerful glow and a sense of having parted with a true friend. You can get quite a lot of them for $5, and they are the cheapest thing for the money that you can buy in England. Even their fractions are slow, very desirable and convenient, compressionable while they stay with you and recuperative when they leave. I tried to keep always provided with shillings and their silver fractions, and duly also with pennies, which are issued in England in large folio editions.

I can remember when our honorable little cents were of a dignified amplitude like that. Did they buy more then, do you suppose? Certainly they were of more relative importance in the scheme of things then cents are now, and I am not sure but that it would be an operation worth trying on the high cost of living to make them big again.

BUILDING A LIGHTHOUSE.

Rearing the Bell Rock Tower Was a Perilous Piece of Work.

Right down to the time of John Smeaton, who invented the stone lower, lighthouses were built of wood. It was Smeaton's success in placing a stone edifice on the dreaded Eddystone rocks in the eighteenth century which really gave an impetus to lighthouse building, and since then the sea builder has achieved many notable conquests in all parts of the globe.

The next erected was that built by R. Stevenson on the Bell rock, on the famous inch cape reef, off the coast of Scotland. The construction of the lighthouse was one long, terrible battle with the angry sea. The scouring of the foundations, naturally the most hazardous part of the whole undertaking, proved exceedingly difficult.

It is recorded that the men worked with desperation, knowing how long they could remain on the rock at a time, but they stuck there with the tenacity of Scotsmen. The cold waters of the North sea beating down every few minutes and swamping entirely over them. When the first stone was at last swung into position the men, ragged, chilled and worn with the awful struggle, clung to the iron rods which they had erected upon the reef and cheered madly, like soldiers just over the ramparts of an enemy's fort.

Again and again they were absolutely driven from the rock. When the tower began to appear well above the sea terrible storms arose and swamped them. On several occasions blocks weighing as much as two tons were ruthlessly torn out of their places and swept into the sea despite devoted zeal and scientific ingenuity. In the end the sea builder proved victorious, as he always does. But it cost four years' labor and the expenditure of 100,000 before the lighthouse stood complete.—Pole Word Magazine.

Near Laurels.

A certain major in the Philippines, who seemed to be favored with the will of the powers, managed in some way always to get leave just before trouble with the native on the Filipino colonel suspected him of having a mission for fighting.

"Some day," remarked the colonel, "they'll want to give that fellow a medal, and I'll suggest one. It will be a wreath of leaves of cinnamon."—New York Post.

Ladies First.

"Some day you may be president of the United States," said the candidate's wife as she sat down beside the boots of the people.

"You won't make any bit with that kind of talk around here," replied the small boy. "Wife's votes for woman family. Go tell it to stalet."—Washington Star.

This Habit Still Holds.

It was Noah who was voicing the complaint.

"My wife made me get up and shut the window, every night it rained," said he.—New Haven Register.

ENGINEERING FEATS.

Clever Tricks With Which Emergencies Have Been Met.

Engineering is filled with so many tricks to meet emergencies that most of them pass unnoticed, but two have recently attracted the attention of engineers because of their novelty.

One was a scheme for stopping a blazing leak in a big high pressure gas main in San Francisco. Some unknown men who wanted to make trouble set off a chemical preparation on the gas main, with the result that in a few seconds a hole had been melted in the main, the gas poured out and a great flame shot twenty-five feet in the air. It was then after midnight, and it was very inadvisable to shut the big main off, so it was decided to make an attempt to stop the leak without shutting off the gas.

An oil well trick was used. An iron pipe six inches in diameter and twenty feet long was stood on end beside the gas main and then by careful manipulation placed directly over the leak. This sent the leaking gas shooting through the pipe and flaming out at the top twenty feet in the air. Some gas leaked out at the bottom of the pipe, but this was easily stopped, so the only flame was that at the top of the pipe.

Ropes had been attached to the pipe, and finally at a given signal the ropes were yanked and the pipe was thrown away from the gas main. The pipe carried the flame with it. The leaking gas then shot directly into the air from the main, but as there was no flame near it did not burn. It was then a comparatively simple task to plug the hole until permanent repairs could be made.

The other scheme was to get to the top of a high chimney without using scaffolding or other expensive methods. The chimney rose two hundred feet beside a Missouri power plant, and it was proposed to attach a sign running up and down its side. A little parachute with a steel cord attached was pushed into the chimney at the bottom, the line goes carried it to the top and then out into the air. It fell on one side, dragging the cord after it. Then by means of the cord a rope was pushed up outside of the chimney and down the inside and the chimney top was accessible.—Saturday Evening Post.

DEVILED SHIRTS.

When Dumas Really Thought He Had Started a New Fashion.

Alexandre Dumas, the famous French romancist, was as recklessly extravagant as he was abnormally stout, and more than once found himself in awkward straits. Indeed, he was often enough without the commonest necessities, even of dress, so when occasion to attend an outdoor a reception he discovered he was without a single clean shirt among his linen. A friend who chanced to be with him at the time commented to go and one, was carefully dilute, for all the shops had in stock a garment, silk (cash) large to encircle the novelist's generous girth of neck and chest.

At last, when on the point of relinquishing his search, Dumas' friend came upon a shop, where a shirt called "the deviled" was advertised. The name struck him as being one of good omen, and he entered. But, alas, they had nothing approaching the size required, unless, indeed, their customer would care to take one made to order of a very corpulent Quarter Latin student, by whom it had been left on their hands. Although covered with little red devils cavorting about in red flames, it was a case of Hobson's choice, so the shirt was purchased and taken home to Dumas, who, doubtless entering into the humor of the situation, received to wear it at the reception.

"You should hardly believe it," he said afterward, "but my costume was an immense success, and I really think I have started a fashion of deviled shirts for evening wear."—London Tit-Bits.

Kick of the Mule.

A who man, in his own estimation, announces that he "knows a mule when he sees it." He is a member of the Gridiron Club of Baltimore, and drew them the count's golden shield in token of his appreciation of the letter's bravery. The shield so marked, became the arms of Barcelona, which became part of Aragon, and its arms were taken by that kingdom.

HOW TO MAKE THANKSGIVING SEED DECORATIONS.

Have you seen the funny little chap made of pine and cones looking man's heads with grotesque bristling green bloody green growths on their surface? A leading florist in one of our large cities is exhibiting these queer things, which have attracted much attention.

The film with blobs of green formation has been made a reality. Little, As for the pig, the green grass bristles over his entire body resembling the porcupine with his world renowned quills. The fierce looking clay head is of a terrible, weird aspect with its green hair, eyebrows and mustache.

These little clay novelties can be had for 50 or 75 cents. The only cost is scrubbing on each piece, a hole in the top similar of water to be poured into the "head" every day. It takes only two weeks' time for the tiny grass to appear and then you have an interesting piece of hideous growth.

These "pieces" are particularly suitable for the nursery. The children will derive much amusement from watching the Hon's mane, the pig's skin or the man's hair turn green.

UNDER A FLAG OF TRUCE.

A Reunion and a Compact Between the Blue and the Gray.

My father was a private in the Twenty-sixth Michigan and often told the following story, although I was never wise enough to make a note of the date or the name of the engagement. There can be no doubt, however, of the substantial accuracy of the tale.

There had been fighting, but a flag of truce had passed from the Confederate to the Union lines, and firing was suspended. The lines were close together and both posted behind cover. As the white flag passed out of sight toward headquarters the lines promptly flowed together, meeting in the vacant space between. Officers on both sides tried to prevent it, but their efforts were fruitless. Little groups formed and fell back and began to forage. The grays had tobacco, and the blues had coffee—and a little sugar, and they was lively for a time. Then they fell to discussing other things, and to understand their conversation it ought to be explained that the practice of firing on a picket line was regarded by these soldiers, hardened though they were by the awful sights of a dozen bloody fields, as little better than murder. Said a gray:

"Why do you fellows fire on picket?"

Blue—Why do you fire on picket?

Gray—Well, we don't, only when that old Colonel B. from North Carolina is officer of the day; then we have to. He makes us do it. But I tell you, Yank, we'll shoot high! Yes, Yank, we'll shoot high!

The flag of truce came back; the negotiations had failed. The lines reformed, and firing began again. Once more poor humanity referred to the arts and tactics of war questions it could settle in no other way. But who can doubt that in the hearts of all who witnessed the dramatic scene there was less bitterness then before the truce? There was no talk of world quarrel; no bitter, personal vendetta. Each side was pledged to the support of antagonistic principles, to maintain which they had united their lives, but they had no quarrel with their opponents as men.—Youth's Companion.

MICHIGAN'S INTEREST IN THE COMING ELECTION

In no other state in the Union are the people more directly interested in the result of the coming election than is true of Michigan and its people.

Every important industry in this state has been injured by Democratic legislation and Democratic management.

It has been estimated that Michigan people, many of them now burdened to the full extent of their ability to bear, will be compelled to share to an extent of several hundred thousand dollars in the stamp paying tax future referred by its Democratic authors as a "war tax."

And the only way to which it is related is that which has been made upon the legitimate industries of the United States through Democratic legislation.

Every property owner in Michigan, every working man who is supporting his family in this state, every person related directly or indirectly to any Michigan business interest, and every voter possessed of citizenship in Michigan should keep it in mind that the state is more directly interested in the outcome of the election of November third than the people of any other state in the Union.

Every Republican vote will be counted as a protest against the Democratic deficiency tax.

Every Republican vote will be noted as a protest against the most extensive appropriation totals in all the history of our state and nation.

The only interpretation that would be put upon a Democratic victory in Michigan the coming election would be that the stamp tax deficiency tax was approved of, and that Michigan people accepted without protest all the hurtful attacks that had been made upon our state's important industries.

But the interpretation that would be put upon a Republican victory in Michigan would be that of a demand that national legislation should immediately face about and turn in the direction of home industry, home prosperity, and a protective tariff surplus in the national treasury.

Keep these facts in mind when you cast your vote on election day.

How to Wash Chamois Gloves and Nut Harm Them.

Put one teaspoonful of good Apply strong lather made from soap and fresh milk and one teaspoonful of a fine piece of flannel; keep the strokes toward the nap of the chamois. Apply until the dirt disappears, then take a clean soft towel and dry the glove till the nap is restored. Shake the glove from the hand and blow it to open the fingers. Place a piece of string through one of the buttonholes and hang the glove up in a warm place where there is a current of air. When dry the gloves will be as good as new, your color and will be smooth and soft.

The man followed the crew out, and took the train for Petoskey. The conductor telephoned the Petoskey police and the man was picked up and locked up. On his person was a complete set of burglar tools. As nothing could be proven against him he was ordered out of town.

HIGH MASONS HAVE GOOD TIME

Last Friday afternoon and evening will long be remembered by local Cryptic Masons.

The occasion was the institution of Charlevoix Council No. 81, Royal Select and Super-Excellent Masters. Most Illustrious Grand Master McCollum, assisted by Grand Lecturer Jackson, were present and launched the new council into existence, although the council has been working nearly a year under dispensation. The council has twenty-one charter members, and starts out with good prospects.

In the afternoon Thrice Illustrious Master Mason Rose gave the grand officers an automobile ride about the town and its environs and at four o'clock the trouble began, during which six candidates received the degrees.

At seven o'clock a bench supper, with plenty of excellent embellishment, was served in the Lunchet hall. Nine automobile loads of Petoskey Masons were present and assisted in the work in both lodge room and banquet hall.

It was a most enjoyable event.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW AND ITS REGULTS

This splendid law, now on the statute books of Michigan, was put there through the earnest urging and efforts of former Governor Chase S. Osborn.

HON. CHASE S. OSBORN

Mr. Osborn co-operated in the preparation of the Workmen's Compensation Bill and assisted to the full extent of his official influence in bringing about its enactment.

This compensation law has become a most potent factor in the industrial and social life of Michigan. More than 11,000 employers of labor have accepted the provisions of the law.

More than half a million workers in factories, mines, railways, shops and stores are covered by this law. It also covers every employe of the state itself, of the counties, cities, villages, townships and school districts.

A fatal accident occurs every day to an industrial worker in Michigan. His widow and children are cared for under the compensation law. Compensation is now being paid to 568 families of working men who were killed in the course of their occupation.

No longer is the injured workman compelled to go into court to attempt to recover some measure of damages for injuries received while working.

Since the passage of the compensation law, less than one-fourth of the injured workmen received any payment whatever. Today in Michigan more than $100,000 per month is being paid to injured workmen and their families, in addition to this benefit the employer is required to furnish medical attention and hospital services.

During September, 1914, payments of compensation were made in 3,451 cases. But this is not the only benefit derived by working men of Michigan from the compensation law.

Fatal accidents have been reduced one-half since September 1, 1912, nonfatal accidents have been reduced by more than one-third.

More attention is paid than ever before to the safeguarding of machinery and to accident prevention.

Experience with the operation of this law has shown that some amendments will give to it increased value. Chase S. Osborn, Republican candidate for Governor, approves of these amendments and will urge their adoption.

EXPOSED

On Wednesday night, October 14, 1914, the National Progressives and Democrats held a joint meeting in the city of Munising.

A hired Democratic "spellbinder" from the State of Alabama, and the Progressive candidate for Congress, spoke from the same platform against the Republican policy of Protection to American Labor and American Manufacture.

They joined hands in a united declaration against Republican policies which have brought prosperity in the past, and insure prosperity for the future.

These leaders, in their enthusiastic greed, laid bare their doubts of the people's confidence.

Are the leaders of the Progressive Party attempting to convert their followers to Democratic principles?

If they cannot win apart are they willing to join hands in an effort to be victorious?

Will you be led into such a result?

This is a battle for the people and the people's rights, to open the mills and employ the great army of unemployed.

A Progressive vote is a vote for Democracy, a vote for the silent wheels of industry.

A vote for the Republican ticket means a vote for the return of more prosperity, more business and better times.

THE REPUBLICAN COUNTY TICKET

The republican county ticket commends itself to the favorable consideration of every voter, regardless of politics.

It is stamped with the seal of efficiency, and that is what the people want. When we are candid and honest with ourselves we apply the same rule to public affairs that we apply to our business. We apply the test of Efficiency.

The republican party of Charlevoix county has never made a mistake in its selection of public officials. Efficiency has always been its watchword. There is not a county in the State whose public affairs have been administered for more than forty years with a higher degree of efficiency than those of Charlevoix county, and in all these years we can recall but two instances where county officials were either than republican, and no apologies are due.

In the entire list of nominees there is not one whose name does not suggest integrity and efficiency, and nearly every one is fitted by past and the efficiency test with a 100 percent rating. Novak, for sheriff cannot be called an untried man, inasmuch as two years as under-sheriff, with not a spot on his record, guarantees efficiency. Weaver for county treasurer, is a new man, but his standing and intellectual equipment are so generally recognized throughout the county that no one doubts the wisdom of the selection. Good young red blood, and a well trained mind characterizes the nominee for prosecutor—R. L. Lewis. In private practice he has already proven his efficiency.

Dick Lewis in the clerk's office is just as it should be. That is where efficiency is at its best, just as it is in the register's office, where R. A. Emrey has proven his efficiency.

With this array of political selection before you, and knowing what you do of the record of every nominee, would you vote for a change anywhere in the list?

Efficiency is the desideratum. In the republican county ticket there is a guarantee.

AN OPEN LETTER

To you:—

When a man becomes a candidate for any office everything false in the world is said about him. This is happening to day in an effort to deprive me of your support. My opponents are sending thousands and thousands of circulars and advertising matter throughout this entire district. They have their headquarters, managers, assistant-managers field men and advertising men and have no idea how much money is being spent to defeat me, but the barrel seems to be open. Are they opposed to uniform protective and labor laws?

Are they opposed to the government helping the poor man to have a good road, a good highway?

Are they opposed to the [illegible] being prosperous instead of a few becoming rich while a great army of people are unemployed, and cannot secure employment?

My primary campaign in which you nominated me was as signal to you. This campaign for my election has been the same. I cannot afford to spend a lot of money because I haven't it and I wouldn't if I had, because if I am elected I can not devote my time to you and you alone. I will be tied to no interests, except your interests. I will not have to get back a lot of money, to your injury. My opponents have called my campaign a poor man's campaign. Their jear does not daunt me and I shall finish as I started; aligned with no interests; tied to no combinations. My only pledge being a solemn promise to carry out the pledges I made to you in my primary campaign and on my cards, a pledge to policies which mean a return of business activity; work for the unemployed, a square deal to all and special privileges to none. This is my pledge to you.

Very sincerely,
FRANK D. SCOTT.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

The Constitutional Amendment relative to fraternal societies will be submitted to the electors of the State of Michigan at the election to be held November 3, 1914.

Every member of a fraternal society, every person who believes in the fraternal system should vote against the adoption of this Amendment.

No legislation could be planned more destructive to the fraternal system. If adopted, fraternal societies will cease to exist, and the people of the State of Michigan, who desire to protect themselves and their families, will be compelled to the tender mercies of Old Line Insurance Companies, and the wild-cat schemes of all kinds of assessment insurance.

This Amendment has been conceived, either in gross ignorance of what fraternal societies are, their work, and their organization, or else with the selfish purpose of personal aggrandisement, founded upon their ruin and destruction.

If you desire to maintain the fraternal system and retain for the people of this state its benefits, then work against it; vote against it and see that your friends and neighbors do likewise. No fraternalist should neglect this important duty.

REPRESENTATIVE McMILLAN

This is the phase of the moon when newspapers of both parties, (there are but two,) are writing large concerning candidates for office, and campaign orators are throating paens of praise for the chosen few. Of course, it is part of the business; but there is such a thing as sincerity even in an editor.

The publisher of this paper, in nearly forty-five years of newspaper work, has never commercialized his editorial opinion, or received a dollar for the editorial support of a candidate for office. This much by way of emphasizing our opinion of H. I. McMillan as the representative of Charlevoix county in the legislature.

The county has never had an abler or more industrious representative. Mac manes a sort of Scotch stubbornness that takes him out of that class of men in public life who are known as "time-servers." He is not "pickling" in his temperament when he has a conviction—and Mac has convictions. Mac has an intelligence that is as broad as it is continuous, and he is square. There is not a dark spot on his legislative record, and we challenge anybody to say anything the session.

Mac is entitled to the vote of every republican in the county.

FRANK SCOTT FOR CONGRESS

While the congressional section of the ticket this fall is of special interest, involving vital national issues, the appeal to every business man—the candidacy of Hon. Frank D. Scott has a bearing that especially appeals to the voters of Charlevoix county. Mr. Scott lives in a county that lacks very little of being in our "tier." Alpena county will soon be linked up to Charlevoix county with rail communication.

Alpena and Charlevoix counties are in the same senatorial district. For four years the district has been represented by Frank D. Scott. His high standing in the Michigan senate is proven by his present incumbency of the office of president pro tem of that body. There has never been a more industrious senator, a member of the senate whose influence was more potent, or whose watchfulness of the interests of the district was more effective.

Aside from any partisan considerations it is clearly for the interests of Charlevoix county that Frank D. Scott should be elected to congress.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY MAN IS HONORED

At the recent annual session of the grand lodge of Odd Fellows at Flint, Robert F. Nauwelaert of Boyne City was elected deputy Grand Master.

FERRIS PROMISED ECONOMY BUT PRACTICED EXTRAVAGANCE

In every speech made by Governor Ferris two years ago, when he was a candidate for the office he now holds, he declared against the increase of expenditures on state account in Michigan, and promised that if he was elected he would see to it that our enormous state taxes were reduced.

What effort did Governor Ferris make in the direction of carrying out his repeated pledge to the taxpayers of Michigan?

Not only is it true that he did not make the reduction in state taxes that he promised to make, when the time for action came, but he approved of state appropriations greater by several million dollars than the taxpayers of Michigan had ever before been burdened with.

Our state's total taxes for the two years of Governor Osborn's administration, 1911-1912, were $11,975,549.26.

The total state taxes for the two following years, 1913-1914, under a Democratic Governor, were $14,715,748.99.

This increased tax burden on the people of Michigan is more than $111,000.00 a month for the entire Ferris term.

An increase for each week of Mr. Ferris' administration of $26,576.84. A heavier tax burden for each day, permitted by Ferris as compared with Osborn, of $3,758.06.

An increase of $125.25 per hour, and of $2.61 for each minute of the two full years of Ferris' term as Governor.

And in his recent speeches Governor Ferris says he will follow the same course so far as appropriations are concerned, if elected again.

With these facts and figures before them it is hardly probably that Mr. Ferris will be given another opportunity to create further record breaking state tax totals.

MR. WOOD'S SENTIMENTS

And E. O. Wood came also!

The Democratic National Committeeman for Michigan was another of the speakers at that far-famed banquet held in the Downey House at Lansing on January 1st, 1915, in honor of incoming Governor Ferris and out-going Governor Osborn.

After Mr. Ferris had announced that "I am delighted at the endorsements which Governor Osborn has received tonight, and I heartily agree with all of them; and after Hon. Lawton T. Hemans had said that "the people of Michigan will always have reason to feel proud that they made Governor Osborn their leader;" the distinguished Democratic gentleman from Flint—a member of his party's national governing body—arose and said:

"Governor Osborn's influence will be felt long after he retires from public life and the legislation that has been enacted during the two years of his administration will stand as a perpetual monument to his

HER LITTLE PLAN

By VICTOR RADCLIFFE.

"The poor, dear little thing!" said Miss Dalrymp, pityingly and indignant.

She was a child of emotions, was Clytie, believed and her gentle but forceful scold was moved to its depths. For the moment all her thoughts and sympathies were with a strange girl she had never spoken to and had seen but once, last year.

Clytie was passing an obscure cottage. Three or four little children were playing about the rear porch. Beside it was a young girl at a wash tub, fair and energetic. This was Vivian Grey, the "poor, dear little thing."

"Well!" suddenly challenged the preoccupied Clytie, and a handsome young man startled her by stepping into view from behind a tree.

"Gee!" How you frightened me," said Clytie chidingly, but with smallness.

"Did you find out what you wanted?" asked Paul Bercombe, her lover.

"I have made all kinds of inquiries," replied Clytie buoyantly. "I have even seen her. Oh, Paul! she's such a sweet, patient self-sacrificing little creature. I just love her. There she is with an invalid mother and five little brothers and sisters, bravely fighting her way, and this horrid Uncle Wyman has passed them by, who have nothing and need so much, for selfish me, who has everything in the world."

"Including myself," suggested Paul with a smile.

"I won't answer that until I see how you will carry out your part in a certain plot I am about to set afoot. You know Uncle Wyman sent for me to stay a month, and if I pleased him I am to become his heiress."

"Yes, I know," nodded Paul.

"Well, I found out that he has had nearly all his relatives on the same basis, and has scared them all off with his gruff tyrannical ways. I have found out that if I don't act fast he is going to decide on the Grey family. That is as it should be, for Vivian is his own piece and deserves good fortune. And she is going to have it. If my helping can bring it to her!"

"As how, pray?" queried Paul.

"Whispers will get all about my plan," said Clytie.

"A great one, that it was! Paul looked dubious, but entered into its details.

"Let us elope."

"Audacious!"

But it seemed the only way out of the dilemma. They carried out the program in due romantic style, too.

The next morning there was a wild time around the Wyman home. A servant came to her master, pale and breathless.

"Oh, sir," she gasped, "burglars!"

"Eh! Where? When? How?" challenged the old man, startled.

"Miss Clytie, sir!"

"What about her?"

"Gone. Ladder up to the window. Left this note."

"Dear uncle," it read, "I love Paul so I couldn't disappoint him. We will be Mr. and Mrs. Bercombe and off on our wedding trip inside of an hour. Forgive."

"I discard her forever!" yelled the irate old curmudgeon. "She shan't have a cent of my money. I'll act quick before her father comes snooping around to influence me to change my mind."

Then Mr. Wyman primped up and went down to the humble Grey home. As he rounded the shabby house he heard a bright cheery voice singing. He peeped in at the window.

Busybee Vivian was ironing and mending, alone but happy, her mother in a chair near the table. Everything was poor, but scrupulously clean.

"I'd like to have that music down at the big house," chuckled the old tyrant. "That girl knows how to make things look homelike, and that's what I want. Morning, Vivian," he greeted, as he entered the kitchen.

"Why, Uncle Wyman, this is a real pleasure," said Vivian, sincerely, glad to see her arbitrary relative, and he was convinced that the expression was genuine.

"You can drop that ironing," he observed.

"What for, uncle?"

"Going to move all of you. I'm through experimenting with my kin of blah blows. I'm going to adopt the whole family and make you my heiress."

"Grateful little soul! Vivian sat down and cried like a tired baby. It seemed as if the burden of the ages had rolled away from her weary shoulders.

It was two years later, and she was happily married and Old Uncle Wyman had found peace and comfort amid true family surroundings, when Vivian met Clytie.

"Then the whole story came out, and they began a new friendship that beautified the whole of their lives

WORK OF ANCIENT DENTISTS

Remarkable Teeth Decoration Shows That They Were Considerable Skill.

By far the most transcendent example of teeth decoration which has been preserved to us from ancient America is in a skull discovered in 1899 at a place called La Piedra near the point on the right bank of the Esmeraldas river where it empties into the Mataje. It was accidentally found by Mr. Pinaos and Mr. George D. Hedlan, the latter an American consular agent at Esmeraldas, and was kindly presented by Mr. Hedlan for the Hero museum during my visit to Ecuador last summer. The skull was seen projecting from the bank, but no other parts of the skeleton were uncovered, probably having been washed away after the bank was undermined.

The upper part of the skull is in fragments, but is unbroken. The skull slightly deformed, is that of an adult female. The decoration of the teeth is unique and presents a new type of facial ornamentation. Instead of small disks being set into artificial cavities we find in this case that certain teeth of the upper jaw were almost entirely covered on the outer face by an overlay of gold. The entire enamel of the teeth decorated has been removed, with the exception of narrow bands at the bases and the upper parts, where they were close to the flesh and embedded in the bone.

The removal of the enamel is through to the dentine and was apparently accomplished by a process of some instances sawing was done slightly under the enamel, at the upper part so that the gold overlay, or covering, might be fitted under it in order to make it more secure. The teeth thus practically "face-crowned" are the four incisors and the two canines. The overlays are missing in all but one of the teeth, the left lateral incisor. This gold covering is slightly dented or bent over each side of the tooth for greater security.

Entombed Toad Lives Long.

While some repair work was being done at Yankton college a basement was opened to cut a door through, and a live toad was found in the air shaft. It had been entombed, without doubt, for 32 years, ever since Ward Hall of Science was constructed. The toad had resided in its brick tomb so long it was brick red on the underside. While grown to a large size it has no claws. It appeared to have worn off the claws in trying to get out. How it had lived is a mystery. Not a drop of moisture could have reached the toad in all the years it had been a prisoner.—Yankton (S. D.) Cor. New York Tribune.

To Withstand Earthquakes.

Earthquake construction has now reached a very practical stage in the seismic districts of Italy, where all new buildings are being erected under strict supervision with respect to their ability to resist earthquake shocks. Professor Omori, the Japanese authority, has estimated that 99.5 per cent of the deaths in the great Messina earthquake of 1908 would have been prevented if the buildings had been properly constructed.

A Real Wonder.

Snooker (forcibly) Your fowls have been over the wall and scratched my garden.

Chanks (coolly)—Well, there's nothing extraordinary in that. It's their nature to scratch. Now, if your garden were to come over the wall and scratch my fowls it would be news.—Punch.

Ready for the Cold Weather

For Formal or Informal Occasions

AN afternoon gown which is elaborate enough for formal occasions and quiet enough for the informal will appeal to most women. Here is one which is novel and beautiful in composition and in which the wearer might feel at ease at an afternoon tea or an evening reception. It is conservative as to style, graceful in outline, and of a type which will outlive a simple season.

Gray satin forms the foundation of the skirt, which is bordered at the bottom with two scalloped flounces, each about a quarter of a yard in width when finished, and bound with a narrow piping of the silk. The skirt escapes the ground by about three inches, measured from the middle of the edge of the scallops, and is comfortably wide, approaching two yards. This gives plenty of room even considering demands of dancing.

At the head of the second flounce seam fastenes are arranged in the material. They are caught up with small bows of the fabric and are simply two shallow folds tacked to position. Extra width is allowed in the upper flounce to allow for this draping. A tunic of voile, in the same color as the silk, reaches to within twelve inches of the bottom of the skirt, or may be made longer. It is laid in side plaits at the waist line and allowed to flare below the hips. A narrow hem finishes the bottom. Transparent tunics may be counted upon as a strong feature in the coming styles. They are sometimes stayed with a small wire at the bottom and often bordered with fur or marabout feathers.

The bodice has a foundation of figured chiffon in which vague figures in rich colors on a white background appear. The short sleeves are length ened with a border of handsome lace. A wide black lace in princess design overlaps the chiffon foundation, extending over the chiffon portion of the sleeves and along the sides and partly over the front and back of the bodice. An overbodice of the gray voile is draped on the foundation and trimmed away in a "V" shape at the neck. This leaves a small vestee of the figured chiffon.

Bands of satin are set on the bodice at the front, with panels of the satin extending from them to the waist line. They widen toward the bottom, merging into a narrow band at the sides, which is finished with a flat bow at the back.

A fine lace edged net collar corresponds with the lace finish of the sleeves. A border of chiffon, of the same color as the voile in the skirt, is set under the polished edge of the lace in the front and back. The bodice fastens at the front with small satin covered buttons.

HAD HAPPENED BEFORE

EXPERIENCE THAT WAS NOTHING NEW TO GALLUP.

Being Thrown Out of Places by Men Smaller Than Himself Seemed Somehow to Be Matter of Pride to Him.

"Some men," observed Caleb Peasley, critically, "o'ge get a lot of comfort out of things that I couldn't make a mite of satisfaction in. Ain't you ever noticed it, Hyne?"

Mr. Hyne regarded Caleb narrowly, and shuffled his feet in some irritation. "F' pity sake, Caleb," he remarked, petulantly, "if you've got anything to say, whyn't you begin at the beginnin' and say it! I get all out of patience with you sometimes!"

"Trouble is with you, Hyne, you don't always agree with me about where the beginnin' is, but in this special case, I shouldn't be surprised if you was in the right of it. I guess maybe I did begin wrong end to. Well, to begin right, then, I was down to Bennett's store last evenin' when that big Gallup critter came in after suth in' You know him—that big fellur from over Dilmouth Centre way. Eh? he was mad when he came in, or else suthin' didn't go to his likin', but before long we heard him and the clerk have a fuss over in the back part of the store. That is, Gallup was fussin', and the clerk was tryin' to pacify him. You know that clerk—the one one that's only been there a week?

Mr. Hyne nodded his head assentingly. "His ain't much bigger'n a bunch of radishes," he observed. "He'd stand about as much chance in a fuss with Gallup as a mouse in a sale of wind!"

Mr. Peasley smiled but offered no Remark. "That's the fellow," he agreed. "I thought you'd even him. Wal, as I said, there they was dispute in', and Gallup gittin' madder every minute, and the clerk seemingly tryin' to get him out of the store peaceable like.

"Wal, we all of us crowded over there to see what was all about. The clerk kept on talkin' in a mild way, in a mite, and give him courage,—he ain't much more'n half as big agin as the clerk, you know,—so he up and makes a motion as if he was goin' to cuff the clerk.

"I was all done as quick, Hyne, that I wasn't tell you the particulars, but the clerk went into that big gump like a scooper going round a barrel! I was standin' right by the back door, and it was a little afar, and when I saw the trouble coming I was way! I flung the door a kick, and scooped outside. I hadn't more'n got out before the door shin' that looked like one of these cross-legged sawhorses—all legs and arms, you know—came out from the door, and when it struck the ground it came to a stop and I saw it was Gallup. Yes, sir, that little clerk had throwed that big bummer out through the door, and had politely turned a bait down it!

"Wal, Gallup sat there on the ground kind of goin' over himself to find out where he was and what had happened, and finally he come round that was slapjaw the clerk on the back telling him he done best he done the job. Finally Gallup made up his mind what to say. He ain't of a big nose, that he'd been trying to twist back into shape, and spoke to the clerk in a mighty humble manner.

"You needn't feel so set up over thinkin' you got licked, he says. 'You ain't the fust man that's ever throwed me out of places. I've been throwed out by smaller men than you be, time 'n' agin,' says he, and he looked at the clerk as if he'd redeemed him to powder.

"And so," concluded Mr. Peasley, "I reckoned that Gallup taxed half to come out of the affair with suth as much credit as the clerk. And that was what I was thinkin' when I remarked that some men could get satisfaction out of what happened to them there was mighty little satisfaction in. Don't it look that way to you, Hyne, now that you've heard the whole on it?" And Mr. Hyne grunted an assent.—Youth's Companion.

Something From Nothing.

You know that peculiar air that come over a tramload of passengers on a wet day when someone endeavors to find an extra seat.

You could have cut it with a knife when a hale and hearty countrywoman, laden with her market purchases, squeezed past the conductor into the interior of the car.

Resentment of the freezing stares she deposited her vegetables, etc., about her feet. One dripping Irishman gazed irritably along the seated row and then, moving to one side, inclined to move, offered the buxom lady his seat.

"Why, Ait," she said, with a broad smile, "thaat better sit, down agen. Ah cannot see wherra t'ha gotten cop from!"—London Answers.

Surely a Wise Guy.

A teacher in a West side public school recently asked the class a question: On the first day of school a new little girl joined the class. The teacher went through the motions of raised the great European war. The new little girl held up her hand. "Do you know what it was, teacher?" The teacher said, "Yes, yes." Surprised the budding scholar replied with crushing veracity: "Well, you're the smartest guy I ever met. Those two are unfalteringly with the new little girl.—Chicago Post.

Earth's Diameter.

What is the greatest diameter of the earth? "At the equator," is the ready answer; this is not strictly true, for the actual diameter is modified by conditions on the surface. According to the answer received from Henry, the greatest diameter is that taken from the summit of Iconal Chimborazo, in Ecuador, 20,156 feet above sea level. The line passes through earth from this point emerges on the opposite side at a high point in the coast of Sumatra, giving a diameter of 7,926 miles.

LOYALTY TO LOCAL INTERESTS SHOULD ENCOURAGE HOME BUYING

This is the season of the year says the Traverse City Record-Eagle, when the mail order catalogue is sent broadcast over the country seeking whom it may devour. These documents are written in a catchy manner and illustrated with cuts of the goods which the flowery descriptions are supposed to fit. The chances are ten to one that somebody is hooked by grasping at this alluring bait every time one of these silent salesmen lands in a poorly regulated American home. Shopping by mail is played up in such a way that it seems easy, but in the end it turns out that the customer is easy instead of the system. After receiving and studying one of these silent messengers of outside forces that leave for their object personal gain and the disorganizing of small town business, it would be well for the prospective purchaser of any of the articles described to go to some local firm and see what the same article can be bought for at home, where the buyer will be certain of getting value received for the purchase money. As a rule, every article described in a mail order catalogue can be duplicated by home merchants at a saving of writing and expressing or freight charges. The customer then has the satisfaction of knowing when he pays at home that he is not only leaving his money in the community where it will come back to him in the course of business events, and also knows that by trading at home he is doing his part to build up home business and thereby benefit the town to which he owes a debt of loyalty, because he gets his living from it and its industries. The catalogue house pays none of the local taxes and contributes absolutely nothing toward keeping the wheels of progress in motion. The mail order house draws everything from the small town and gets nothing back. It is an alien force whose policy is destructive and should not appeal to loyal citizens. The home merchant bears the brunt of local expenses and by so doing is entitled to the patronage of those who reside in the town and vicinity. By keeping the dollars at home they will given new dollars that will come handy in helping the town over the hard and rough spots in its career.

County Normal Notes

ROSE CRONSINK

Miss Lamoreau and Miss Hooker are editors this week.

Miss Waterman and Miss Allen are housekeepers this week.

Harold Akins, of Bellaire, visited the normal room last Monday morning.

Mr. J. H. Milford, of East Jordan, county school commissioner, gave us a talk Tuesday morning.

Mr. E. W. Abbott, of Boyne City, and Mr. D. S. Fayton, county treasurer, gave us a short talk last Tuesday morning.

Miss Dessie Gronsink, one of the normal students of 1913, and who is now teaching school near East Jordan, made us a visit last Wednesday afternoon.

A trip by the normal class was taken to Ethel Sanford's home to see and study the different varieties of flowers. The trip was pleasant and also instructive.

A new map of Europe was secured and the class finds it a great help. It is very interesting as it shows the different places that are concerned in the war.

Mr. Earnest Penalee, who teaches in the Advance school, visited us last Monday. He talked to us concerning school matters which were very interesting to the normal class. He also told us about the school in which he teaches.

The Queen, Miss Waterman, and her attendents arrived at Boyne City Saturday morning. They were greeted by the band and also a large crowd of people from Boyne City. A float was provided for the Queen and her attendants. They saw many varieties of vegetables, fruit and poultry. After seeing all these things a good dinner was given them. The class enjoyed the trip very much and appreciated the kindness shown by the Boyne City people.

Are you going to need a new Heating Stove this winter? Now is the time to investigate the merits of the several different makes that may be offered for sale. We will agree that there is a great many real good stoves, in fact they are most all good—but some are better—for instance the BECKWITH line known as

The Round Oaks.

We have them and think that if you will investigate their merits you will agree with us that they are the best.

U. S. MAY BUILD WAR MOTORCARS

Armored Autos Provided For In Anthony's Bill.

PROVE EFFECTIVE IN EUROPE

Congressman insists That This Country Cannot Afford to Overlook Value of New Engines of Warfare—Would Be Big Protection to Our Forces and Destructive to Foeman.

Washington.—The general use of armored motor-cars for war purposes in Europe and the valuable services that they are rendering have gripped the imagination of some congressmen. Representative H. B. Anthony of Kansas of the committee on military affairs said that he would introduce a bill for the purchase of armored automobiles for the United States army. Sentiment in favor of Mr. Anthony's proposal is said to have developed among other members of the military committee and around the capitol there is considerable feeling that this country cannot afford to overlook the use of the automobile.

H. B. ANTHONY OF KANSAS.

"It must be remembered that an armored car is not the ordinary touring car. It is not slow, for instance, with pneumatic tires, and it can go across open and rough country with difficulty if not even so though the issue of a fence without being stopped, and it can do away with the delicacy of barbed wire fences, obstructions which our American troops encountered with such toughness in the Spanish war.

"Properly equipped with a sufficiently long-range machine gun, or more probably, offering absolute protection to their occupants from rifle fire and ordinary machine gun shots, this armored car would be a thing of most great usefulness in cavalry and at the same time throwing a deadly fusillade into the enemy.

"An idle saving devices the armored automobile has been in use in the greatest war invention we have had for some time. In an armored car four men can be transported at a high rate of speed to the point from which the attack seems to be made and can handle their rapid fire machine guns with practically no danger from hostile fire. It does not require much imagination to realize what what deadly effectiveness 100 or 200 of these cars could operate against the enemy. They would be of prime importance in protecting a retreat, because they can be constructed so that their fire can be directed from either front or rear, and, being armored, they would form a sort of moving fortification, a screen behind which the retreating troops could operate.

"The time may soon come when much of the military work done by the horse will be accomplished by the instrumentality of the armored car. Armored cars can go faster and farther than can horses and can hold positions which would be impossible for cavalry. When this time does arrive it would be a great mistake to have this country behind all others in such valuable and essential equipment."

Our Lumber Production.

About Canadian lumber and number of all kinds is the annual production in the United States. Of this nearly 20,000,000,000 feet are used annually for further manufactured, the other portion consisting for rough construction lumber and for similar purposes. This is exclusive of material which reaches its final use in the form of fuel, railroad ties, posts, poles, pulp wood, dunnage, wood distillation and the barks and extracts demanded by the tanning industry.

WAR "DON'TS" FOR BRITISH YOUTHS

Earl Tells Boys What to Do and What to Avoid.

WHY ANTWERP WAS TAKEN.

Germany Intends to Hold It Always Unless Allies Prevent, Says Curzon—Advises Against Dividing Up Germany "Before You Have Got Held of It."

London.—Earl Curzon of Kedleston delivered a rousing speech to an audience which included the masters and boys of Harrow school.

He said he knew of the anticipation of European statesmen of the highest rank who had prophesied for years that it would be in 1914 that Germany would strike the blow at Europe. Some people, he remarked, were of the opinion that it would be over by Christmas. He went on, speaking with great gravity:

"In my judgment neither one Christmas will pass before the soldiers return home."

Lord Curzon concluded with the following "don'ts":

"Don't think the war does not affect you individually. It touches every man, woman and child in this country.

"Don't be overjoyed at a victory. Don't be downhearted at a defeat.

"Don't be unnerved by personal or family bereavements.

"Don't be frightened at casualty lists, so long and sometimes so distressing.

"Don't think that you know how to wage the campaign and that the war office does not.

"Don't write to the newspapers telling generals and admirals what they ought to do, but if you have an opinion that you could do it much better tell it to a few people as possible.

"Don't go nervous because the progress of the war is slow. It can only be slow in these stages.

"Don't underrate the enemy.

"Don't waste breath in attempting to ascertain what is to happen to the German emperor in this world or the next.

"Don't begin to divide up the German empire before you have got hold of it.

"Don't listen to any one who cries 'Halt!' before we have carried out the full purpose for which we are fighting.

"And when the war is over don't throw away the lessons of the war."

Earl Curzon also said:

"Germany has taken Antwerp to forfeit. It is keep it, to make a great naval port of it, to use it as a great prowling off place for her future attempts upon this country. It is no temporary occupation, unless we make it so."

TREED ALL NIGHT BY A COON.

Boy Feared to Climb Down Past Nest He Had Disturbed.

West Livingston, N. J.—While his parents and neighbors searched the woods for him all night, Henry Dickinson, fifteen years old, was held a prisoner in the top of a butternut tree by a raccoon that had lodged with her brood in a hollow of the same tree.

Henry climbed the tree to get nuts late in the afternoon and disturbed the coon by striking his foot into her home. When the angered animal stuck out her head the boy climbed higher. All night long the coon kept guard and Henry was afraid to climb down past her.

After daybreak he called to Edwin Carter, a farmer, driving a herd of cows to pasture, and Carter got a shotgun. Carter was afraid of hitting the boy if he shot at the coon, so he tied a rock to a string and threw it up to Henry, who then hauled up the gun. The next time the coon stuck her head out of her hole Henry shot and killed her.

Horse Meat as Food.

Vienna.—Beef is so high horse meat is becoming popular in Vienna. 200 horses being put on the market in one day.

Suit Yourself

Observe you can. It's far from easy. It seems the wife has gone away.

You other men be honest with you. It seems her wife decides to go.

We fudge the worst as it were. Pick out the moral you prefer.

—Judge.

By the Lonesome.

Pa—What would you say if I were to tell you that I have a bright idea?

Sis—I should say that it might stand a pretty good chance of becoming lonesome.—Christian Science Monitor.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN AND THE LAW," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, answering his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native village, for Chicago, where he finds the dream of his life realized in the Quinby Steel plant at Bellevue. Unity follows him to the city. Mark applies for a position in the Quinby office and is taken into the home of Quinby, the steel magnate. Mrs. Quinby is their social leader. Mark supplies an engagement for Quinby's daughter, Marion Pierce, and he is introduced to Mrs. Pierce, Marion's adopted daughter, whom he knew before in Bethel as Unity Martin. Mrs. Pierce is in Paris. Mark wins a place in the Quinby office. Mrs. Pierce returns from Paris. Mark is introduced to her. Mrs. Pierce's husband, Alan Pierce, who supposedly died in Paris, is alive and Mrs. Pierce's adopted daughter, whom she knew as Unity Martin, is Mrs. Pierce's real child. Mark is in Paris. Mrs. Pierce's husband, Alan Pierce, who supposedly died in Paris, is alive and Mrs. Pierce's adopted daughter, whom she knew as Unity Martin, is Mrs. Pierce's real child. Mark is in love with Marion Pierce

FRENCH TELLS OF BATTLE ON AISNE

Describes Terrific Day and Night Fighting Along River.

NOT AN HOUR'S LETUP.

Planking Movement Was General Infantry Idea—Heavier Guns Prove More Effective—How British Troops Put Up Pontoon Bridge While Germans Were Pouring Shells in Their Midst

London.—In two long reports Field Marshal Sir John French, commander in chief of the British forces on the continent, recounts with detail the fighting during the allies retreat from Mons southward to the Seine and their advance after they had turned the German force of General von Kluck back from the gates of Paris.

Chief interest is in the second report, which deals with the battle of the Aisne, which began on Sept. 12. It says:

"Early in the morning of the 11th (September) three corps crossed the Ourcq, further pursuit of the enemy being practically unopposed—the cavalry reaching the line of the Aisne, two brigades south of Soissons and three brigades at Compiegne and Creil on the afternoon of Sept. 12.

"From the opposition encountered by the Sixth French army to the west of Soissons and two of our army corps south of Missy, and certain other indications along the line, I formed the opinion that the enemy had for the moment at any rate arrested his retreat and was preparing to contest the passage of the Aisne with some vigor south of Soissons, where the Germans were holding Mont de Paris against attack.

"With the assistance of artillery the Third corps of the French drove them back across the river at Soissons. Meanwhile the Sixth French army was meeting with heavy opposition all along the line.

"The Aisne is a sluggish stream, 120 feet wide and 15 feet deep in the center and is unfordable. Between Soissons on the west and Villers on the east, the part of the river is blocked and secured by the British forces, are eleven road bridges.

"The position of the enemy was very strong either for delaying action or for a defensive battle.

"On that morning I ordered the British forces to advance and make good the Aisne. The First corps and cavalry advanced on the river. The First division was directed on Choisolle, via the canal bridge at Bourg. On the right the cavalry and First division met with little opposition and found passage by means of the canal aqueduct which crosses the river.

"On the left the leading troops of the Second division reached the river by 9 o'clock. The 5th infantry brigade only was able to cross the river in single file, under considerable shell fire, by means of a broken girder of a bridge which was not entirely submerged in the river. A pontoon bridge was constructed by 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

"The Second corps found all the bridges destroyed except that at Condé, which was in possession of the enemy and remained so until the end of the battle.

"During the nights of the 13th and 14th and following days that followed these incessantly worked night and day, throwing eight pontoons and one footbridge across the river under a generally heavy artillery fire, which was incessantly kept up on most of the crossings after their completion.

"Day after day, night after night, the enemy's infantry has been hurled against us in a violent counter attack, which has never on any one occasion succeeded, while the trenches all over the position have been under continuous and heavy artillery fire.

"Our experience in this campaign seem to point to the employment of more heavy guns of larger caliber in great battles which last several days, during which time powerful intrench work on both sides can be carried out. These batteries were used with considerable effect on the 24th and following days."

POLITICAL PORTRAITS

Just now our exchanges are full of political portraits, no doubt, as political exponents. There is no argument in a portrait. Sometimes pictures are eloquent, but protraits do not make a vote—especially those of local candidates. This paper has a box full of them, and we shall carefully preserve them for use in obituaries.

There is not a single fact illustrated in a portrait, and facts are what are wanted—cold facts put up in cold, plain type, and there are plenty of facts to write about. As a matter of fact, newspaper portraits sometimes have in them an element of deception. Dick Lewis is a far better looking man than the portrait depicts him, and the portrait of Mac McMillan is a fright, whereas, when Mac smiles he is a comely sort of a party in promise. Geo. Weaver makes a very good picture, indeed, if you can dissociate him from the marine gang that infests this town. This is a drawback to those who are familiar with S. S. S. affairs.

Taking it all in all, we do not care to make a photograph album of this paper, when we can use the space to better advantage in telling the truth about people and the issues which they represent.

A ROARING POLITICAL RALLY

Tuesday evening the announcement was made that our distinguished U. S. Senator, Hon. Chas. E. Townsend, and our State Senator, Hon. Frank D. Scott, are to speak at the Charlevoix theatre Wednesday evening.

Inasmuch as this paper does not reach its readers until Thursday morning no announcement could be made in these columns. The Sentinel is heartily unalied as the meeting is in progress.

It goes without saying that the rally is a rouser, as Senator Townsend is one of Michigan's most eloquent orators, and Frank Scott is no slouch.

The best we can do under the circumstances is to get there ourself and holler

DEATH OF RUSSEL CREPSEY

Russel Crepsey was born in Hillsdale, Mich., March 22, 1850 and died at the home of his daughter in this city Thursday, October 22.

He was married to Miss Anna Sharp in October 1875. To this union 4 children were given. The surviving ones are Mr. Lynn Crepsey of Boyne City, Mrs. Rena McCune of Boyne City, and Mrs. Ida Brock of Detroit.

Mr. Crepsey leaves to mourn their loss his wife 3 children, 10 grandchildren 2 brothers besides a host of friends.

Mr. Cresey was a loving husband an indulgent father and a good man.

There are many who will never cease to mourn and miss him.

EQUALIZATION PROTESTED

Unfair Assessments as Equalized by Board in Chalmond

The equalization of the tax rolls of Charlevoix county, as decreed by the board of supervisors at its October session, has been challenged by a member of the board as unfair. Following we append the official appeal and its result:

To the Board of State Tax Commissioners, Lansing, Mich.

Gentlemen:

The undersigned, as supervisor of the Township of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, hereby protests against the action of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Charlevoix in equalizing the valuations of the several assessing districts in said county for the year 1914, and respectfully petitions that the Board of State Tax Commissioners review the action of said Board of Supervisors at the earliest convenience as provided in Act No. 291 of the Public Acts of 1911.

Your petitioner hereby certifies that as a member of the Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix County he objected to the equalization proposed which this approved, and that he voted against the adoption; and that he considers that his assessing district has not been fairly and unjustly discriminated against in such equalization for the following reasons:

"That the assessed valuation of the City of Boyne in said county has been reduced a great deal from the valuation formerly fixed by the Board of State Tax Commissioners, by the assessing officer and Board of Review of said City of Boyne. That at the 1914 June meeting of the Board of Supervisors for the County of Charlevoix, the assessed valuation of said City of Boyne was increased in the sum of $151,125.00 in order to equalize the same with other cities and townships in said county. That at the 1914 October session of said Board of Supervisors the assessed valuation of the said City of Boyne was reduced $151,125.00, leaving only an increase of $90,000.00.

"Your petitioner further says that he is informed and believes and charges the same to be true that valuable real estate in the said City of Boyne worth at its actual cost and its true cash value in the sum of $90,000.00 is only assessed at the sum of $5,000.00.

"Your petitioner further shows that while the assessed valuation of the Township of Charlevoix and the City of Charlevoix has increased each year, the valuation of the City of Boyne has steadily decreased by the unfair actions of the assessing officers and Board of Review of the said City of Boyne, all of which acts are unfair and unjust to the said Township of Charlevoix and the City of Charlevoix and should be equalized, reviewed and adjusted by the Board of State Tax Commissioners."

Following this statement comes a communication to each Supervisor in the county as follows:

Dear Sir:

A petition for a review of the equalization of the valuations of the several assessing districts in your county has been filed with this Board under the provisions of Act No. 291 of the Public Acts of 1911.

As required by said act, the petition is being investigated in order to determine whether or not, in the opinion of the board, the equalization is unfair, unjust, inequitable or discriminatory. If it is found necessary the board of Supervisors will be ordered to reconvene and a re-equalization made, as in the aforesaid act provided. You are, therefore, cautioned not to spread upon your tax roll any taxes for state and county purposes until our determination upon the petition is made and communicated to you.

Yours Very respectfully,

Board of State Tax Commissioners.

CAN YOU LAY IT TO THE WAR!

That the coming winter will be a poor one for the manufacturer of lumberjacks who rely on their winter's work to keep them alive during the other months of the year is the opinion expressed by those who are conversant with the present market conditions, declares the Newberry News. Mills are closing down all over the state. Operators and jobbers will greatly curtail their output this reason, and many camps will not be operated at all. Not for many years has the lumber market been in such a stagnant condition, there being not little demand for woods products of any kind. Lumber yards are practically filled at the present time and the ordinary winter's cut would glut the market. Operators are therefore curtailing their operations, and the number of men employed this winter will be reduced to a minimum.

DEVELOPMENT BUREAU

Supervisors of ten of the Western Michigan counties made appropriations for the 1915 campaign. These counties are Leelanau, Emmet, Charlevoix, Antrim, Grand Traverse, Benzie, Manaukee, Oceola, Lake and Kent. The other counties in the territory were seen by representatives of the bureau last week and made the usual approprations. But the work may be carried on aggressively. The bureau is now in its sixth year, and the results of development are becoming apparent. Many of the new orchards set out as a result of the work of the Bureau, are coming into bearing and the returns are such as to warrant the promises made. Furthermore, the bureau's activities during the past three years in the way of attempting to secure better markets for its products are bringing results. A comprehensive campaign is being outlined and the summer of people who will become familiar with the Western Michigan Resorts will be materially increased.

CHARLEVOIX LECTURE AND ENTERTAINMENT COURSE

The course this year promises to be one of the best ever held in Charlevoix. The committee has spared no effort in selecting the best talent that the Redpath people had to offer. It is the policy of the committee to give to the people the kind of program that will meet the approval of the greatest number. The program this year should please the most exacting.

On December 7th, Geo. L. McNutt will open the course. A big brain, a big heart, a big message, such is the characterization of the "Dinner Pail Man." Few men have touched life at so many points. Of high rank in the University, a scholarly, successful preacher, his social and economic studies have been original, practical and scientific. He will give you something to think about, with a wealth of fact, story and humor.

January 15th, Lincoln McConnell will occupy the platform. He object is to uplift men. His lecture will dispel the blues. He is witty, humorous but behind all his fun runs the main aim of his lectures; to uplift and make better. He has made over 6,000 public lectures in the last twelve years and is conceded to be one of the most original, forceful, and unique speakers before the public.

Music Makers February 12th. Music Quartet made up of men broad in thought, bright in mind, strong in physique, capable and artistic. This promises to be one of the big attractions of the season.

Rogers & Grilley, entertainers of a high order, has been associated in musical festivals with Herbert Herdin, Madame Hinck and other world famous artists. Van Veachton Rogers is a master with the harp and you are called back to earth by the impersonations of Mr. Grilley. Rogers & Grilley furnish a clean, wholesome and inspiring program.

The Military Girls, March 4th, should make a hit. We have not been told as to their nationality, but they will be equal to the Germans and that will be going some. They present a new, unique and novel program. Look for them on the program that will be handed to you in a few days and then decide if you care to see them or not.

The season ticket for these five high class attractions is $1.50 for adults and $1.00 for students. We can't afford to have you miss it and you can't afford to miss it. Tickets on sale at the Central Drug Store and by members of the lecture course committee:—R. W. Kane, W. E. Hampton, A. F. Bridge, A. L. Fitch, A. M. Wilkinson and Mr. Craig.

Reserved seats 10c extra per number.

Please read the program that will be handed to you in a few days and then don't forget to buy a ticket for the season.

BIG INJUN PASSES

Aged Ojibwa Chief, of Historic Renown Dies at Garden Island

Since Mormon times old Antoine Pealise has lived on Garden Island, "farther than Beaver," they named the southern half of Beaver Island in his honor, "Pealse Township."

Old Antoine died last Monday aged 96 years, and was gathered to the great wigwam in the happy hunting grounds. He was recognized as chief of the amalgamated tribe of Ottawas and Chippeways of that locality, and known in Indian lore as "Ojibwa."

He was the patriarch of a considerable colony of his people living on Garden Island, of the Beaver group, and gaining their living by fishing. Some of them have up-to-date gasoline boats, and some of them are possessors of good farms. Old Antoine held title to a considerable area of land.

YEAR'S CRIMINAL RECORD

Were 41,319 Cases, With 37,797 Convictions and 2,428 Acquittals—Some Interesting Statistics

There were 41,319 prosecutions in Michigan during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, according to the annual report of Attorney General Fellows which has just been filed.

Of these prosecutions, 37,797 resulted in convictions and 2,428 in acquittals. Dismissals on payment of costs totaled 1325, while nolle prossed cases numbered 1,964, and 1,311 prisoners were discharged after examination. The remaining 2,504 either escaped or evaded justice in some way.

Cases of drunkenness, easily led all others. A total of 10,947 cases of such a character were tried. Of these 9,811 came under the head of disorderlies, while the rest were under special statutes. Breach of the peace numbered 3,770 cases; simple larceny was represented by 2,786, and assault and battery, 4,726.

MARL AS A FERTILIZER

Drayton Seaman, living in the northern part of Wexford county, is in a position to give positive information as to the value of a county farm agent. Mr. Seaman is a large scale, progressive farmer and is anxious to take advantage of the best known methods for growing, harvesting and marketing crops. Being convinced that part of his lands were somewhat exhausted so far as the lime supply was concerned, he secured a carload of marl from Van Buren county, which he spread over his fields at a cost for marl, cartage, freight, etc. of $250. The marl was sufficiently beneficial to the land so that the results were noticeable in improved crops. When the recently employed county agent visited Mr. Seaman's farm and Mr. Seaman told how progressive he had been, the county agent ventured the opinion that marl could be secured much closer by than in Van Buren county, and he proceeded to inspect the Seaman farm. He located a marl bed just back of the barn, much to Mr. Seaman's surprise. It would have been possible to have secured several carloads of marl from this bed at a much less cost than that paid for the marl brought from Northern Michigan.

The county agent has in his possession a soil map of Wexford county made by the federal government some years since. He also is equipped with instruments for boring into the soil to see what lies beneath the surface. With the map and his instruments he proposes to go over a large part of the county and locate marl beds that those farmers who wish to sweeten their land can do so without the great expense of paying freight and cartage on marl or agricultural lime from a distance.

Not all the counties of Western Michigan have had a soil survey. But it is probable that the federal men with the information in their possession can help farmers very materially in finding marl beds that are near enough the surface to be mined a reasonable expense.

A GREAT NOURISHER

Is Rye Flour and It is Much Cheaper Than Wheat Flour

Rye flour is just as nourishing as wheat flour and is a good deal cheaper at present. These facts are agreed upon by various medical writers. The editor of the New York Medical Journal takes occasion to point out in this connection that an equal amount of nourishment is obtainable from cheap and expensive cuts of meat. He says:

"Chemists have repeatedly called attention to the extravagance of the American palate in respect to meats, and have seen in this one of the causes of the high cost of living. Again and again they have pointed out that cheaper cuts of meat, for example, are fully as nourishing as filet and porterhouse steak, and that all that is needed is education as to the proper method of cooking.

"What is true of meat applies also to many other foods. Just now, for example, when flour has advanced considerably in price, being quoted at $6.50 a barrel. Exactly the same amount of nourishment in the form of rye flour costs $5.50, a saving of $1.00 a barrel.

"Why, asks the Weekly Bulletin of the New York department of health, should Americans continue to prefer wheat flour when rye is equally nutritious and very much cheaper? Or why should they not learn, like the Scotch, to make oatmeal, which is even more nutritious, and also much cheaper, a staple article of diet. Or why disdain delicious and wholesome cornmeal, highly nutritious and about two-thirds the price of wheat flour."

IT WAS REPUBLICAN DAY BUT FERRIS IS ELECTED GOVERNOR

Wilson Administration Has Been Severely Rebuked At The Polls

CONGRESS SWINGS BACK ALMOST TO G.O.P. COLUMN

Bull Moose Completely Eliminated But Scored Enough Votes to Aid Democrats in The Tightest Pinches

Heavy Republican gains throughout the country in Tuesday's elections gave assurance of reducing the present Democratic majority of 141 in the house of representatives by a big net gain of 42 seats for the Republicans. Many districts are yet to be heard from. Republicane leaders were jubilant over the prospects, some predicting the Democratic majority might be overturned altogether by the final results.

Democratic control of the senate, however, was assured, the probability being that it would be increased from 10 to 12 through the election of Roger C. Sullivan in Illinois. The sweeping Republican victory in New York, the collapse of the Progressive vote throughout the country and the upheaval in the Democratic congressional districts generally were taken as assurances by Republican partisans that the tariff had entered in the national political conflict with telling effect.

While Governor Ferris was elected by at least 20,000 plurality, the entire Republican State ticket, below governor, was elected by about 25,000 plurality.

Senator Scott was elected to Congress from this district by at least 9,000 majority.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY

On a total vote of approximately 2300, with two small precincts to hear from, Oscorn carried the county by 348 plurality over Ferris.

From there down the ticket large figures are written, every man on the republican ticket from Congressman down carrying the county. Following are the pluralities: Scott, for congress, 1019; Morford, for Senator 1104; McMillan, for Representative, 1028; Novak, for Sheriff, 648; Lewis, for Clerk, 1298; Weaver, for Treasurer, was high man, at 1351; Emrey, Register, 1150; Lewis, Prosecutor, 1412.

THE CITY

Charlevoix city gave the following pluralities: Osborn 161; Scott 170; Morford 285; McMillan 281; Novak 359; Richard Lewis 360; Weaver 372; Emrey 244; R. L. Lewis 376.

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it.

This is hardly fair to yourself; after you work for your money, it will repay the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.

Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business whom you are prone to envy, thinking they have a mysterious Midas touch. Almost without exception they began with no capital but a strong will and an inflexible purpose.

For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.50 a week. In six years he had banked $2000—enough to start a modest business of his own. MORAL—Bank your own money.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "THE RISE TO POWER," &c.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves home, his father (who, with the village minister, has disowned him), and goes to Chicago to make his fortune. He takes a menial place at a hotel and sets to work to study and build up if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Hunter, a lawyer, for a place in his office and finds his success in that work. Miss Unity, who has a cousin, Roger Andersleigh, open-hearted Irishwoman, Mrs. Kate Hunter, and a brother, Stephen, lives in Hunter's home, in his studio. Nellie, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude to him in a manner that leads Mark's interest in her. Henry Woodson, a friend of Hunter's, proves a rival. Mark's ambition grows of the Kate Hunter type. Later Roman also succeeds and Mark gets his job. Roman is married and tells Mark to find another job. Mark's success in his new job, during which Mark has invented devices have made while the inventor-saving devices have made Hunter's business successful, leads to Hunter's offering Mark a partnership. Mark and Nellie are in love with an accident which leaves Nellie a cripple for life. He refuses to further interfering in Mark's affairs. Mark's success in his business affairs, and his determination to make Nellie a cripple for life, he Boyne Citizen: A committee of the Chamber of Commerce were out yesterday and today with L. H. Neilson, of Cadillac, going over the ground to decide upon the possibilities of connecting Boyne City with the Main Market Highway now under construction from Grand Rapids north. Mr. Neilson is District Engineer of the State Highway Department and his recommendation will have considerable force.

East Jordan Herald: Carlton Sweet who met with a fatal accident when diving in the lake some weeks since died in Harper Hospital, Detroit, last Sunday and his body was brought home for burial Monday. Had he lived one day more he would have been fifteen years of age. Needless to say his death has caused intense grief to the dear ones at home. The funeral services were held at the house on Wednesday afternoon.

East Jordan Herald: Our community was deeply grieved Wednesday morning when it was learned that O. S. Sunstedt had passed away at his home that morning, a victim of typhoid fever. Mr. Sunstedt was road master for the E. J. & S. railroad and held in high esteem by all who knew him. Deceased was born in Sweden forty-seven years ago and leaves a wife and one boy, Elmer, also a brother and sister who reside in Sweden.

Glen Cheney, aged twenty-one and Leonard Sweet, aged twenty-three, were drowned in Glen Lake one day last week. They had been working on the farm at Miller's Hill owned by Calvin Cheney, brother of the drowned man. They had started to row across Glen Lake to Glen Arbor in a large row boat. The lake was very rough and several hours afterward the empty boat half filled with water was discovered by T. Field, who saw it as it was being blown toward the shore.

East Jordan Enterprise—East Jordan has again been visited by fire, and three business buildings on State St. were burned. Sunday night shortly before midnight a man coming down Second street discovered the fire in the north end of L. C. Madison's building occupied by Fred Bissonette's restaurant. This was in a string of three frame buildings so close that with the start the fire had got there was no hope of saving them, and quick hard work was necessary if other buildings at either end of the doomed row were saved. The party discovering the fire promptly broke into Geo. Carr's building to phone in an alarm, and the hose Co. arrived in time so that by quick, intelligent action, aided by an auxiliary stream from the old reliable South Vale pump at the Lumber Co.'s Mill A they kept the fire confined to the row in which it started. A light rain had fallen earlier in the evening and left everything so wet that no damage was done by flying cinders. The burned buildings were occupied by Mrs Genevive Sencenal with a stock of Millinery and ladies furnishings; M. Tyner, barber shop; Fred Bissonette, restaurant and pool room; Ed. Alexander, soft drinks, and Lee Murray, cigar factory. Two of the burned buildings belonged to L. C. Madison and one to Joseph Votruba. There was nothing saved from the restaurant or the barber shop. Mr. Tyner estimates his loss at $500.00, with small insurance. Mr. Madison estimates his loss at $2,000, with small insurance. Mr. Votruba's building is estimated at $2,000 with $700 insurance. Some of Miss Senecale's stock was removed also part of the effects of the cigar factory. Their loss and insurance we have been unable to learn.

Boyne Citizen: The wheels of industry will whir a merry tune in Boyne City beginning Monday morning, November 2. Mill No. 1 which has stood idle for a few weeks will resume operations as will the Boyne City Lumber Company mill. The shingle mill which is nearing completion, will start as soon as machinery arrives and is installed. Mill No. 2 will close Saturday night of this week and will be the only industry standing idle in the city. The Elm Cooperage plant will turn on the steam within ten days after the Boyne City Lumber company mill starts. The closing of mill 2 and the starting of mill 1 will increase the output 25,000 a day and will furnish employment to about fifty more men. The opening of the mills according to the plans announced some two or three weeks ago will be carried out despite the fact that two cancellations of orders were received at a recent date meaning the withdrawal of a market for some $40,000 worth of lumber. Notwithstanding the fact that the markets are still dull, the companies are resuming operations and thereby giving employment to all except a small percent of the laboring men in the city. The men now thrown out of work have been employed slightly while the others were idle and it thereby more equally divides the burden placed upon the working man by the present conditions in the markets of the world. When the shingle mill starts at least half of those losing employment by the closing of mill 2 will be taken care of. Although hard times were freely predicted here and the lack of employment did press closely upon some, local business did not suffer to any great extent. This is due partly to the fact that this community is coming into its own as a farming center and the present year has proven more prosperous than anticipated, and partly to the fact that the quietness along industrial lines was only of a temporary nature and not of sufficient permanence to seriously affect

BERLIN SWARMS WITH EAGER MEN

Germany Finds Many Soldiers to Repair Her Losses.

YET TO CALL HER RESERVES

After Survey of Conditions Correspondent Finds That Kaiser Can Send Millions of Men into Field—Little News Allowed to Filter Through. Curious to Know How London Feels.

Berlin.—"After the westward rush of American officers an American coming to Berlin from London is an object of curiosity here, and the writer has been continuously besieged with questions as to conditions in England, from foreign officials down to waiters," writes a correspondent who has just reached Berlin.

"How do the Englishmen feel about the war? What does London look like? Are they getting nervous about our Zeppelins? are samples of the questions asked eagerly, for what little English news is allowed to filter through Copenhagen, Holland and Rome in the form of a survey of conditions is inadequate to give even a distorted picture of conditions in England.

"When Imperial Vice Chancellor Delbruck told the writer that Germany had at the present time between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 men in the field he might have added that forty were several million more in reserve. There must be a whole army corps of uniformed soldiers and officers running around loose in Berlin alone. The streets were never so alive with the military, even in times of peace. Moreover, the cafes and streets are full of officers who all requested at the nearest police station and waiting their call to the colors. I am told that all the barracks in and around Berlin are full of landsturm soldiers getting a final polish before being sent to the front, while many classes of the landsturm have not been called out yet. In spite of listing on the probable duration of the war, therefore, one must take into account that for many months to come Germany will be able to put a fresh soldier in the field for every one of Kitchener's recruits.

"A parallel comfortable delusion is entertained here. Not only the man in the street, but even the well informed, well educated German, woefully underestimates the human resources of the British empire and considers the British army as a negligible factor. The fact that Lord Kitchener hopes to lick a new army of 500,000 into shape in six months is well known here, but 'it can't be done. Absurd! Impossible! Is the variety of the art gone mad?'

"On the other hand, there is no set dance that the rank and file of the German people underestimate the magnitude of the conflict or that they expect a walkover. Even enthusiasts and the most optimistic optimists think the war will last at least six months longer, while a year would probably represent the verdict of the thoughtful majority.

"Writing in the shadow of the Wilhelmstrasse, it is impossible not to feel that the London press had—honestly and quite naturally—overestimated the Russian factor and pinned too high hopes on the early effect of Russian pressure. Berlin is not suffering from an attack of nerves caused by the sight of that Prussian reform, for no more are arriving, and the idea that a Russian army might soon be knocking at the theoretical gates of Berlin seems as fantastic to the Berliner as an Irish home Rule Bill.

"While the official news, even of success, is carefully sifted, the bloody dispatches devoid of all picturesque pose of detail and thoroughly manufactory to the Anglo-Saxon mind (the British press bureau is prodigal of the news and human interest by comparison), there is much interesting gossip. Some of it would seem the outcome of authority, to be snapped up here."

GOVERNOR DUNNE OF ILLINOIS IN ADDRESS BEFORE STATE GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION SAID:

"The question of good roads touches vitally the agricultural, educational, social religious and economic welfare of Illinois, and involves the conservation of national resources.

"In the improvement of good roads Illinois has until recently been indeed backward. Reports of the federal department of agriculture up to 1913 show that about 10 percent of the 90,000 miles of Illinois road are improved in a permanent manner as against 35 percent in Indiana, 20 percent in Kentucky, 28 percent in Ohio and 59 percent in Massachusetts.

"The loss to farmers, because of the inaccessible primary markets, and the abnormal expense of transportation due to bad roads must be considered as a contributing cause of the high cost of living. In some Illinois counties, highways are impassable to ordinary loads for a full third part of the year. Bad roads not only hinder crop production and marketing, but they keep the rural consumer away from the store of the merchant for weeks at a time. They keep pupils from the schools, and voters from political gatherings, and from participation in elections. They impair the efficiency of churches and social, fraternal and other organizations, which depend largely on public gathering for the efficiency of their work.

"Moreover, bad roads contribute to the unattractiveness, the isolation and the monotony of country life, that are responsible for the desertion of rural pursuits, especially among the young. Experts in mental ailments agree that women in remote sections are the chief sufferers from the restriction of communication and social intercourse, which bad roads impose.

"Highway conditions in Illinois are due to the fact that progress in methods of transportation and travel has not been met with corresponding changes in our system of road building and maintenance.

"It was a pleasure to me, as governor, to have designated Wednesday, April 15 last as 'road day,' not as a holiday but a hard-working day upon which I urged public officials and the public in general to begin practical and effective work upon the improvement of the highways of the state. Public sentiment is in favor of the improvement of our roads. A great deal has been accomplished in this direction in the near few years.

SOUTH AMERICA NEEDS MONEY

SANTA BRAZIL

CAPITAL AT SANTIAGO

CAN the United States spare South America $500,000,000 during the next five years? Can it supply $100,000,000 during the next 12 months?

South America wants these amounts within the period stated. The needs of several of the countries are pressing. They must get money somewhere.

When the war closed Europe for half a dozen countries were negotiating in Europe for loans. Most of them were in the midst of commercial and financial crises due to economic causes which were at work the world over. Part of the loans would have itself to take up old obligations by new issues, but in every case there was also a demand for additional capital which would have increased the total indebtedness.

The war has dealt a death blow to these expectations, the famous Jockey club at Buenos Aires where international finance is discussed, it is now perfectly understood that with the European countries staggering for the next 50 years under the debts which the war will create there will be no loans to take up the old ones. It is not likely that the Brazilian loan can now be floated in Europe and Japan is therefore likely to be sought by the government. Later, when Europe shall have time to think in terms of peace and the nations shall have settled down to the business of the world, when the industrial readjustment shall have been made, when the belligerents shall have begun to earn money with which to pay the interest on their obligations, when the European war has ended, South America will be in the market for money. It will need the money. It will need it very badly. It will need it so badly that it will be willing to pay a high price for it.

Two years ago the Argentine debt was approximately $600,000,000. A year later it had risen nominally to $700,000,000.

Something more than a year ago Argentina sought to float a new loan in France. The conditions were unfavorable. A new loan on the same basis would doubtless still be desirable, but the Argentine government would look to New York rather than to Paris or London for funds.

Brazil's various debt issues now approximate $650,000,000. There have been issues of government securities and other obligations. Brazil, as a rule, borrows in the United States, with the exception of the extensive undeveloped resources the extent of which is not yet known, has been a free borrower.

SOUTH AMERICA NEEDS MONEY

CAPITAL AT SANTIAGO

SANTA, BRAZILIA

CAPITAL AT BUENOS AYRES

CAPITAL AT MONTEVIDEO

"CAN the United States spare South America $100,000,000 during the next five years?" Can it supply $100,000,000 during the next 12 months.

South America wants these amounts within the period stated. The needs of several of the countries are pressing. They must get money somewhere.

When the war ended bankers at home and in about countries were negotiating in behalf of some loans. Most of these were in the midst of commercial and financial crises due to economic causes which were at work the world over. Part of the loans wanted were merely to take up old obligations by new issues, but in every case there was also a demand for additional capital which would have increased the total indebtedness.

The war has dealt a death blow to these expectations. In the London Jockey club at Buenos Aires, where international finance is discussed, it is now perfectly understood that with the European countries staggering for the next 10 years under the debts which the war will create there will be no more loans for south America. The same understanding exists on the coffee exchange in Rio de Janeiro and on the bourse in Santiago.

Temporarily some of the South American countries will suffer as much from the war as the nations which actually are engaged in it. They will not only be unable to obtain money abroad but also their usual foreign commerce will be dislocated through the loss of markets.

Some of the countries have met the emergency by following the example of the European nations and decreeing moratoriums. Harassed South American financial institutions and big commercial firms which were in difficulties may therefore bless the war as avoiding the necessity of forced payments, but they will welcome it only as a means of immediate relief to debtors who otherwise would be forced into bankruptcy.

Brazil has met the situation, brought about through the inability to float new loans, by providing for a new issue of paper currency in addition to the abundant volume which already is in circulation. This may demonstrate the wisdom of the unwisdom of this action as an emergency measure, but it shows the demoralization that the European war has caused.

South American public men and the diplomatic representatives of the different governments in Washington who know how great the dependence has been on Europe and who understand fully the financial status of their respective countries, inwardly turn their eyes to the United States, and it is through them that the query comes as to whether the United States can supply a few hundred millions needed.

The answer which may be given to the question will determine whether the United States is to obtain commercial supremacy and to dominate South America financially.

European financiers who until the New York Stock exchange was closed were selling good to unloading American securities in their home land are now doubtless revolving the same question as to what the United States may do in the way of financing South America. To them the question takes the form in every South American city of $2,000,000,000 indebtedness of the South American governments can be shifted to the United States. And if so how soon and under what terms?

Two billion dollars represents in round numbers what the South American countries owe in the form of public debts. What may be called the national debts do not figure up this sum, but the municipal debts, some of which are guaranteed by the national government, bring up the total.

All the South American countries have had the borrowing habit. Some of the weaker and more reckless ones have given the whole continent a bad name. Yet the truth is that in view of resources and natural wealth and the rapid development that has been going on $2,000,000,000 is not an extravagant total for debts.

It will be found, moreover, that the very large proportion of the debts has been owed by the countries which are solvent and which scrupulously meet their obligations.

Since the international imbroglio in which the United States took a hand Venezuela has been paying off its debts until now the total amount outstanding is less than $35,000,000.

Colombia has what is known as a consolidated debt, which does not exceed $24,000,000. The country has managed to meet the interest in a manner to satisfy even the critical British foreign bondholders committee. Colombia, whether it gets the $25,000,000 Panama gratuity from the United States or not, wants a general loan of something like $20,000,000 to build railways and rehabilitate the country generally.

Ecuador has a public debt not exceeding $20,000,000, most of which grows out of the bonds issued for the Guayaquil and Quito railway. These are held in England, France and the United States. The provision made for the sanitation of Guayaquil carried with it a prospective loan of $10,000,000. A proposition which was brought to New York business a year ago was for a blanket loan of $45,000,000 to $50,000,000 to take up outstanding obligations, provide for the sanitation of Guayaquil and to leave a balance for national purposes. A New York banking house a few years ago tided Ecuador over a financial emergency by means of a temporary loan and realized a very handsome profit.

Peru, after the war with Chile in 1881, was left with a debt so monumental that it never could have recovered if the burden had remained. The country was saved out of the situation by turning over the state railways under a long lease to the Peruvian corporation, which was also given the remaining guano deposits and various land concessions.

The Peruvian corporation and the government have lost more of some previous assessments, but on the whole the arrangement has been a good one. Peru was able to face the world after the war with a big debt. During the last quarter of a century the total indebtedness incurred has not been large, it now amounts approximately to $35,000,000. Peru was in the market for a loan when the European war broke out.

Bolivia, the midcontinent country of South America, left by the war with Chile without a seaport, also was able to start the peace era with out a big national debt. The amount of the different forms of what may be called the bolivian debt is now between $10,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Paraguay, on account of its numerous revolutions and possibly for other reasons, never has had much success in securing money from Europe. Its present public debt is between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000. The opening of railway communications with Buenos Aires and other cities of powerful development have inclined European financiers to look more favorably on Paraguay than at any time in the country was in prospect until a month ago. Now, if Paraguay borrows, it will have to go to New York instead of to London.

Taking the group of countries which are not in default, Argentina is the most conspicuous for the bulk of the public debts of South American countries are those of the Argentine republic, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay. This group of countries owes Europe—that is, the governments owe governments—more than $1,700,000,000. They are able to meet their obligations, though some of the loan may require refunding on new bonds.

The borrowing nations are really the A.B.C., or mediating South American countries which helped President Wilson settle the Mexican imbroglio and Uruguay.

The total of Argentine obligations is variable, according to the amount of cedulas, or national mortgage bonds, which are in circulation. Two years ago the Argentine debt was approximately $617,000,000. A year later it had risen nominally to $732,000,000.

Something more than a year ago Argentina sought to float a new loan in Paris, but the conditions were unfavorable. A new loan on the same basis would doubtless still be desirable, but the Argentine government would look to New York rather than to Paris or London for funds.

Brazil's various debt issues now approximate $600,000,000. There have been loans of the federal government and other obligations. Brazil, as the sister country, greatly to blue than the United States with undeveloped resources the extent of which is not known, has been a free borrower.

Within the last year there have been various propositions for new loans to take up old issues. It is not likely that any Brazilian loan can now be floated in Europe and none is therefore likely to be sought by the government. Later on, if the European situation takes place, when the inevitable readjustment takes place, Brazil must look to place her loans in the United States.

Chile now has outstanding obligations in the nature of public debts to the amount of $150,000,000. The country has borrowed largely on the underlying security of the nitrate beds and the revenues to be obtained from them. The European war interferes with the demand for these fertilizers and a temporary rise it may be that the workmen in many of the nitrate fields will be out of employment. However, the permanent source of wealth which Chile possesses in the nitrate beds remains.

Uruguay, for an agricultural country, may be assumed to have a pretty large debt, since the total now amounts to $138,000,000. Yet the public which is on the gold standard and which has a dollar worth more than the dollar of the United States holds high rank in European financial circles because of the certainty with which its financial obligations have been met.

A few months ago when an emergency loan of $10,000,000 was wanted Uruguay made vain efforts to place it in the United States. Ultimately it had to be placed in London, Paris and Antwerp, at 95½.

By far the larger part of the public debts of the South American countries is held in England. While some of the loans which have been placed through London have been apportioned among the monetary centers in Europe and have been absorbed on the continent probably between seventy and seventy-five per cent of the obligations remain in England.

These general facts about the debts of the South American countries and their distribution in Europe are essential to know in judging of the probability of American capital at some period in the near future relieving Europe of a part of its South American financial burden. Never before there has been no market in the United States.

The main question recurs, and on it depend in large degree the future trade relations of the United States with South America: Can the United States spare South America $100,000,000 during the next five years? Can it supply $100,000,000 during the next 12 months.

COMPARATIVELY LITTLE.

"Awful, isn't it?"

"Dreadful! But I did not know you knew about it.

"Why, every paper is full of it!"

"Every paper full of the fact that my wife's relatives are going to spend the whole of the summer with us? You must be crazy!"

"You must be crazy! I was referring to the war."

"Huh! I wouldn't be bothered by a little thing like that!"

QUESTION OF QUALITY.

Little Red Riding-hood, however, was still conscious of a lack.

"Just why," she asked, halting her pretty dance to perpetually, "do you talk to me so?"

The Wolf threw one leg carelessly over the other and laughed.

"I've heard so much about this better babies movement," quoth he, and flecked the dust from his pointed shoes with a cane, "that I wish to see if there's anything in it."—Puck.

BIRTHPLACE OF GREAT POET

Move to Purchase House Where Long Fellow Was Born Meets With Some Disapproval.

A relative of Henry W. Longfellow has written to the Houghton Mifflin company a letter concerning the proposal to buy the birthplace of the poet through subscription. The letter says:

"The birthplace of Mr. Longfellow was, from about [illegible] not his parents' home. It belonged to Captain Stephen Longfellow, an uncle of the poet, and the poet's mother was only temporarily visiting there when he was born. The real Longfellow home, which was built by the poet's grandfather, Gen. Peleg Wadsworth, on Congress street, was given by the poet's sister, Mrs. Ann Longfellow Pierce, to the Maine Historical society and is quite a museum and memorial. There are kept and shown the old family furniture and some relics of pioneer days in Maine. It is also a handsome house, in a good part of the city, easily accessible to strangers who wish to see it, and visited by several thousand every year.

"On the other hand, the Pierce street house, in which the poet happened to be born, is now in a tenement house district, inhabited mostly by Italians and in out of the way. The house has been dismantled of its front door and side lights, front doorstep and bell mantelpiece, and its partitions have been changed to fit it for six families. There are no Longfellow or Wadsworth portraits, books or manuscripts there, and it is not easily accessible to strangers.

"It is believed that the movement for purchasing this birthplace, such as it is, is not a subscription which has not the support of either the Maine Historical society nor the Longfellow family, nor of any but a very few Portland citizens.

MISSED HOME DISHES

WHY AMERICAN COULDN'T ENJOY HIS TRIP ABROAD.

Benny Beebs Entirely Unable to Think Much of Any Country That Couldn't Even Supply Him

"Home's good enough for me—home and home food," declared Benny Beebs, according to the tale he told when he, the week after he and his wife, Amanda, returned from abroad. "The things they don't know about food on the other side—Well, you wouldn't hardly believe it!

"Pie, now. In England, when it's pie, it's mostly filled with veal and ham; and when there's gooseberries or cherries inside, and mighty good, it ain't pie at all; it's tart. Well, tart or no tart, the Britishers come nearest; but London, Paris, Rome—great places, all of them, there's an out about every one of 'em when it comes to pie. It's the living truth, Mis' Adams.

"Fillings, now. In Paris I couldn't even get plain apple—and a good apple, they don't seem heard of it. Nobleberry, nor huckleberry, nor cranberry, nor raspberry—never heard of 'em. Mebbe they scorn such simple, common things; thinks I, but when I tried 'em on mock cherry, and Banbury, and Marlboro, and coconut custard, they seemed to be a-furious with ignorance. Plain black ignorance, poor things!

"And vanilla—they don't seem surprised, Mis' Adams: I was. I believe in being fair, and I dare say they cook the things they know how to cook the best way. It could be done; but when they put vanilla in custard, and baked beans, and flapjacks, and buckwheat cakes, and ice cream, the thinking of a person reely depends on—why, I can't say I see the sense in makin' such things taste like vanilla extract. Salad's well enough if you like your grass hot and wilted, and don't mind eatin' weeds—they put in sorrel and chicory, and such-like, I understand—I was bad to fill up on till the reel things come along, both times.

"Well, anyway, Mis' Adams, I dare! Steamed clams! Just wouldn't! I'd be home before I would, if I knew I'd get acquainted with clams over there, and fried oysters are mean little wheezy critters, about good enough for bait. No, no, reely, Mis' Adams! Not any! I found Dodds Kidney Pills and you may publish this letter if you wish. I am serving my third term as Pathmaster. Yours truly, Talleyrand's Victory.

One hundred years ago the congress of Vienna met for formal organization. Nearly all the monarchs of Europe were assembled to take part in the deliberations, or were represented by their most eminent statesmen. The Porte alone was not represented in the great congress of the nations. It is said that the four great allied powers—England, Austria, Prussia and Russia—had made a secret agreement to exclude France from participation in any of their territorial arrangements, but in vain they reckoned without Talleyrand, the great French statesman and diplomatist, who not only insisted that his country be admitted to take part in all the deliberations, but himself became the leading spirit of the whole congress.

Due Formality.

Church connoisseurs and observancers formed the subject of study, and the teacher wished the children themselves to build the bridge between baptism and birth.

"Now, children," she said, briskly, "what comes after baptism?"

Answered a shrill childish voice serenely: "Divorce."

A NURSE TAKES DOCTOR'S ADVICE

And is Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Euphemia, Ohio.—"Because of total ignorance of how to care for myself when verging into womanhood, and from taking cold when going to school, I suffered from a displacement, and each month I had severe pains and nausea which always meant a lay-off from work for two to four days from the time I was 15 years old.

"I went to Kansas to live with my sister and while there a Dodge told me of the Pinkham remedies but I did not use them then as my faith in patent medicines was limited. After my sister died I came home to Ohio to live and that has been my home for the last 18 years.

"The Change of Life came when I was 47 years old and about this time I saw my physical condition plainly described in one of your advertisements. Then I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I cannot tell you or any one the relief it gave me in the first three months. It put me right when I was not lay off every month and during the last 10 years I have not paid out one dollar to a doctor, and have been blest with excellent health for a woman of my age and I can thank Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound first.

"Since the Change of Life is over I have been a maternity nurse and being wholly self-supporting I cannot overpraise your medicine. If good health, I have now earned a comfortable little home and am still nursing. I have recommended your Compound to many women with good results, as it is excellent to take before and after childbirth."—MRS. JOHN ADELIA STEWART, Euphemia, Ohio.

WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITIES [illegible]

Musical Tastes Cultivated.

The Russian military band is considered more than an army institution, the cost of maintaining so many bands is considerable, even for so rich a country as Russia, but the government considers them as a profitable investment. The Russian soldier has come to require music and he demands it, and these bands supply it not only in the barracks. These bands cater to the highest musical taste, and the average Russian is as much a lover of good music as any one else, and he will have no other. The bands play the new and popular music by composers like Ivanoff, but on all the important occasions they will use such names as Liszt, Schumann, Chopin, Tschaikowsky, Gurka, Strauss and Dessoy.

Real Strategy.

The fat plumber and the thin carpenter were discussing the European war.

"I'd like to be in the English navy," said the plumber.

"I'd take the Belgian navy for mine," the carpenter remarked.

"Pooh," ejaculated the plumber, "Belgium has the smallest navy in the world."

"That's why I'd like to be in it," grinned the carpenter. "The smaller the navy the harder it would be to hit."—Youngstown Telegram.

Rattlesnake Oil.

"There is a constant demand for rattlesnake oil in America" that F. M. Armstrong of Brownsville, Tex., informs us in the Wilson Weekly of his experience. On this account it has been called the absolute zero, and all scientific investigators have been struggling for many years to reach this ultimate goal, for it has been a practical certainty that many of the properties of matter at ordinary temperatures will disappear, or become profoundly modified, at the bottom of the scale of temperature." Prof. H. W. Wood, in Harper's Magazine.

Cool.

Your golf enthusiasm is a encumber in some respects. While playing over a competition course one evening I witnessed an amusing little incident which eloquently illustrates the golfing point of view. A ball driven from the tee sailed gracefully in the direction of the green and administered a hard knock on the unoffending cranium of a player who was studying his mashie shot a few yards beyond the green. "I'm very sorry my ball hit you," said the player when he had recovered from the shock. "Then, as his casual sight of his ball lying close to the hole seemed to dawn upon him, he added in a cheering voice: "Oh, it isn't so bad! I'm well up to the pin!"—Glasgow News.

LIKE A FIRE GOD

By EVELYN CHASE.

"That's pretty slick," spoke Buff, blunt Adam Reeves in a tone of admiration. "What do you call them, sonny?"

"Sparklers."

"Good name. It fits. Give me a dozen boxes."

"What in the world are you going to do with them, Mr. Reeves?" inquired the companion of the old prospector, Ronald Bond.

It was at a seaport town in Australia, way over on the other side of the world. A street fair was in progress. On their way to the interior Reeves and his young friend Ronald had strolled from their hotel to take in the sights. A species of Mardi Gras festivities signaled the occasion. Inside control there were mined fireworks, and one street faker was selling money selling these pretty popular "sparklers," which ignited at one end and cascaded out a harmless shower of brilliantly sparkling fiery molecules.

Reeves had never seen them before, and the display pleased him. He purchased two boxes of the fizzy, slim, narrow and easily packed, and then they wandered on.

"I'll make them fly around our traps," he laughed. "Just about the Fourth of July we'll be out in the wilderness a thousand miles from anything, and if we get homesick we'll have a little patriotic spurt and fire them off, see?"

Then Reeves slipped the two little boxes into an inside pocket of the coat he wore, for forgot all about them as some new display of interest attracted his attention.

Reeves was born with a peculiar mission. He was a skilled mining expert and had been engaged by British promoters to invade the center of a distinctly virgin gold field in Florida. There were rumors of great metal wealth in a certain chain of hills and he was to secure ore specimens.

"Why, what for?" inquired the surprised Ronald.

"If you had looked up into that tree you would probably have seen a burlal pinnform. These are the trophies of some big chief," explained Reeves. "For any one to even touch them is held as sacrilege by these superstitious natives. Missing that measure the war club, they would trail you to the end of the earth to recover it. I advise you to take it back at once."

This Ronald did. He replaced the object just where he had found it and turned to retrace his steps to his friend, half a mile away. Just then a wild uproar greeted him. Pieces of fire were flying in the air from behind a score of bushes as many dusky natives sprang into view.

Ronald was surrounded seized, his arms bound, and dragged along by his naked fiend captors. He was led past an encampment of rude huts and into a large spreading cave in the mountain side.

This seemed to be a sort of temple of brilliants and fire. It was lined with skins upon which was daubed in crude colors the pictures of a long headed idol. There was a stone pillar in the center of the cavern, and to this Ronald was securely tied.

He noted that overhead an open space ran up like a natural flue, and about the post he fancied he discovered ashes as if this was the spot where the natives offered up their prisoners and enemies as human sacrifices.

His captors squatted in a circle and muttered over a fire in front of the idol, made revealing motions toward him, and Ronald could readily discern that they were discussing his fate.

Finally after several hours deliberation they seemed to arrive at a definite conclusion. Most of them went away, leaving two of their number to pile up firewood about the post.

"It's good-by Nellie! sure," dolefully ruminated Ronald. "And Mr. Reeves never knew what had happened to me!"

To grow dusk, and some lighted torches were placed around. The natives came back in solemn procession led by a tall man wearing a hideous tom-tom. They paraded around their victim. Ronald felt that his doom was drawing nigh.

Suddenly he strained his gaze. Away back in the gloom of the cave he noted a quick sparkle of light. This grew to a sudden blinding radiance. A rushing whirlwind form, emitting a thousand darting sparks of fire approached.

It must have been a weird and thrilling sight for the natives. To their unaccustomed eyes an angry "god" was bearing down upon them. All over the onrushing figure there were spouts of blinding fire. They turned and fled to a man.

"Quick, now, and follow!" shouted the fire god to Ronald, cutting his bonds and leading back the way he had come.

"Those sparklers," explained Reeves as they gained the open air, and regaining their trains, started, to get speedily away from their present seat of peril. "I found out they had captured you. I happened to think of those two boxes of sparklers I stuck them all over me and lit them. It was a narrow escape, but the scheme worked fine.

"So fine that the awed natives did not even attempt a pursuit, and two months later they reached home—and Delhi!

What is the "Absolute Zero"?

Two hundred and forty degrees below zero has, from theoretical considerations, been known to be the temperature at which all molecular motion ceases—in other words, it is the "absolute zero" at which it will have when every particle of its heat is absorbed. The point at which the pressure of a gas decreases as it is cooled shows us that the pressure should vanish at about 240 degrees below zero. At a temperature of 270 degrees below zero, Dewar, the great British chemist, has condensed helium which we call heat, and if this motion ceases it means that the "absolute zero" is reached.

Now the pressure of a gas is due to the molecular motion which we call heat, and if this motion ceases it means that the "absolute zero" is reached.

make an analysis and report to his superiors.

"You're courting my daughter Grace," he told Ronald in his blunt, friendly way; "best home in New Jersey. You know a good deal about my line of business. Come along with me and learn something more about it, and share a good fat fee."

This was the most generous two can came to be together. The next day they resumed their journey.

A bitter feud had sprung up between the "bad lands" and thinking that it was "Uncle Sam" that F. M. Armstrong of Brownsville, Tex., is making an effort to "get even" with the farm. The Popular Effects in Veilings

THE new veilings that are popular are those that are simple in design. They consist of a novelty mesh, a border of chenille dots, or silk dots, or effects of dots on a fine mesh.

It is in the measurements of these two features, the mesh and the dot, that the designers have made the wonderful variety in patterns that are shown in veiling departments. It happens that different sizes and shapes in the mesh make the veils more or less becoming to the individual wearer. It would be impossible to describe the varieties of the veilings now shown. Nets are designed with the mesh showing outlines of diamonds, hexagons, circles, triangles and every variation of these.

If one studies the dots they will be found to vary as much as the meshes in shape. There are small circular dots, squares, diamonds, the seconds and tiny floral patterns. Also there are combinations of sizes on the same mesh, in blending variety.

Veils are worn in three widths. In the larger cities just now the most popular is that which is the middle width.

KILLED IN THE TRENCHES.

Fate of One of the Founders of the Sentinel.

William Patterson, a Scottish farmer, was the founder of London's great institution, the Threadneedle street, the Bank of England. His plan for a national bank was submitted to the government in 1691, but it was not six three years later that the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Montagu, and Mr. Michael Godfrey, one of the richest merchants in London, put the scheme into operation. At this time England was at war with France, and Godfrey, who was the bank's first deputy governor, left his peaceful occupation to "fill Namur" then being vigorously besieged by the English forces under William III. Godfrey had undertaken this perilous journey in order to consult the king respecting the supply of money to the army necessary to carry on the war. Thinking that the safest place would naturally be somewhere near his majesty, Michael ventured into the trenches and soon caught the eye of the king.

"Mr. Godfrey," said William grave, ly, "I fear you might not like to run this risk. You are a civilian and can be of no use here."

"True," courteously replied Mr. Godfrey, "but I am no more exposed than your majesty."

"Yet," returned the king, "I am in my duty, and therefore have a more reasonable claim to preservation."

At this moment a cannon ball, fired from the ramparts, struck Michael Godfrey and killed him instantly.

This sad event greatly affected William, and he commanded the body to be taken to Hampton Court, where it was laid to rest in St. Swithin's church near the Bank of England. In the church records Godfrey's memory is honored thus:

He died a bachelor, much lamented by all his friends, relations and acquaintances for his integrity, his knowledge and the sweetness of his manners.—Florence Wendy.

The Eastern Star supper at the Masonic Temple banquet hall last Friday was a pronounced success, not only as a feast, but socially.

All the chicken pie you can eat for 25c at the Methodist church Wednesday, Nov. 11th. Supper served from 5:30 to 7:30. Room for all.

The Charlevoix Fire Department will give a dance at the Bank Hall, on Thanksgiving Eve, November 26th. Everyone that can should attend.

Geo. W. Priest and wife left last Thursday on a business and pleasure trip to Grand Rapids, Detroit and Chicago. They are expected back the last of this week.

A letter from Archie Miller, residing in Los Angeles, Calif., states that they have bought a home there. Archie is a professional nurse and masseur, and is doing well.

Mrs. Geo. Haas, and daughters, of Detroit Harbor, Wis., arrived here Saturday for the winter, and have started light house-keeping at 215 Mason Street.

Monday morning ground was broken for the enlargement of the Beach Hotel, as outlined in a previous issue of this paper. It is hoped to have the extension enclosed this fall.

Following the big K. P. hunt a game feast was spread in their hall last Thursday night, at which 125 pounds of game—rabbits and partridge—were consumed. There were 72 at the banquet tables.

There is very satisfactory activity in the building industry in Charlevoix. All our carpenters are busy, and work of contract or enlargement is going on in about every part of the city. The fine cottage erected by Mrs. Crouter on Michigan avenue is about completed.

Charlevoix had a bad scare last Friday noon when the fire department was called out to what, from the volume of smoke, appeared to be a disastrous fire. It was at the residence of S. Orlowski and it proved to be but a chimney burn out. It was a double-flue chimney, and the owner had paid for having it cleaned but the "sweep" had cleaned but one flue.

The fishing tug Parmelee, which went out Monday to lift nets, broke her crank shaft about twelve miles out. She raised a distress flag which was recognized by the look-out at the life saving station, and the crew, with the big motor life boat went out and towed her in. There was very little sea, which made it a lucky feature of the accident.

Dr. Levi Lewis was the victim of a runaway Monday afternoon, which resulted in a narrow escape. When driving down from the Dixon avenue corner an automobile frightened the horse and he started out for the bridge at a swift run. The doctor succeeded in reining him into the bank near the Lumber Company's factory, but, coming in contact with the curb broke a wheel and the Doctor was thrown out. While badly bruised, no bones were broken.

Mrs. Geo. Kelderhouse, of 104 Palmer avenue, entertained a goodly party of her neighbors and friends on Halloween eve., at her pleasant home down at Capt. Partridge's colony. A delicious pot-luck supper was served, with coffee. Games occupied the evening, the prize winners being Mrs. Geo. Haas, Mrs. Nels Palmer and Mrs. J. Durasoe. The rooms were very tastefully decorated, while the porch was illuminated with jack-o-lanterns. As one of the party has testified, "it was a jolly good time".

THANKSGIVING

President Wilson issued a proclamation designating November 26th, as Thanksgiving Day. The proclamation dwelt upon the peaceful situation in America, while much of the rest of the world is at war.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

A regular meeting of the Charlevoix Historical Society will occur on Friday evening, November 6th, with Mrs. Emma Bennett, Michigan Ave. The paper of the evening will be by Rev. C. E. Taggart, "The Immigrant in His Native Habitat."

Mr. Frank Metcalf will furnish some records upon the graphophone.

GIANT CENTIPEDES.

A Fact Long and Armed With Forty Odd Pairs of Lean Claws.

Centipedes have nowhere a good reputation. Some of them in the tropics are terrible creatures indeed. The giant centipede of Trinidad and Venezuela is sometimes a foot long and can do very serious harm. Its forceps, pair of feet are modified into suprlementary jaws, which are fragile and only inflict a powerful bite. Furthermore, each has a poison gland at its base that ooze into the wound a venom deadly to small creatures and very painful even to mankind.

Moreover, the sharp claw of each of the forty-one feet is poisonous likewise, so that when the animal crawls over the soft skin of the human arm it leaves a trail of red inflamed spots. It is dangerous to knock the centipede off, for instantly the creature drives its claws more deeply into the flesh and sends a greater amount of venom into each puncture. It may also take hold with its jaws.

When the centipede seizes its prey or is itself caught by an enemy it coils itself around its antagonist and grips it tenaciously with all its legs. It therefore a very unlucky object to tackle. In this connection it is interesting to note that many myriapods are brightly banded with black and yellow, resembling the tints that show conspicuously against the dark soil of the forests where they abound. The giant centipede is a shining mahogany brown with the two bands and legs tipped with yellow.

A singular fact about centipedes (which, in spite of the name, rarely have more than forty-one) is that they always consist of an odd number, and are variably odd and may vary in number even in specimens that belong to the same species. All are carnivorous. The smaller kinds live on worms and the larger on any living creatures they can overcome. They are there fore of service in destroying many noxious insects. Captive specimens have occasionally curled in their heads and go through amazing contortions, but their bite seldom or never kills the object of its bodily with their jaw feet, which are furnished with a set of hairs intended for this purpose.—Youth's Companion.

Maltese Muskrats.

One of the most objectionable of the pests that intrude into houses in Malta is the muskrat. Everything he touches is impregnated with the odor from which he derives his name. In a winter he is worse than a dishonest lodger. In a lodger he is more destructive than a dozen cats. From pure wantonness he taints and renders uneatable everything within his reach. His odor is so powerful and at the same time so penetrating that dozens of bottles of preserves may be ruined by his merely running over the bottles. The musk-rat is a squeaking little animal who commits his enormities at night, and he adds insult to injury by disturbing the repose of the victims of his depredations.—London Standard.

Why She Prized It.

At a white elephant sale numbered lady won a consolation prize which proved to be a small dressed doll in nun's attire. Unwrapping the toy, the donor discovered that the head had been bronzed off.

"Never mind!" exclaimed the resolute girl, good naturedly. "I will prize it all the more on that account. It's the first nun she ever had, and I'll bet she's one to all my life."

Northern Michigan

A new industry is being developed in western Michigan. It is that of raising foxes. Already two fox farms for this purpose have been started, and the outlook is encouraging. One of these farms is at Bear Lake and the other is at Traverse City. At both places there are a number of animals and in the spring there will be a much larger number. The western Michigan climate is such as to be especially favorable to the fox and it is thought that in a year or two the western Michigan fox farms can be made to rival those of Prince Edward Island, these being the most famous in the world.

Traverse City Record:—L. H. Neilson of Cadillac, district engineer of the state highway department, was in the city this morning on his way to visit points in Leelanau county in the interests of his department. He stated that the work of building of good roads and the raising of funds for the same goes steadily on in all parts of the western section of the state. Grand Traverse county raises a mill and a half which amounts to $18,000 without the three townships of Whitewater, Grant and Peninsula that are not under the county road system. Charlevoix county will raise three mills or $4,000. Emmet county will raise two mills amounting to $3,000, which includes $2,000 raised specially. Cheboygan county raises two mills and this county bonds for $75,000 for building trunk lines. Wexford county will raise one mill and beside this the citizens of Cadillac subscribe $700 a mile for every one mile on the main lines. Missaukee county will raise three mills amounting to $18,000. Many of the townships in Antrim, Benzie and Leelanau are building and repairing roads.

According to the news from St. Ignace, two well known men have returned from a two weeks trip through the hunting and trapping districts of Baraga and Marquette counties. The men made the trip for the purpose of locating camping grounds. They explored the country around the Pesbinco river, the Yellow Dog, the Salmon Trout, the Big Huron and the west branch of the Big Huron. They found wolves plentiful, especially in the territory between the Pesbinco and the Yellow Dog and deer very scarce. During their travels through the large area they saw but one deer, where formerly they would have seen twenty-five or thirty. Partridge are plentiful and so are beaver. All indications point to a trap and an open winter. The beavers have not yet laid up their winter supplies. Beaver live largely on the twigs of maple, birch and poplar trees, which are piled in the water near the houses and, being immersed, remain green and furnish the animals with food during the winter season.

Boyne Citizen:—Monday morning the following notice was handed each one of the teachers in the public schools of the city, and was transmitted to the pupils: Beginning this noon all schools will close until Monday morning, November 16th. All books must be left in school and there must be no parties. Pupils must remain on their own premises or yards until the above date. Although there will be an additional police force employed to enforce the above rules, it is hoped and expected that all of our boys and girls from kindergarten to high school will do their utmost in endeavoring to strictly observe the law and in assisting that others do the same. At the joint meeting of the school board and health officers Saturday evening it was thought advisable to keep the schools open and provision was made for the inspection of each scholar. Dr. MacGregor was appointed for the central building and Dr. Boylan for the wards. It was thought in this way that a close account could be kept, but four cases were discovered the first day of inspection and it was learned that it would be impossible for an inspection to be made each day. Considering the number of cases it was determined inadvisable to allow the schools to run without close medical attention and they were consequently ordered closed. The theatres will also remain closed during the epidemic and a strict watch kept over the quarantined houses, special officers being employed for this duty. No public gatherings will be permitted for the present. Many of the teachers will go to their homes during the enforced idleness but will not be allowed to leave the city until Saturday morning. This step was taken to prevent the spreading of the disease to other localities, where the teachers may go and later come down with diphtheria.

MILLER BROS. LOST BOAT

Have Harrowing Experience With the Wind and Waves Monday Afternoon and Night in Fish Tug

All Tuesday forenoon and part of the afternoon, says the Daily News, Petoskey people were worried and anxious over the report of the loss of Harry and Robert Miller, two well known men who have been conducting the fishing business of Miller Brothers, the late Capt. Albert Miller. The men left Petoskey Monday afternoon in their new boat, "Twill-Do," with a heavy load of nets for the shoals off Nine Mile point, intending to set their nets, as the fall fishing season opened Sunday. They had made one successful trip out Monday morning and their nets had seemed to be working nicely. They should have been back in port by 5 o'clock but when night fell and when they failed to return their mother and Harry Miller's family became greatly worried. Watch was kept until mid-night and at that time they decided to send out a launch to search for them. A strong west wind had sprung up by that time and A. G. Cook found the weather too rough for his launch, Iola.

Early Tuesday morning the life saving crew at Charlevoix were called and they were over in their large gasoline sea life boat but found no trace of the missing men or tug. About 7 o'clock the welcome news was received from Harbor Springs that the two men had got safely ashore at Seven Mile point and had walked to Harbor Springs. Their boat became crippled in the sea and drifted about for several hours before being washed on the beach. The men plodded home as soon as they reached the village and returned to Petoskey on the afternoon train. Their boat is reported to be fast aground in about a foot of water and is likely to be badly wrecked if the high wind continues.

For many hours Tuesday Petoskey residents seemed to think that a second fatal disaster to her fishermen was to be, but luckily this was not the case. The Charlevoix life saving crew reported while in port having towed in the fish tug Parmelee, of Charlevoix, which had arrived with a broken crankshaft ten miles off Charlevoix Monday on her first trip with fish for this season. Several other smaller boats were also badly battered up Monday and Tuesday.

BIG TONNAGE LAKE TROUT

Fishermen Say Biggest Fall Fishing on Record. Large Tonnage But Low Prices.

Big fat lake trout are very much in evidence. The option is generally expressed by those who know that the catch is far ahead of that of last fall. There are being shipped to Chicago and other points by the carload, and thousands are being shipped by the crews of men-being kept busy long hours in receiving, dressing, freezing and salting these with the aid of extra gangs of fresh stock, and prices are low.

Big tugs, small tugs and gasoline boats tie up, load and unload their turn to unload at the warehouse docks. On Friday the steamer Beaver came in from the Island with nineteen tons. On Tuesday last the Lake Superior Fish Co's tug, Arthur, came in with four and one half tons, and on Friday she unloaded four tons. The tug E. M. B. A. brought in 6700 pounds. Daily receipts on Friday were about thirty tons, and Beaver's twenty tons.

One fact is clearly demonstrated, and that is that the government propagation of fish is a profitable investment. The big catches are from the grounds where fry has been planted by the fish commission.

IMPORTANT REAL ESTATE DEAL

On Monday Fred H. Myers bought the property he now occupies of Capt. O. F. Wilber.

The property has a history. It was originally the headquarters of the A. Rice & Co., and later of Fox, Rice & Buttars, and was built in 1868. It was really the first store erected in Charlevoix, as only predecessor being a country building that stood on the bluff at the foot of what is now River street.

THE DEER SLAYERS

Within the last few days the following local Nimrods have gone to the northern peninsula for the annual deer hunt: George Stanford, Hubert Avery, J. A. Hamilton, J. H. Hoffman, Bert Libsey, Thos. Shepard, Jap Worden, Chas. E. Sea and Richard Lewis.

All but the last two named went on the Arbutus to Hessel—Sue and Lewis going by rail. Probably others will have gone by river and nine for the north later.

POLITICAL REVIEW

Results, Far and Near, Cast a Shadow On the Democratic Horizon—Vote Bull Moose

The re-election of Governor Ferris was not a surprise to the political student, but the size of his majority—36,000—was rather stupefying. Several conditions contributed to this result. The pedagogy-student element cast politics aside to honor a distinguished educator. The governor's correct attitude in the Calumet strike was a cream of many votes across party lines in his favor. The clean personal character and conscientious application to duty, as he saw it, outweighed matters of public policy. The defeat of Osborn cannot be termed a calamity, yet it just cause for regret with those who know the man and his record, and recognize his superior mental attainments and unimpeachable character. Not only was he confronted with the conditions mentioned above, but was weakened with a certain circle of hard shells who would not forget his Bull Moose spasm of two years ago. Then again, he is a man of convictions, and he is never backward in giving them expression. His attitude on the judicial recall alienated many republicans. But the fact remains that Chase S. Osborn is one of the great men of the country, clean, honest, but uncompromising.

The election of the remainder of the republican ticket by majorities averaging greater than that of Ferris proves that Michigan is safely republican under normal conditions. The legislature is overwhelmingly republican.

The results throughout the country are prophetic. The election of the republican ticket in New York; notable republican gains in other states; the election of Cannon to congress in Illinois; the reduction of the democratic majority in the National house of representatives from 140 to 24, and the practical annihilation of Bull Moosism, constitutes a warning to Belchazar, and foreceats the return of the republican party to power in 1916. The election of Scott in this congressional district by nearly 10,000 majority shows that Northern Michigan is prepared to contribute its share in bringing about this much desired result.

The victory in Charlevoix county is especially gratifying. Clark, the opponent of Mr. MacMillan, for representative, received but 168 votes out of approximately 2,000, notwithstanding the effort that was made to inject the wet and dry issue into the contest. Clark failed even to carry his own township. This venomous crusade against MacMillan and other candidates on the republican ticket broke on good to the local option cause should it come up again while memory is active. As a proven friend of local option this paper wishes here to emphasize what it has often before said, that the knifing of republican candidates by professing republicans on this issue is suicidal to the cause, which is a righteous cause and safe one in Charlevoix county so long as there is a conservative element which opposes issues but which considers that there are vital co-ordinate issues involved in party policies. It is but a step over the border for those who are firmly rooted in party fealty.

Charlevoix county is a republican bailiwick of the rock-ribbed sort.

Antrim county, just over the line, gave both bull moose and democrat a good stiff punch.

HAZLE PEARL

Hazle Pearl and Clare Thorsen are visitors this week.

Cleo Thorne was absent last Friday on account of illness.

Lillian Akins and Ward Gunett are housekeeping this week.

Bessie Allen was absent Thursday forenoon of last week.

Miss Heice Parsons and Miss Ruth Mitchell visited the normal last Thursday afternoon.

Miss Dripgert and Mr. Gonett had charge of the training room last Monday morning on account of Miss Waiting's illness.

The class attended chapel in the high school last Friday morning. A talk was given on "The Single Land Tax," by Dr. Frank Wilkinson. A violin and piano duet was given by King and Margaret Saunders.

The class attended the annual School Officers' meeting at the court house Monday of last week. Deputy State Superintendent Munson had charge of the meeting, and gave some very valuable points in connection with school law.

Miss Himes gave us a very interesting talk on the "Moonlight Schools" of Kentucky. These schools have made very much progress in Kentucky and have wiped out the illiteracy of a large part of the population. Michigan would profit by the establishment of Moonlight Schools.

JUST CASUAL OBSERVATIONS

There are heathen enough in remote regions; don't be an American heathen. The writer of this is no saint—in fact he confesses to being something of a heathen himself, like most country journalists. As a matter of choice he would mount his craft under the lee of the Rock of Ages rather than on the stormy lee shore of agnosticism. Doctrinal controversy to the dogs, the church and the Sunday School are the influences that refine the natures of mankind. The church and Sunday School are powerful civilizing factors. Don't be a heathen.

There are men in all walks of life who are called "cranks." Tours are religious cranks, political cranks, temperance cranks and good road cranks. We have sometimes found yourself believing that they are all not unlike the salt and spice of human dirt. Time was when Geo. Van Pelt was called a crank, when the fact is, Van has done more to redeem Otsego and action in the matter of better highways than any other man in this section. Call it unobstetic vision or what you will, the movement has developed fully up to Van Pelt's forecasts. And now George has set stakes far afield for longer strides. Years ago we scoffed; there are scoffers now. Promoters and philanthropists have all passed through the grind of public criticism.

The work now in progress on the new concrete and steel approach to the bridge serves to recall pioneer days. The old timers in taken back to 1869 when the first "drawbridge" spanned the river. It was a wooden affair, with two jagged sections that were laboriously raised and placed where there is liability of largest boat that went through then was the "Berty Mae," a three-masted clinker sail boat about thirty feet long. then, some years after, came the iron bridge that is now in use at East Jordan, of which we were all very proud. For some years after the present fine bridge was erected it was operated by hand, but now—well, it is a far cry from the wood-sawyer to Elmer Johnson's engine-house, up aloft.

We observe, fourthly, that the japs of years has transformed political boundaries. We remember when the writer went to Mackinac Island with the late Major Green in the interest of the latter's candidacy for representative in the legislature. The district then embraced the territory between the straits and the southern boundary of Grand Traverse county. Now Mr. MacMillan represents Charlevoix county alone, and the job is no sinecure. From Indian trails to macadam roads represents what Harry Lander would call a "considerable period."

MICHIGAN PATROL BOAT BURNS: LOSS IS $5,000

The gasoline boat Michigan Patrol No. 4., in charge of Deputy Game Warden Smith, caught fire at Harbor Springs Friday afternoon. The flames were extinguished by the city fire department after doing about $5,000 damage. The boat was lying at the dock with no one on board at the time.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE ELEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

I am modestly proud of your emphatic selection of me as the first Congressman from the new Eleventh District. I only wish that I might thank you in person for your gracious manifestation of confidence and esteem. During my incumbency I hope you will feel the same nearness and proximity to me that you had on election day. I want you to believe my constant realization that you are the employer and I the employee. I am appealing for your criticisms and suggestions; they will be positive proof of your sincere interest and a potent help in the administration of your business.

Very sincerely,
FRANK D. SCOTT.

PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES

Should Be Taken in View of Close Proximity of Diphtheria Epidemic

There is no diphtheria in Charlevoix, but, in view of close proximity, and the fact that epidemics are raging all over the state, in spots We publish the following timely advice concerning its prevention and treatment:

"Do not let a child go near a case of diphtheria.—This is especially important to be observed. Children are in much greater danger of death from diphtheria than are adults; but adult persons often get and spread the disease, and sometimes die from it. Mild cases in adults may cause fatal cases among children. Unless your services are needed, keep away from the disease yourself. If you do visit a case, bathe yourself and change and disinfect your clothing; hair and hands, before you go where there is a child. Do not permit any person or thing, or a dog, cat or other animal to come from a case of diphtheria to a child. No dog or cat should be permitted to enter the sick room.

"Do not permit a child to wear or handle clothing worn by a person during sickness or convalescence from diphtheria.

"Beware of any person who has a sore throat.—Do not kiss or come near to such a person. Do not drink from the same cup, blow the same whistle or put his pencil or pen in your mouth.

"Individual drinking cups should be used.—A common drinking cup should not be used, especially in school rooms and places where there is liability of infection. Diphtheria bacilli has been found on cups in actual common use in schools. A fountain cup would be less liable to spread disease, because the water continually overflows the sides and ends to wash away the infection which might otherwise collect on the edges of the cup.

"Children who have been exposed to diphtheria or who are in the same house with one sick with diphtheria may leave the house and come out of quarantine, providing cultures made from the throat are negative. If no cultures are made they must remain isolated from the public and the patient until the incubation period has passed. For public safety this should last two weeks.

"The use of diphtheria antitoxin has reduced the mortality in this disease from approximately 50 percent to about 15 percent. Antitoxin destroys the poison given off by the germs causing the disease so that the amount of antitoxin given makes little difference as long as one gives enough to destroy the poison. Repeated doses in man are practically harmless and should be given whenever there is any indication of it. Diphtheria antitoxin does not cause paralysis or affect the heart. The poison of diphtheria itself causes paralysis and heart trouble. The antitoxin by combining with these poisons lessens the liability to these complications. Thus antitoxin cures those who are sick and protects those who have been exposed to the disease.

"Where diphtheria is present in a community, a child or a young person, having a sore throat or a bad odor to its breath, and especially if it has fever, should immediately be kept separated from all other persons, except necessary attendants, until it can be determined whether or not it has diphtheria or some other communicable disease.

"Persons who are attending upon children or other persons suffering from diphtheria, and also the members of the patient's family, should not mingle with other people nor permit the entrance of children into their house.—Public Health

Who Banks Your Earnings!
Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it. This is hardly fair to you, is it? If you put your money in a bank it will repay the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.
Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business, whom you are prone to envy, thinking they have a phenomenal luck. Almost without exception, they began with no capital but a strong will and an inflexible purpose.
For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.00 a week. In his years he had passed through every department of his own. MORAL—Bank your own money.

TEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL KNOWS EIGHT TONGUES

By ROBERT H. MOULTON

WINFRED BACKVILLE-STONER, JR., AT 10 YEARS OLD.

WINFRED AND HIS BULLDOG.

AMAZING have been the intellectual strides of Winfred Backville-Stoner, Jr., a ten-year-old Pittsburgh girl, that investigators persuaded the mother and father, Mrs. Winifred Backville-Stoner, to retire the whole story of the child's education in a book.

The unusual little girl is already well prepared for college. In addition to studying entomology and some other branches, she speaks eight languages; she can recite a thousand poems and she has written nearly fifty Biblical poems and hymns.

Winifred plays the piano well. With no lessons except its owner "making up stories on the piano," she can read over a page of Schubert's "Serenade," close the book and play it accurately and with much expression. She can also hear a difficult selection played and so learn it by concentration alone. Winifred draws well and paints admirably.

Throughout her whole life, Mrs. Stoner has been the guardian of her daughter's health. From infancy she has given her her meals, saw that she had her rest and her mother would "be somebody" and often each child would "be herself" and an after each. Yet, in Mrs. Stoner would play one minute that she was herself and the next minute that she was her dear friend Nellie and Winifred would alternate between being herself and her friend Nellie. In this way they often could get up rather a whole party when about to make some new exploration into the realm of knowledge.

Perhaps nothing is more illuminative in Mrs. Stoner's book than her account of how she taught the child multiplication. At a counsaugus meeting in New York, however, the mother met Prof. A. B. Hornblower, a woman mathematics teacher, who soon put her on the right track.

Professor Hornblower, after the two women had been successful in teaching music, art, poetry, history and languages because she herself loved those studies and had failed to teach mathematics because she had not brought the "fairy interest" into the study, set to work to devise a method for it. She volunteered to send a set of tables to which Mrs. Stoner set to employ according to her own ideas.

Mother and child then began playing games with small objects, such as beans and buttons. These objects would be placed in a box and then would take turns drawing them out, to see which could get the most at a single grab. When helping the maid shell peas they would see how many pods or peas there were in two or more pods. In this way multiplication was made a game and not a task.

Throughout all this preliminary instruction, Winifred was encouraged to take all the outdoor exercise she could and she took to it like a duck to water. She was in the neighborhood at wrestling, "a thousand times" defeating a ball.

From that time, Winifred's life became a prolonged play of the game she had prepared. Her mother would tell her that she would "be somebody" and often each child would "be herself" and an after each. Yet, in Mrs. Stoner would play one minute that she was herself and the next minute that she was her dear friend Nellie and Winifred would alternate between being herself and her friend Nellie. In this way they often could get up rather a whole party when about to make some new exploration into the realm of knowledge.

Perhaps nothing is more illuminative in Mrs. Stoner's book than her account of how she taught the multiplication table. At a counsaugus meeting in New York, however, she met Prof. A. B. Hornblower, a woman mathematics teacher, who soon put her on the right track.

Professor Hornblower, after the two women had been successful in teaching music, art, poetry, history and languages because she herself loved those studies and had failed to teach mathematics because she had not brought the "fairy interest" into the study, set to work to devise a method for it. She volunteered to send a set of tables to which Mrs. Stoner set to employ according to her own ideas.

When helping the maid shell peas they would see how many pods or peas there were in two or more pods. In this way multiplication was made a game and not a task.

To make greater progress they played parlcesi with small dice and not practice from adding up the spots. First they used two dice, but finally they used five and Winifred was soon able to add up the spots in a moment. Sometimes the child played all sorts of games which would require simple addition and multiplication. Sometimes they played a game with battles with tin soldiers and marbles, and whenever a "cannon shot" would topple over a given number of soldiers, Winifred was able to decide how many were left standing without counting to count.

Cancellation became a battle, one of them plays the numbers on one side of the dividing line and the other plays the other. There never were any quitters, because Winifred was taught to be a sensible and was not bright rules. She learned the values of money by the actual use of coins and the values of market produce by going to market. She learned the measures, weights and measures. Winifred played at keeping a dry store, and kept the store in order and so it went through the whole subject, until at last the girl now became equal with the floor doings of Mr. X and got interested in algebra.

Winifred never suffered the humiliation of physical punishment. Mrs. Stoner said: "Bad Mary Thanna would hide goodies under her pillow and when she was bad she would take the fairy from her. If she was ten minutes tardy about some task, that meant ten minutes less time she had to take out of her play and recreation time. She soon learned that offenses could bring about their own unpleasant consequences. The good behavior meant tangible reward. She was never permitted to stay at a single task when her good or bad behavior had created.

A striking instance of Mrs. Stoner's methods, as well as an illustration of the child's intellectual bias is the story of Winifred and the bumblebee. In her zest to study the insect at first hand, she picked one up. The natural consequences followed. While she was not stung, Winifred described her sufferings in these lines:

One day I saw a bumblebee, bumbling on a rose,
And as I stood admiring him he stung me on the nose.
My nose its nafin it swelled so large it looked like a potato,
So daddy said: but mother thought 'twas more like a tomato.
And now, dear children, this advice I hope you'll take from me,
And when you see a bumblebee just let that bumble be.

Like her mother, Winifred believes in woman suffrage. She has written several poems in behalf of equal franchise rights, which have been published in various newspapers and magazines. Her "Valentines for Suffragettes are decidedly clever and have helped the cause.

Bug Pin Money.

Some of the large dress manufacturers in New York City have shown interest in considerable amount of draping music be done, and that their little fire fearing the child's mind might be lopsided. At a counsaugus meeting in New York, however, the mother met Prof. A. B. Hornblower, a woman mathematics teacher, who soon put her on the right track.

Japan in Korea.

Japan has undertaken to refoest the bare hills of Korea, and in the last five years has planted 1,500,000 trees in that country.

Take a piece of tar-painted common sense, which is bound to benefit the Korean people, even though not a piece of the tar-paper is used. Korea can feels like approving the way in which Japan overrode the rights of a weaker power and annexed Korea, but every candid observer must admit that the interest men have carried with them better government and a higher civilization.—Journal.

IN OLD-TIME LONDON

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

City Was a Remarkable Mixture of Wealth and Poverty—Police Protection Solely a Matter of Individual Concern.

The scenes in Lady Betty Martingale, or The Adventures of a Lively Woman," the sequel of life in London in 1750. That city then offered most remarkable contrasts of wealth and poverty, of learning and ignorance and of light-hearted gaiety and abject despair. While the men and women of fashion were regaling themselves merrily at Vauxhall Gardens, the Turks Head or one or another of the many places of amusement of the character in London, the poor city lay sore with very enduring hardships of poverty and deprivation such as probably have not been known since in London even when. Wide-hoped was at times, it was an uncommon thing for revelers returning home at day break to see women bearing dead children to fields outside of the city to be buried in unconsecrated ground in order to save parish charges for interment. Streets at night were filled with drunkards and bullies, ballad singers and pickpockets, clerks and salesmen "on the randan"—which, in the phrase of the day, was a very exaggerated spree—revelers who took home with them housebreakers, and who when not properly fed by household fire had recourse to "cutting a hook wrongly. The streets were indlighted by means of oil street lamps and lamps in front of houses. In the year 1736 there were only 1,200 of these lamps in the city of London. Persons of quality, who were out after dark, usually were accompanied by torch-bearers, and after respectable people had gone home torch-bearers increased their incomes tremendously by escorting fabulous gentlemen of high honor, supposed to be the way to rob the convivial persons.

Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, the eminent novelist and divine, said in New York one brink October day:

"This is the scrapple season, the scrapple season par excellence. It is, in deed, only in Philadelphia that one can really enjoy scrapple. Philadelphia is the home of scrapple and therefore the delectable dish is suspect."

Dr. Brady laughed.

"For the perfect enjoyment of love, he said, "one must be sure of one's confidence—and this is also true of scrapple.

STRATEGY AT DINNER TABLE

Brilliant Piece of Headwork Proved Steak Portion Fit for Hungry Brothers.

"War," said Major Jamison, "is like the steak and potatoes pie."

"The steak and potato pie is proved a mistaken lady.

"War," said Major Jamison, "goes for awhile all in one party's favor; then comes a sneaky or brilliant piece of headwork and the tables are turned.

"Thus, I repeat, war resembles the steak and potato pie which furnished the Sunday dinner of two brother boarders in Texas.

"The two brothers, Tom and Sam, boarded with a steadfast couple who made their steak and potato pie with all the steak on one side of the table and the potatoes all on the other side. This couple said, of course, on the steak side of the table the brothers set on this potato side; and so it came about that every Sunday the meats got all the meat, while the guests got the potatoes only.

"At last Tom said to Sam one Sunday Monday:

"'Look here, Sam, no matter what I say to you at dinner today, don't take offense, will you.

"'No, Tom, of course not.'

"Well, dinner time came; the pie, steaming hot, was set in the middle of the table, the wily host and hostess took their places on the steak side, and the hungry boarders fell as usual into chairs opposite the potatoes.

"But then, just as the boarding mistress was about to serve carving knife and fork into the deep crust, Tom struck the table a thundering blow with his fist, cried tremulously at Sam, and roared:

"'Look here, Sam, if ever you dare speak to me as you did the other morning while I was talkin' to a young lady, I'll give your head round by ears, the same as I'm screwin' round this blasted pie.'

HATRED THAT WAR BREEDS

Remarkable Change in Pleasant Relations Caused by Hostilities Between Nations.

Hate and war must go hand in hand. You cannot go out and shoot your neighbor to death unless you first hated him. If circumstances should force you to shoot a man, you would speedily, by a sort of self-hypnosis, work yourself into a state of mind where you honestly believed that killing was entirely too good for him. This is just what the nations in Europe have done, writes Martin Marshall to Leslie's. We read now that the Germans have despised the Russian in the past and now he returns the have for 44 years longed for revenge on the Germans; of now longing for hatred the Italian has for the hatred of fear, and of mutual antagonisms between Teuton and Serb. These sentiments were partly official and conventional, but mostly imaginary. The people got along pretty well together. Frenchmen did business in Berlin and Germans were holidaying in Paris. London's restaurants were largely manned by French staffs and Russian peasants helped to reap the harvests in Prussia. Educated men in each of the nations prided themselves on their familiarity with the languages of the others, and evinced a keen interest in art and music.

Then came war, and all was changed. Some millions of men were going to slaughter each other, and they had to evoke the hatreds that they ought to do it. The printing presses go to work and organize street demonstrations, trade boycotts and imprisonment of inoffensive aliens. Then Wagner's music was tabooed in Russia and Prince Bernhardi's name in Paris. The name changed to clear-ex it from the vocabulary. Frankfurters remained, but the table sauce disappeared from Berlin restaurants. Paris styles were no longer "on the randan"—which, poured Munich beer into the gutters; a Paris "Gaiety" was turned into a public grist center for the best substitute name for Rue de Colenco—the Rue de Malmaison. Russian peasants, instead of silly, sentimental hysteria preliminary to shooting or cheered notes the commandants, peaceful villages, the killing of women and children, are eloquent of reprisals; that always occur in war, and always shock the victims and the neutrals.

Money and Matrimony.

In the American Magazine a man who has had twenty-five years matrimony experience writes "A Husband's Story," in which he tells about the part that money plays in marriage. Following is an extract:

"I have heard many persons say, with serious zeal, that money does not bring happiness. Yet as I study my married life I cannot recall even one current or disagreement or misunderstanding that could not be traced directly to money matters."

"I don't want no rubbish, no fine sentiments, if you please," said the widow when she was asked what kind of an epitaph she desired for her late husband's tombstone. "Let it be short and simple—something like this:

A beauty lunch had gone almost around over the story of the fisherman who, to "beat the place on the lake where he had good luck, cut a stick in the side of his boat. "Almost around," for the Englishman sat solemn and silent. About five minutes later, however, he awoke with a roar of laughter, and when asked the trouble, replied: "Well, wouldn't it be a darking good joke if that fisherman got a different boat the next time he went out?"

Month of March.

March was called by the ancient Saxons the lenet month (Lenth month), because in this month folks began to observe notice how the sun (one orbit and high noon with 50). It is a blustering, windy month and was named in honor of Mars, the god of war, the strong, resistless winds that sweep over the fields and dry the ground, and thus it is a month for planting and sowing.

Many of our little neighbors of the woods, birds and rabbits, come out in search of the tender green delicacies which March kindly bestows on them.

The days of the zodiac for March is Aries, the lambs, as the spring thought of the sun as having horns of light and lead, the twin babes of the Rain symbolize the increasing power of the sun's rays in this month.

This month welcome warmth melts away the last patches of soft snow from the bosom of the fields and places shaded by trees or rocks.

MEN AT FRONT TELL THEIR TALES

Extracts From the Diary of a Petty German Officer.

BRAVE FEAT OF AN AUSTRIAN

Germans See and Follow Movements of the French Red Breeches—Officer Kicks Forward Some Who Refuse to Join the Charge—Many Were Mowed Down by Fire.

Berlin.—From the diary of a German petty officer who is fighting in France these extracts, at his own experience, are made:

"On all sides and in front, as well as below in the valley, the red breeches can be seen swarming in the under brush. Thus both divisions of our fourth company had themselves fooled apparently overwhelmingly superior forces. I myself make a run to where the captain should be. On the way a trumpeter transmits this order to me: 'Third column deploy and continue fire.'

BRITISH BRASHBOMBERS KICKING OFF SPARKS OF UNCONSCIOUSNESS GERMANS.

"I shout, 'Forward, forward, double quick! Follow me!' I cried. Out comes the shining steel from its sheath. I catch a glimpse of an opening in a garden wall. Thus way through. (Accept the hedge! Cut loopholes.'

"'What ranges? The men call.

"'Range 700! Half right, straight ahead in the poplars, hostile infantry man! Range 700! Fire!'

"Just as we opened fire the enemy comes charging from out the poplars. Only a few step they can, and then, as if thunderstricken, the whole line of red breeches sinks to the earth. Our aim was good. Here goes the fifth shrapnel shell! But soon the hellish rocket begins again. In front of us a second line of Germans is lying. Whizzing and whirring, the bullets fly about us.

"Through an opening the men swarm through to the left. The bravest harry us in advance, we are driven back till their leader roughly grabs them and kicks them through the hedge opening. There must have been 800 cities or more. A withering fire tells us that the enemy has discovered our movements. But we return his fire as we run. Many men of our company fall, but, lo! Presently the enemy's fire begins to slacken and finally it is almost completely. There! What is that in the midst of the enemy's ranks? In the midst of the enemy's ranks thunder! Our artillery!

"Shall after shell, bursts, itself, as if measured with extraordinary precision, a very rain of lead of the French infantry lines. We follow this up with our own fast rifle fire.

"Now we charge forward to where we can plainly see their foes. Lo! Some of the enemy's ranks are coming! Our fellows mow them down."

From the enemy's ranks comes this:

Early one morning an Austrian armoured train arrived at a little town with a brand new armored car in which was a dozen machine guns ready to fire. The man running the locomotive had just brought the train into the station, when from a street close by his engine was suddenly fired on. Quickly the engine driver climbed back over the coal car of the armored car, exchanged a few words with the officer in command there and returned to his post in the engine.

Now he opened all the escape valves of the boiler, so that the steam completely enveloped his engine, though it did not move a wheel. A long, prolonged shrill whistle resounded.

The trick worked. The Russians, several hundred strong, ran toward the armored car, thinking their rifle shots had killed the engineer and rendered the locomotive helpless.

Then suddenly the command ran out from the armored car, "Fire!" and twelve machine guns poured a leaden hail on the Russian host, most of whom were shot down in their tracks.

Thousands of people keep coughing because nothing else can be right. Coughs are caused by inflammation of the throat and bronchi Tubes. What you need is to soothe this inflammation.

Now Dandelion, Honey and Tar combine this healing, relieves the delicate mucous lining, relieves the irritation and quickly stops the congested membranes. Get a bottle from your druggist. Sheppard's King's New Discovery quickly and completely stopped my cough—says J. R. Watts, Floydale, Texas. Money back if not satisfied, but it nearly always helps.

Council Proceedings

Council Chambers, November 9th, 1914.

Mayor Nicholls and President Pro-tempore Frisel being absent the Council proceeded to elect for this meeting an acting President Protempore of this Council.

Moved by Alderman See and seconded by Alderman Cartier that Alderman Barney act as chairman of this meeting. Motion carried.

Aldermen present, See, Cartier, Barney, Stanton and Carey.

Absent, Frisel.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Moved by Alderman See and seconded by Alderman Cartier that the following Resolution and Form of Bond for the $25,000.00 Refunding Bridge Bonds be adopted:

Moved by Alderman See and supported by Alderman Cartier, that

WHEREAS this Council by resolution adopted at a regular meeting held on Wednesday, October 28th, A. D., 1914, did, among other things, amend a part of the form of the Refunding Bridge Bonds so as to read "Resolutions of the Common Council of said City of Charlevoix duly passed at regular meetings of said Council held on Monday, August 17, A. D., 1914, and on Wednesday, October 28th, A. D., 1914," and it is desirable to shorten said form; and

WHEREAS the offer of Detroit Trust Company to purchase said bonds was on the basis that said bonds shou'l bear interest at the rate of five (5) per cent per annum, payable semi annually, instead of four and one-half (4½) per cent as heretofore provided by resolution of this Council.

THEREFORE be it resolved that the aforesaid amendment of a part of the form of said bonds be amended to read as follows: "Resolutions of the Common Council of said City of Charlevoix duly adopted," and

Be it further resolved that the rate of interest to be borne by said bonds be, and the same hereby is changed from four and one-half (4½) per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, to five (5) per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and that the form of said bonds and coupons be changed accordingly; and

Be it further resolved that all resolutions or parts of resolutions in conflict with the provisions of the foregoing resolutions, in so far as they conflict therewith, are hereby rescinded and repealed.

Ayes: Aldermen See, Cartier, Barney, Stanton and Carey.

Nayes: None.

Absent: Mayor Nicholls and Alderman Frisel.

REFUNDING BRIDGE BOND.

Know All Men By These Presents that the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, hereby acknowledges itself justly indebted and for value received, promises to pay to the bearer hereof the sum of lawful money of the United States of America on the first day of October, 1934, at the Detroit Trust Company, Detroit, Michigan, with interest thereon until paid at the rate of five per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the first day of April and of October of each and every year from the date hereof, at the Detroit Trust Company, Detroit, Michigan, upon the presentation and surrender of the proper interest coupons hereto attached as they severally become due, and for the prompt payment of the principal and interest of this bond and of the series of which it forms a part, the full faith, credit, and property of said City of Charlevoix are hereby irrevocably pledged.

This bond is one of a series of twenty-five (25) bonds of like date and tenor issued under, in pursuance of and in conformity with the provisions of Act No. 246 of the Local Act of the State of Michigan of 1909, entitled: "An act to incorporate the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan" and all amendatory acts thereof and supplemental thereto and was authorized by resolutions of the Common Council of said City of Charlevoix duly adopted, said series of twenty-five bonds, of which this is one, has been issued for the purpose of refunding Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) Refunding Bridge Bonds dated October 1st, A. D., 1894 and maturing October 1st, A. D., 1914.

The principal and interest of this bond and of the coupons hereto attached a part are payable out of the Interest and Sinking Fund of said City of Charlevoix, and said series of bonds are hereby declared to be tax exempt under and in accordance with the provisions of Act No. 88 of the Local Acts of Michigan of 1909.

It is hereby certified and recited that all acts, conditions and things required to be done precedent to and in the issuance of said series of bonds of which this is one, in order to make them valid and binding obligations of said City of Charlevoix, have happened and have been done and performed in regular and due form and time, as required by law, and that the total indebtedness of said City, including the series of bonds of which this is one, does not exceed any constitutional or statutory limitation.

In Witness Whereof the Mayor and Clerk of said City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, have, by the order and direction of the Common Council of said City of Charlevoix, officially hereunto subscribed their names of said City, affixed the corporate seal, thereof and executed this bond this first day of October, A. SILENCED THE DUKE.

Ludwig Barnay, the Actor, Put a Crimp In His Royal Critic.

The Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, who died a few eighteen years ago, will be remembered as an enthusiastic supporter of the drama. In this connection an amusing story was told by Ludwig Barnay, the actor, in his memoirs. Barnay was playing at Meiningen in the role of Hamlet. The performance had begun and trumpets were sounding in the king and prince for the second scene. The advance of the procession was checked by a loud "Halt!" from the stalls. It was the duke, who had entered unnoticed and proceeded to amend the performance.

"That's not the way to do it! Instead of a swive of trumpets you must play the Danish national anthem. And the king and prince shouldn't come on together they haven't met yet!"

"Nonsense!" murmured Barnay.

Unfortunately he was overheard.

"And, pray, why is it nonsense, M. Barnay?"

The actor explained that, according to the text, Hamlet and the king had already met outside.

"M. Grabowsky," called the duke to the producer, "continue as M. Barnay wishes. He is quite right. I never said acknowledging a mistake."

The piece proceeded. When the players' scene was reached and Barnay was reciting the actor's part, with "Aeneas' Tale to Dido," he spoke "the lines hesitatingly."

"M. Barnay," interposed the duke, "why did you deliver those lines so badly?"

"Because Hamlet is not an actor, sire, but only an amateur!"

"But Polonius praises his action."

"Ah, your highness," answered Barnay, "but then Polonius was a courtier, and courtiers find everything that princes do marvelous!"

The duke laughed heartily and interrupted no more that day.

Alleged Scottish Kings.

Tests innumerable have been showed, upon the hundred portraits of alleged Scottish kings, with a strong family likeness, especially about the nose, which adorn Holyrood—kings, as Scott says, "who, if they ever flourished at all, lived several hundred years before the invention of painting in oil colors." The late Mr. W. G. Haliltt, recalls the London Chronicle, had a story of a visitor who greatly admired of the old woman who showed him over the palace. "Did you do these?" She shook her head as gravely, and he added, "You might have done better."

First Speaker of the House.

The first speaker of the house of representatives of the United States was Frederick A. Muhlenberg of Pennsylvania, who was born in Trappe, Pa., in 1750 and died in Lancaster, Pa., in 1801. Muhlenberg was succeeded by Jonathan Trumbull of Connecticut, but was returned to the speaker's chair in the Third congress.

PRINCE OF FORGERS.

His Work Was Autograph Letters, and He Became Too Bold.

Irene Lucas, beyond all question was the greatest counterfeiter of autograph letters, at least as far as amount produced, that the world has ever seen. Twenty years imposture, all from famous people, is a mean record and one that may probably forever unequaled.

It must be admitted that Lucas was exceptionally favored by the friends of Michel Chasles, the famous French mathematician, who from 1861 to 1870 was a steady client and bought at least the total output, paying in all 140,000 francs. This was not a large sum, considering that among the letters he acquired were six from Alexander the Great to Aristotle, a challenge from Julius Caesar to Vercingetorix, three missives of Cleopatra addressed respectively to Cato, Cicero and Pompey, one from Cornelius Julius to Jesus, one from Aesculapius to Hippocrates, twelve from Jesus Christ to John, a letter to Mary Magdalene, one from Lazarus, ten from Pontius Pilate, one from Sappho, one from Mohammed to the king of France, excerpts from the writings of Cuvier, Leibnitz, Spinoza, Luther, Rubens, St. Jerome and a multitude of hardly less or personalities.

It is true that Michel Chasles did make some objection to the fact that these letters were in French, whereas it is not stated historically that Cleopatra, for example, were in the habit of using that tongue for their private correspondence. But he cas parried this protest in a way that was in keeping with his dignity as a collector of famous letters by offering to take back all he had sold to Lucas and return to him the 140,000 francs. Chasles was so touched with this unwonted proof of his sagacity that the discussion ended in his leading Lucas 20 leaks to meet some pressing obligations.

How a man having need of 140,000 francs or $28,000 requires a great matter to determine.

It was the greed of Napoleon III which led to keep Sir Isaac Newton the honor of discovering the law of gravitation that caused the bubble to burst and deprived L

FORGOT THE PAST

By JOHN ECCLES

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

At twenty-five John had eaten out his heart in loneliness. then, as the weeks slipped into months, he grew reconciled to his fate. He could never hope to return to England. He had been accused of forging his father's name to a check.

His elder brother, the heir to the estate, was the culprit. His brother's wife had come to John and pleaded, with tears in her eyes, that he assume the guilt. Everybody would suspect him, she said frankly, because of his recklessness and improvidence. There was a girl—Amy Nairn—she had looked favorably on the young man, and he had been wildly in love with her. But then John Chandler was never able to resist a woman's pleading. And his sister-in-law had taken him at a weak moment.

The upshot was that John went into exile. He had pleaded with Amy to share his lot, and she had laughed first, then, when he told her that he was accused of forgery, her pretty brows contracted and she had indignantly dismissed him.

So John had settled down to farming in Jamaica, with the small sum his father gave him. John often fancied the old banker understood, but, if he did, he gave no signs. His ebook banks with John, and so they parted in silence.

That was four years ago, and at first John's heart had overflowed with anguish. Time and again he had been tempted to write to Amy, explaining matters to her. But he refrained. And at last he began to think of her, except in the desolate hours of mid-night.

Then Haddes came into his life—Haddes, the only child of the rich Creole planter, with her dark eyes and wave and winning innocence. The old man would have been well content to have John for a son-in-law, without asking any questions. He knew that John was descended from the Virginian aristocracy, that he was omitted from invitations to the governor's balls and dinners. But he did not care. John was a good manager, and Haddes loved him.

"And Now I've Said as Much as I Dare, John!"

So, four years after John's arrival, they became engaged. The wedding was to take place in a month's time. Then it—as the saying goes—the unexpected happened.

John Chandler received an invitation to the ball at the government house.

He stared incredulously at the engraved invitation card. It was the same governor who had always coldshouldered him. However, he went. Perhaps it was because he wanted to be with his betrothed. Perhaps it was mere idleness; perhaps it was mere bravado. He hesitate to look upon the faces of his own set again. John went, and when he entered the ballroom and saw the men of his own class, and the women in evening dress, his heart leaped in his breast. Hitherto suddenly he had felt somebody very distinct and remote from him.

And the governor shook him by the hand. Afterward John danced. He danced with Haddes' girls, with the bloom of the noble English summer upon their cheeks, and then the governor's secretary drew him aside.

"Clarion," he said—John knew the man ordinarily—"there will be some news received by the mail steamer. It has arrived by the late English steamer. I want you to stay and hear it. The governor wants it."

John assented. His thoughts went back in his own country, and in his heart he was the boon companion of London, the Boz, whose he had ridden in boyhood, the placid countryside and smooth lawns of his father's home.

"We have had a certified the secretary. "I don't know if you have heard—you cannot have heard because nobody knew anything about it—but you are asked to find and notify you. Your father is dead, Chandler."

John listened, apparently unmoved, for his mind was still playing that various rich and he was living over the last with his father again. He remembered the last time he had seen him when he was a little boy, how they had gone fish.

And your brother is, I am sorry to say, dead also. He was killed by a fall in the hunting field. The shock killed your father."

John was quite unmoved at that news. He had never had much in common with his elder brother. As the younger son, John had always been put aside in favor of the heir.

"Your brother left no child, Chandler," the governor's secretary was saying. "Would he never come? John looked at him in a daze. The thought of Haddes had come from his mind. His father dead. His brother dead, without leaving an heir. Then—why he was the heir!

"Sir John, allow me to present you to some of your old friends," the secretary was saying.

And John, still wandering in London in May, with his nostrils full of the sweet scent of hawthorns in the parks, was brought back to consciousness of the dreary perfumes of the ballroom by seeing his sister-in-law and—Amy.

He found himself bowing mechanically, just as though he had only left them the day before. He looked into Amy's face. What had there ever been in that woman, to whom he had given all the passion of a first love? He had dreamed of her three years till Haddes came into his life, this cold, checked English girl, with the faint smile and the worldly face. How far away his past life seemed all of a sudden.

"Look!" his sister-in-law was saying, "won't you come out with us upon the veranda? I have something to tell you."

John followed the ladies outside. He was leaning against the veranda rail now, and his sister-in-law's words were buzzing in his head.

"You acted a very noble part, John," she said. "We do not fully—we shall never cease to be grateful to you. Few men would have done as much for their brothers. But after poor Arthur's death the lawyer went through his papers. He was a dreadful man, Mr. Smeaton, one of those mutton-whe brown, cautious men who think that everything irregular is a crime. He found in your brother's desk a will and signed confession and insisted that it should be made public to the world."

John remembered Mr. Smeaton, a kindly old man who had always taken an interest in him. So Smeaton was the man who had come forward so unexpectedly to restore his lost honor.

"We begged and pleaded, John, but nothing would move him," his sister-in-law continued. "We even offered him three thousand pounds to hush the matter, but it wouldn't do. The old wretch threatened to make the talk public himself unless we did. He had to be done, John." She sighed.

"Now you can guess what a time there was in England, especially as you are now the heir to the property. I don't know if you have heard that it lent to take a holiday in some place where the rumors would get lost. I also proposed to come with me, and she has been her word. You know you and Amy were always good friends, John. So now I shall leave you two together to talk over old times."

The woman was gone, and John stood unsteadily against the railing, looking into the hard, worldly face of Amy Nairn. How could he ever have loved her? How could he? How could? "He could not answer his own question.

"John, I am so sorry," said Amy, putting out her hand. John took it and it felt cold and callous in his own.

"John," she went on, "do you remember what you asked me that night before you came away? I have never forgotten, John. And I am so sorry that I—that everything I have often thought of you, John."

He would have liked to have thrust his fist into the woman's face. What a difference his had been! But Amy was a shrewish shrew.

"I will admit," she said, "that my motives in accompanying your sister-in-law were not altogether altruistic, John. In fact, I—I wanted to see you again." She looked down and blushed as she said it, with coquetry in fashion. Amy had singularly pretty ankles—almost as pretty as Haddes—and she had always been aware of the fact.

"And now I've said as much as I dare, John," she added, raising her eyes to his.

"I am sorry," said John, bowing. "Sorry indeed."

"That you should have made this long journey for nothing. I cannot carry you."

"How dare you!" she exclaimed, with flaming cheeks. "Has Jamaica made a brute of you, John?"

"No, a man," he answered. "When I go to England I shall take my wife with me. You see, we are to be married before the end of the month, Amy."

The last picture of her was seeing the sudden, ugly cruelty flame into her face and eyes as she stood upright, with the rail. But the picture faded within a moment. For the air was full of the sweetness of a June night, and John was riding home to his bride-to-be—Haddes.

No Harm Done.

Her friends had asked their young hostess to play for them, and she was performing a difficult selection from Wagner. In the midst of it she suddenly stopped in confusion.

"What's the matter?" asked one of the visitors.

"I—I struck a false note," faltered the performer.

"Well, what of it?" cried another guest. "Go ahead. Nobody but Wagner would ever know it, and he's dead."—Ladies Home Journal.

For Aching Feet.

One of the best remedies for aching of the feet is resting the muscles in the soles of the feet by changing the shoes frequently. Every pair of shoes is cut from a different last and the tread will be varied with every change of the shoes. Bathing the feet with either very hot or very cold water, wiping them dry and then rubbing them with spirits of camphor will cool the feet and remove the aching.

Bunker Language.

The daughter of a very prominent liberal statesman is telling this story against herself, says the London Daily Sketch. She was fooling round the links North Berwick way, accompanied by an elderly outspoken caddie. "Do you think I'm improving to my game at all lately?" she remarked casually. "No, I will say you may fairly say that, lady, ye've got a gold grip of the mashie."

Life's Stern Command.

This stern command must come to all—a hard unyielding fact—"Stand up and take your medicine—don't play the baby act."

FINE WESTERN MICHIGAN WHEAT FIELD.

The season of 1914 has been a prosperous one with the people of western Michigan. In practically every section of the vast territory big crops have been harvested. The above picture shows a wheat field on the farm of Jacob Wolters, near Hudsonville. The straw grew to a good height and the wheat heads were well filled with grain. Back of the field are the farm buildings which testify to the general prosperity of the Mason county section.

HIGHEST PLACE IN STATE OF MICHIGAN

The highest part of the state of Michigan is near the Wexford-Grenola county line. Here the ground rises to a height of 1,600 feet above sea level. This means over twelve hundred feet above the level of Lake Michigan. This is 400 feet above the sea. Surprising as it may seem, this high highest piece of ground is a little south of the Wexford county line and covers an area of about two square miles. This small plateau is 100 feet above the sea level. An effort is being made by the business interests of Wexford county to utilize this high land for the growing of apples. The rolling hills which are cultivated only at a great expenditure of physical labor, can be used for apple orchards and produce great wealth than they are in hay, grain or corn fields.

ground is one of the best settled parts of Wexford county. Years ago a colony of Germans became interested in this neighborhood, because of the richness of the rolling lands and began to clear up farms. Today these farms are large, well cultivated and are equipped with buildings that tell a story of prosperity. The land is quite rolling, it being a succession of hills, and to the traveler it seems that each new hill is a little all higher than the one just passed. The very high altitude will insure good air drainage which is an essential factor in fruit growing. APPLE CONTEST PROVES SUCCESS

One of the big features of the Emmet county fair this fall was the apple contest. This feature was engineered by one of the local merchants, who offered prizes as follows: A $15 stove for the best bushel of apples, a $5 churn for the second best bushel, a $5 wash boiler for the third best bushel and a $1.25 tea kettle for every other bushel of apples entered, the apples to become the property of the merchant. A total of 42 bushels were displayed. Most of these apples were of high quality, although it was apparent that one or two bushels were only culls and were entered on the persons of getting the ten bottles. Of course the merchant lost out on these poor bushels as they were not worth the premiums awarded them. The first prize went to Floyd Hoover of Petoskey and the second prize to a Harbor Springs fruit grower. The 42 bushels were taken to the store at the close of the fair and many bushels were sold to people who wished to send fancy apples to their friends in other parts of the country.

This year was the second time that this kind of a contest has been conducted. The first year but 16 bushels were entered. The merchant not only received much free advertising by reason of his offerings, but he sent bushels all over the country, using fruit growers to bring in their best apples.

Many people were surprised at the fine quality of the apples entered. It has been thought by many that good fruit could not be grown as far north as Petoskey or Harbor Springs, but the bushels of apples put on display proved any doubt that there might have been upon this subject. The apples were large, highly colored and of good flavor. In most cases they were examples of perfect fruit. The stock on which the fruit had been grown had been spraied, and the majority of the apples showed that the fruit were of the quality that is making western Michigan famous.

Find Work in Michigan.

Two young men from Indianapolis, N. Y., have found employment in the apple orchards on the Grand Traverse peninsula, as a result of the activities of the Michigan immigration commissioner. These young men were employed in wholesale houses doing an export business, and were laid off because of the stack times brought about by the European war. They called upon the Michigan immigration commission agent at Battery Park, and through him were enabled to decide to cast their lot in Michigan. This agent, through the Lansing office and the western Michigan development bureau arranged for employment with the managers of the Ridgewood farm for employment as apple pickers. This is the first time that these young men have been West and if they like the country and the people they will undoubtedly settle here to spend the rest of their lives. Since their arrival a letter has come from one of these friends in Brooklyn, who also has lost his position because of the war and intends to come to Michigan to work. He is in western Michigan for work.

Clear Away Weeds and Rubbish.

All weeds and rubbish should be cleared away from ditch, fields, ditches and fence rows, so there will be no opportunity for weeds to find winter shelter.

Makers Many Exhibits.

The western Michigan development bureau has made a large number of exhibits at fairs this fall, but attracted attention by making a big display at the Greater Michigan fair at Grand Rapids, it had smaller displays at the fairs of Holland, Cadillac, Traverse City, Petoskey, Buffalo, Buffalo, Bay, mouth bay and Empire. It will also put on exhibits at the fairs to be held this coming week at Sturgis, Kalamazoo and Three Rivers. These exhibits consist of displays of apples in boxes, processed fruits in glass jars, seeds and grains in glass and grains in the straw. Each county has been more or less active, but has attracted attention on this account as well as on account of the quality of the farm products displayed.

Hopper for Dry Mash.

In feeding dry mash, it is best to give it in hoppers instead of troughs, as when fed in the latter the hens throw out a lot in search of more tempting ingredients.

Dr. Marden's Uplift Talks

By ORISON SWETT MARDEN.

Copyright, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

In a recent divorce case the judge, in sentencing the husband about his treatment of his wife, asked whether he was in the habit of making her Christmas or birthday presents, or bringing her flowers, confectionery or other gifts occasionally. "No," the husband replied, "I am sorry to say I never did. I always paid her bills without question, and thought that was all I should do, but I see now I was mistaken, that it did not take the place of my buying things and taking them home to her myself. It was a mistake."

Many practical people think that sentiment is a sign of weakness, that such things belong only to silly people. It is a sad day in any married woman's life when she can say: "Dear me, it is not half so much fun to be a wife as it was to be a sweetheart. I do not begin to get the presents, treats and little attentions I used to."

It is a great pity when a husband gradually ceases to be attentive to little things, when he neglects to bring home flowers or little gifts to his wife, as he did before marriage. It is a great shock to a woman's life when she begins to realize that romance is dying out; that her husband is always too tired to go anywhere with her or to do anything for her, to take her for a little outing; that his time is all taken up with business; that he who was once so generous with her has become miserly, fearing he cannot afford this or cannot afford that.

It does not take a great deal to make the average young woman happy. It is not so much the question of the amount of money spent on her as the little attentions, the little courtesies, the little tokens of thoughtfulness and affection. It is the idea that she is in her husband's mind, that he has taken pains to express his affection, to make her happy, that pleases and satisfies her.

A judge of large experience says that one of the chief grievances of women who come to him for relief through divorce is that their husbands neglect them and their homes, giving their minds so completely to their business affairs that even when at home they are only surly brutes with whom the angels themselves could not lead happy domestic lives.

Men as a rule are so matter of fact. They do not realize what a little romance and sentiment mean to a wife. They seem to think that if a woman has a good home, enough to eat and good clothes to wear she ought to be satisfied, but these things do not feed the most important element in a wife. The human heart is the most difficult thing to nourish. It does not feed upon things, however beautiful. The heart may starve in the midst of luxury and it may thrive in a hovel where there is not a carpet on the floor or a picture on the wall.

There are multitudes of wives in this country today who do not really know the meaning of the word companionship. Their husbands pay their bills, their physical wants are supplied, but their affections are not fed, and their hearts are starving for companionship. This is often the reason why so many wives seek elsewhere for that sympathy which their husbands deny them.

There must be romance in wedded life, constant expression of affection and appreciation not only on the husband's part, but on the wife's as well, or the most affectionate nature will in time become indifferent and seek other interests.

At a dinner in New York not long ago everybody at the table was asked to contribute a word to make a fully beautiful face belonging to a lady of about twenty. The answers showed a personification of beauty and charm, grace and poise of character and intellect, but the lesson also came that a face composed of a coarse, repulsive voice, such grossness, and her manner and bad English were so completely out of keeping with her face that the remarkable impression she had made was dispelled. Her symmetrical and attractive face was her only recommendation. Grossness and ignorance back of it dissolved it all.

The most beautiful face in the world will lose its attractiveness the moment we see in the person any suggestion of coarseness or vulgarity, any lack of refinement and culture.

Every child ought to be taught that a pleasing personality and a charming manner are of inestimable value to everybody, and especially to a girl. We often remark in the certain faces and skins which they exhibit. Everybody takes on his manners. No matter what pleasantness you may have at home all that you have, so far as strangers are concerned, is what you show, what you exhibit in your manner, your face, in your bearing, your personality.

The best of our wealth we always carry with us. The possession of a good character and a superb personality are of infinitely greater value than any material possessions, however great. The impression we make upon the favorable people who meet you will naturally jump to the conclusion that you would not make a very agreeable acquaintance, friend or employee.

Splendid ability and many superb traits often starve to death in a world as because one does not overcome the handicap of an offensive manner or disagreeable personal habits. No matter how able, how honest, how industrious she may be, or what splendid qualities she may possess, if a girl does not have an agreeable, attractive manner, a pleasing personality, she will not attract her friends, and money will avoid her.

Employers prefer girls with less ability but with pleasing manners. It is a pleasure to love one's machine and harmony and we gravitate towards agreeable, sunny, kindly people. Many girls seem to think that fine clothes are a good substitute for a pleasing manner, but the sunny, agreeable, pleasing girl often gets a much better position than the girl who dresses much better, but who has a repulsive manner, loses it.

I have in mind a young girl of splendid ability and exceptionally attractive personality who applied for an important position in a very large concern. There was no vacancy or likely to be any in the position desired, but she made such a profound impression upon the proprietors that they created a new position for her, and paid her a large salary. One of the proprietors afterwards said that he could not afford to let the girl get away from them, for they considered the human element, the personal element their greatest business asset.

The firm in question prides itself on the superior personality of all its employees—so much so that a large percentage of the salaries of many of the workers is paid not purely for ability, but for the desirability and attractiveness of the employee's personality. The manager has because an attractive personality has the power to make friends and to draw patrons for the business, and he knows from the fact that they owe their success largely to the personality of quality of their products and the excellence of service, they can afford to pay large salaries in due even more to the personality of their employees.

The greatest factor in your career is the personal one. Your personality will count more than anything else. Your chief assets are locked up in it.

Laughter in Supreme Court.

The Supreme court of the United States is absolutely and indisputably supreme when it comes to sadness, dreariness and gloom. People do not laugh once a year in that tribunal—looking chamber. If you have to do so to set foot inside of it in order to prevent your death by strangulation or justice in a heavy, ponderous and serious affair.

MRS. THOMSON TELLS WOMEN

How She Was Helped During Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I am just 53 years of age and during Change of Life I suffered very terribly. I tried several doctors but none seemed to give me any relief. Every month I was more nervous intense in both sides, and made me so weak that I had to go to bed. At last a friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I tried it at once and found much relief. After that I had no pains at all and could do my housework and shopping the same as always. For years I have praised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me, and shall always recommend it as a woman's friend. You are at liberty to use my letter in any way."—MRS. THOMSON, 2640 W. Russell St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. Women approaching this critical period should know that there is no other remedy known to any woman so thoroughly adapted to meet this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Milk Looked Strange.

A family living in North Chicago found a good deal of cream in a bottle of milk one morning recently. Late at night and when the driver called in the morning the pleased servant held up the bottle of cream.

"Look here, I have never seen anything like this before on your milk."

The man looked at it for a moment, scratched his head and replied:

"Well, I don't know what's the matter, but you can throw it out and I'll give you a fresh bottle in no place."

AIMS TO BE GREATEST APPLE-GROWING REGION IN MICHIGAN

By H. J. DANIELS.

James F. Zimmer, Wexford county's new agricultural adviser, began his work in that county October 1 by starting a big apple-tree planting campaign through which it is hoped every farmer in the county will secure several apple trees for planting this fall. Last spring the Cadillac board of trade purchased 15,000 apple trees and sold them to the farmers at cost.

The county farm bureau under the direction of Mr. Zimmer will do the same thing this fall, only it is hoped that with a man to spend all his time on the proposition, more than 15,000 trees can be planted near Cadillac.

The fact that fully 99 per cent of the trees sold by the board of trade last spring grew has given the farm ers confidence in the proposition, and the further fact that they are able to secure 40 and 50 inch trees for 12 and 15 cents makes the plan an attractive one to them. The greatest apple-growing region in Michigan, is the slogan which the board of trade and the Wexford county farmers are making use of in their strenuous efforts to bring about such a condition. Wexford county farmers are agreeably surprised to find that their orchards are doing more profits of late years than anything else.

The principal reason for your career is the personal one. Your personality will count more than anything else. Your chief assets are locked up in it.

Cute—Rather.

The smuggling of precious stones into New York is perhaps one of the "lesser evils" Indianism is guilty of all the efforts of the authorities to stop it. Some of the tricks employed seem to touch the limit of human ingenuity. Perhaps the cleverest trick of the—otherwise, because the simplest—stands to the credit of a Chinaman.

He would buy $100,000 worth of diamonds in London and, aboard ship, hide them behind a panel of the wall of his cabin. On the ship's arrival at New York he would walk calmly ashore, leaving the stones behind him in their hiding-place. The ship would straight to the docking office and engaging the same cabin for the return voyage. When the time came for the vessel to sail he went on board and brought his wife. The lady, of course, must go to inspect her husband's cabin, and when she left it, the husband and the lady walked ashore with the rest of the visitors, her pocketbook heavier by the weight of $100,000 worth of diamonds.—London Tit-Bits.

Laughter in Supreme Court.

The Supreme court of the United States is absolutely and indisputably supreme when it comes to sadness, dreariness and gloom. People do not laugh once a year in that tribunal—looking chamber. If you have to do so to set foot inside of it in order to prevent your death by strangulation or justice in a heavy, ponderous and serious affair.

"Not long ago, however, Mr. Justice Lurton made the lawyers, the auditors and the other justices laugh right out loud.

A lawyer from the South was arguing a case concerning two secret fraternities.

"May the court please," said the lawyer breathlessly, the opening door, and, only get hold of our ritual and need it, but also get our instents and regalia.

"Just a moment," interrupted Judge Lurton. "Did they also get your goat?"—Popular Magazine.

Regard for His Mother's Feelings.

Jokes about cheap motor cars are as the sands of the sea, but a Kansas City traffic manager believes he has a new one. He met an old friend whom he had not seen for many months, and asked him.

"What are you doing now?"

"Selling motor cars," was the unenthusiastic reply.

"What kind of cars?"

"Well, er—the truth is," he stammered, "I am selling Fords (deleted) cars, but I'd rather you wouldn't say anything about it. I don't want my mother to know; she thinks I'm a bartender."

Milk Looked Strange.

A family living in North Chicago found a good deal of cream in a bottle of milk one morning recently. Late at night and when the driver called in the morning the pleased servant held up the bottle of cream.

"In examining the district it appears that practically all the land is now under cultivation that is possible under the present system of drainage. There will always be a portion of the land occupied by the many lakes and the various streams and outlets, but many of the small lakes are but little more than marshes and can be entirely or mostly reclaimed.

"Although the lakes are marshes or peat and muck beds which, when reclaimed, are cultivated for highly specialized crops. The natural drainage of this section has been impaired by the construction of dams and the low-

MICHIGAN BOYS WORKING THE GARDEN

Garden Farming on the Shores of Crystal Lake, in Benzie County.

Boys are a great help in bringing up the gardens of Michigan in the way they should grow. As shown by the accompanying cut, two boys with a wheel cultivate can set over a great deal of land in one day. In the foreground, the boy is using all the "garden" that most farmers usually have. The common farmer can be as steady as though a horse is drawing the implement, but more and steadier than though but one boy were pushing it. The light soil of the northern and northwestern part of the state responds readily to the efforts of the smallest boys with the wheel cultivator, so that it becomes a very effective tool.

STATE-REWARD ROADS RAPIDLY BEING BUILT

State-Reward Road Near Empire.

Way up in the northwestern corner of the lower peninsula, where not so many years ago the pioneer was the main industry, and where there is still some timber, and lumber companies operate in the feeling manufacturing industry state-reward roads are being built as fast as surveyors can make them. They are opening up a valuable section of Michigan's domain. The state-aid roads in some of the lands are but waiting to free the lands of the stumps.

Last year Benzie county harvested 30 bushels of apples from one tree.

Several Indiana men visited the Levy farm south of Cadillac one day recently and found white deer. The fact was of a much better quality than was raised in Indiana. The deer, from tip to the field stands ten feet high and the ears are long and perfectly shaped. Wheat on the farm of Herbert Bender, near Dixon, averaged 30 bushels to the acre. Jacob Snyder had 35 acres of it. His corn will average 70 bushels to the acre, or about 8 bushels which yielded. He had 40 acres of corn.

John Hebrus, who came from Indiana a few weeks ago and purchased 40 acres near Pellock farm north of Cadillac, is well pleased with his new farm. He declares he would not sell his land for $75 an acre over the sum he paid for it.

TO RECLAIM VAST TRACT.

It is reported that commissioners of Cass Van Buren, St. Joseph and Kalamazoo counties have joined together for the reclamation of a vast tract of low lands, mostly in the latter two counties, but some in Cass and Van Buren, estimated at 90,000 acres and now worthless.

Government experts have been called in and have made a report that shows that this kind of care pays. The Essex vineyard received the same care, the cultivation and spraying to compete with the slipshod growers, for the Kalamazoo county vineyard received praise for the good fruit is always sure to find a ready and profitable over the imperfect stock.

VAST CELERY FARM.

The 16th farm land living to the north and west of Kalamazoo is being converted into a big celery farm. The property is owned by J. Mark Harvey. Here "Kalamazoo" celery is to be raised in large quantities and shipped to the markets in the East. When the work is well under way there will be about 100 men employed. Mr. Harvey is not specialist; well understand the business. He is a practical farmer, who is a process of construction and by early spring will be ready to plant the seed their families.

Much Depends on Heifers.

The future dairy herd depends upon the heifers you are raising now.

REFORESTING WORK PLANNED.

Prof. H. H. Ackerd, assistant head of the forestry department of the Michigan Agricultural college, is planning with the state forestry board, tracts of land near Dearborn, in Wayne county, and will also take up the matter of reforesting large tracts near Ypsilanti, Pontiac and Romeo this fall.

WESTERN MICHIGAN DEVELOPMENT BUREAU'S EXHIBIT

Western Michigan Development Bureau Exhibit at the Empire Fair.

The western Michigan development bureau is agent that is doing great things for the western and northern part of the state, made great activities in Lapeer at many fairs this fall. Following the state fairs at Grand Rapids and Detroit, the bureau went to Holland, Cadillac, Empire and a dozen other points where great crowds of people gathered, and showed to great advantage the results of the bureau's work.

W. H. Steele of Northport, who supervises the work, has collected the material and set up more displays of apples than any other man in western Michigan. He has helped with every big exhibit this year.

ONE ACRE PAYS BIG.

Dan Rossell, a farmer living three miles south of Fremont, probably realizes more from an acre of ground the past summer in the line of hay and forage crop than the majority of farmers do. On April 15 he had in planted an acre of land to sweet clover, a plant that heretofore has been considered a weed, but whose value is just beginning to be realized. The acre, sown had never been a very fertile spot. No lime was used, but a slight top dressing of fertilizer was applied and 20 pounds of seed were sown, which was thoroughly inoculated with a pure culture.

Three months, July, is he cut 4,000 pounds of hay, and in a few days following he put four large hogs and eight pigs on the sweet clover. They were not able to eat it fast enough and some head of cattle were turned in and fed there 14 days. Since then the hogs and pigs have been eating this clover, which proves as fast as it is eaten off. In spite of the dry but weather that prevailed throughout September the clover continued to do well, and now in the middle of October the swine continued to thrive on it.

Increased Cost of Growth.

It is not through increased age that the cost of growth results but the greater cost is the outgrowth of increased size.

Waste of Lumber.

Every foot higher than a man's head means a waste of lumber in the poultry house.

IS OF RARE BEAUTY

CANADA'S FAMOUS RAINBOW STONE MUCH ADMIRED.

Mixture of Colors and Its Capacity for High Polish Are the Two Qualities That Have Brought It into Prominence.

The gift to Mr. Thomas Lipton of a model in serpentine stone of his racing yacht has revived interest in this beautiful stone, which some years ago was much in vogue.

Serpentine is often found in combination with asbestos. Canada produces about nine-tenths of the world's production of asbestos, which is largely used for insulating purposes and also for weaving into fireproof cloth.

In the province of Quebec are to be found the largest asbestos mines in Canada. The production is large and it is interesting to note that whereas in 1908 the exports of crude asbestos were valued at $1,726,000, in 1913 the figures had increased to $2,646,000.

And in the same province are also to be found some of the world's most beautiful deposits of serpentine.

It was in 1816 that Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort, on their visit to Canada, visited England, were shown specimens of serpentine, which they admired so much that several large pedestals made of this stone were ordered for Osborne House.

The patronage thus secured brought serpentine into considerable fashion and among others who at that time favored it were the duke of Westminster, who ordered a set of Lucan obelisks 14 feet in height; the Hon. Poulnelle Lee, who ordered the finest chimney-piece ever made in this material, and the then duke of Devonshire, who had several large pedestals and pilasters, employed for his picture gallery at Chiswick.

During the reign of Queen Victoria in serpentine which followed a manufactory on a large scale of a great variety of household and domestic ornaments, etc., was started at Penzance, and, which afterwards passed into the hands of a London company. Vases made from this material at the exhibitions of 1851 and

ED DEATH OF WAR

Tragic Fate of Maximilian at the Hands of the Mexicans.

IT'S PENALTY FOR FAILURE.

The Atonement of Blood—How It Was Consummated and How the Vengeance of the Victors Was Satisfied—Coolness of the Unfortunate Prince.

No more tragic incident is recorded in history than the execution of Maximilian. Half a century ago a foreign prince of the Empire Private Joseph was sent to rule Mexico. Together with his wife he set upon the frail throne, which then tottering. How he fared is a story, but when he was taken prisoner he prepared himself for death. The following is the Story of the Execution.

In a convent built some years ago Major John S. Edwards pictures graphically the closing hours of the ill-fated emperor, who would be king of Mexico.

The morning broke fair and white in the city and at 6:30 o'clock three raps were drawn up in front of the main door of the convent of Capuchins. Long in all the sleepy land, the mothers everywhere, and long years of Continental steel that now had left to rest on just sweet bosh of the morning.

In the first carriage got Maximilian and Father Soria, a priest. In the second carriage there came Miramon and his priest. In the third Mejia and his. Then the solemn cortege started. • • •

All the people were in the street, on the faces of the multitude there were evidences of genuine and unfeigned sorrow. Some among the crowd lifted their hats as the Victim passed, some turned away their heads and wept, and some, even among the soldiers and amid the bristle ranks of the Liberals, fell upon their knees and wept.

The place of surrender was to be the place of execution. Northward of the city a mile or more the Hill of the Bells (El Cerro de las Campanas) surrounded itself. It was followed on three sides by 6000 soldiers of all arms, leaving the rear unprotected this morning upon a wall.

At one 7:30 o'clock when the carriages halted at the place of execution, Maximilian was the first to alight. He assisted priests down, took a handkerchief from his pocket and tie not from his hand and beckoned for one of the Mexican servants to approach. The man came.

Take these," the emperor said. "They are all I have to give."

The faithful Indian took them, bowed thus, cried over them, fell upon his knees a few moments in prayer to the good God for the good master and strode home.

In front of the dead wall three crosses had been firmly embedded in the ground. On each side was a plaster leaning the name of the victim to be dominated there. That upon the right was where the emperor was to be shot, that in the center was Miramon, that upon the left for the grim old stoic and fighter Mejia.

Maximilian walked firmly to his place. The three men embraced each other three times. To Mejia he said:

"We will meet in heaven."

Mejia bowed smiled and laid his hand upon his heart.

To Miramon he said:

"Brave men are respected by noble elms. Permit me to give you the place of honor."

As he said this he took Miramon gently by the arm and led him to the center cross, embracing him for the last time.

Mechoido was not on the ground. An aide-de-camp, however, brought permission for each of the victims to deliver a farewell address. The emperor spoke briefly. Miramon drew from his pocket a small piece of paper and read.

"Viva Mexico! Viva Religion!" cried Maximilian placed his hand on his breast, threw up his head and cried in a singsong calm and penetrating voice, "Fire!"

Eighteen muskets were discharged as one musket. Mejia and Miramon died instantly. Four balls struck the emperor, three in the left and one in the right breast. Two of these balls passed entirely through his body, coming out high up on the left shoulder; the other two remained embedded in the thick lung. The emperor fell a little sideways and upon his right side, exclaiming almost gently and sadly:

"Oh, bombre, bombre! Oh, man! Oh, man!"

He was not yet dead. A soldier went up close to him and fired into his stomach. The emperor moved slightly as if still sensible to pain. Another came out of the firing party and, putting the muzzle of his musket so close to his breast, shot him fairly through the heart.

The tragedy was ended. Maximilian's vengeance was satisfied; the soul of the unfortunate prince was with his God and could the judgment day the blood of one who was so young and so gentle to die will carry out from the ground even in the heart of Abel.

Following are additional particulars of the damage to the game warden's patrol boat at Harlor Springs last week: "The boat was kept well out toward the end of the pier and no one had been seen near it for some time before the fire was discovered. The fire company responded promptly when the alarm was given, but within a few minutes the patrol boat was out of danger. The damage was not very great except as it came from the dense smoke that blackened the whole interior of the vessel. The supposition is that the fire somehow caught from a stove in the cabin. Many however do not take no stock in this view, thinking that the activity of the fish warden in getting after those who have not complied with the laws may have led someone to set fire to the boat. A few illegal nets have been found recently and confiscated. It was a purpose of the gang in the Charlevoix boathouse and operating in Traverse bay to destroy such proof if possible to secure."

Mr. McManus' health was poor before the campaign and his present relapse is believed due to his activity in stumping the state.

Petoskey's septic tank, long mooted, is practically assured. F. G. Lagg, first assistant to the state sanitary engineer, is making surveys with the aid of City Engineer Robert Tripp. The tank will be constructed strictly according to the state specifications. Petoskey has for years been confronted with a serious menace in the sewage, which has been emptied into little Traverse bay.

James Fox, one of the well known residents of the farm section near Horton's Bay, and who for many years lived on a farm at North Bay, died last week Monday at his farm home near the former place from the effects of injuries received in a runaway accident two weeks ago. He leaves the widow and six children, M. J. Fox, of Iron Mountain; Mrs. John Brechelmn, of North Bay; Vollie and Ned Fox, of Horton's Bay, and Frank and Lester Fox, who live on their farms near that place.

Petoskey, Special, 12th. Fire in the Petoskey business district last night entailed a loss estimated at $20,000. L. N. Overholt's drug and grocery store was so badly damaged it will have to be replaced. The brick stock was practically ruined by fire, smoke and water, and William Sharf's house furnishings in an adjoining building were damaged. Saigeon & Ferris' grocery was saved by strenuous efforts of the firemen. Bakers in the Overholt store, unaware of danger, continued to work after an alarm had been sounded, but managed to escape. Both buildings were the property of Robert C. Amen.

Boyne Citizen: The news which had been anticipated for some time was given out Sunday that Ira Jubenville had passed away. The end came at two o'clock Sunday morning and relieved the sufferer after months of pain. About three years ago Mr. Jubenville suffered with trouble in his leg which was thought at the time to have been rheumatism. He was operated upon twice to relieve him but did not gain by the knife. In May his foot was amputated and since that time he gradually failed until in December last he was forced to give up active work. Last July he was again taken to the hospital and another operation performed upon the leg. From then he was confined to the house and the end expected.

A gang of forty-eight Poles employed in the Johannesburg camp eight miles east of Macenina armed themselves with axes, clubs and revolvers Sunday night and, inflamed by whiskey, they made an attack on a bunkhouse in which fifteen American lumberjacks had taken refuge. Shots were fired into the American resisted the attempt to storm their fortress. Three of the attacking forces were arrested by Deputy Sheriff Sharman. According to the story told Sherman, Joseph Kulnski and Tony Lendys secured some whiskey at Frederica. It was liberally distributed about the camp and when Jerry Wolosan, foreman, was called to quell a disturbance between a Pole and an American teamster the trouble started. The Poles threatened to kill the Americans.

The secretary of Charlevoix Lodge, No. 262, F. & A. M. has received a letter from a member of the lodge now living in far-away Alaska, as follows:

CORDOVA, ALASKA, Sept. 28, 1914

Dear Sir and Brother:

. . . . . I have a store here as well as at Dawson, and am doing very nicely, but I pay forty cents per pound freight as I have everything packed one hundred twenty-eight miles over two glaciers; so prices are exceedingly high. Meals here are two dollars each, ham and bacon seventy-five cents, coffee one dollar per pound, flour, sugar, rice, etc., forty-eight dollars per hundred, potatoes fifty cents per pound, and onions seventy-five cents per pound, oranges, apples and lemons I sell for fifty cents each and everything else in proportion.

We have lots of wild meat, sheep, caribou and moose sell at forty cents. I have killed 142 rabbits in two hours last spring for dog feed, as I had one of the largest dog teams in here: I had seventeen dogs which cost me just thirteen hundred forty dollars ($1340) for dogs, harness and sleighs and they cost me about eight dollars per day for feed and I also paid a native driver one hundred dollars ($100) per month and board, clothing and tobacco to help to drive them. I lost four fine dogs, they mates killed them on us as they are hard to handle.

Well, I must close now—I intend making a business trip to Friesz soon, this potato clube for the purpose of getting out of the rut into which they have fallen and which is costing them good money year that they produce a potato crop. It is necessary in order to secure top prices for this valuable crop to plant a desirable variety and grade upward from year to year instead of allowing it to degenerate from lack of attention until the tubers raised are almost impossible to market. Too many farmers have fallen into the habit of growing nothing but what is known as the rural, which while they yield well have no of the returns that commands the attention to a discriminating purchaser. This variety has been inbred in this vicinity so long that it is raised as a degenerate and not fit for the better markets. A change in seed is essential in potato growing as in any other crop and the growers who practice this plan are the ones who are making the most money out of their crop. There is just as much of a demand today for fancy grade potatoes in the cities as there is for fancy apples. All that is necessary is to get the right variety and grade it up to the right standard in order to capture the good trade. At the present time a firm in Chicago is selling fancy potatoes put up in sacks at one dollar per bushel and is unable to supply the demand, while in this part of the state the common varieties are a drug on the market at a quarter and last per bushel. What the market wants is a potato which when baked will serve up white, and flaky instead of having to be dipped out of the skin with a spoon as is the case with run out varieties. When the growers are able to produce the farmer stock we will hear less about poor price and overstocked markets. It is quality in potatoes that the consumer demands and it is now up to the farmers to supply the kind of a potato for the city trade.

County Normal Notes

HAZLE PEARL

Clare Thorsen and Ethel Sanford are editors this week.

Fred Gregory was absent last Wednesday afternoon on account of illness.

Cherine Mancho was a visitor of the normal school Friday afternoon of last week.

Etta Thayer and Ward Genett are housekeepers this week.

The class has been studying the question of "Woman Suffrage," and some very interesting points on both sides were discussed.

The class attended a birthday party, Thursday afternoon of last week, in honor of Miss Whiting. The party was held in the training room by the children, and a very nice time and plenty of "goodies" were much in evidence.

Bessie Allen was absent Friday of last week.

Ethel Sanford had charge of the fifth grade reading last Wednesday afternoon.

A class meeting was held Thursday after school for the purpose of selecting the class colors and flowers. Green and White was decided upon for the colors, and white roses for the flowers.

That the Northern Michigan Transportation company is seriously considering the purchase of the steamer Minnesota to replace the Manistee, burned last summer, is a persistent report among marine men. The Minnesota is a large craft about the size of the Manistee.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY

The Woman's Missionary Society, of the Congregational Church, will meet at the home of Mrs. George Weaver, Friday afternoon at 2:30. Topic for consideration, "Our State Work."

Time and space will not permit us to print program.

REPUBLICAN BY 70,000

Forty-six counties have forwarded to the secretary of state the result of the official canvass of the vote cast at the recent election. With the exception of Machinac each of the counties reporting thus far have returned pluralities for the candidates on the republican state ticket excepting for governor. The democratic state ticket was given a majority in Mackinac.

Judging from the returns compared thus far the republican state ticket with the exception of governor has been elected by approximately 70,000 plurality.

THREE FIRES THE PAST WEEK

At ten o'clock Friday night the fire department was called out to a fire which proved to be a vacant house belonging to the widow Anderson, now living at Rose City. The upper story, with contained stored furniture and other household articles, was destroyed.

At three o'clock Sunday morning the second alarm was rung. A hard sky over toward the Belvedere caused much alarm for the moment until it proved to be two barns belonging to Henry Wood, on East Hurlbut avenue. One of the barns was entirely consumed before the department arrived, and the flames were quickly communicated to the other, which, from the start was doomed.

James Saunders, who lives near by, was the first to discover the fire, and succeeded in releasing the team and cows owned by Ed Burns. Two horses and some other material were burned. Live fire brands reached the roof of the wooden house, but a line of hose saved the house from damage. Woods lies partially covered by insurance.

Another blaze occurred at nine o'clock Tuesday night, when the residence of George Cheney, on West Lincoln street, south terrace, was destroyed, with its contents. The family were spending the evening out. Cause of fire unknown. The fire had a good start before the alarm was sent in.

BAY SHORE HOTEL BURNED

Last Friday night fire destroyed the Bayside inn, a resort hotel at Bay shore, seven miles from Petoskey, with a loss estimated at $7,000. The building was owned by Mrs. Gertrude Blaes, whose mother, Mrs. Kusrae, was operating it this winter. Considerable of the furniture was saved. The Bayside inn was the only hotel at Bay Shore.

The Inn was a large and modern hotel patronized by large crowds of summer guests during the summer months. It was erected on the foundation of a frame structure which had been built by Rev. Winfield Sly, to be used as the Rocky Beach Home for Children, an institution that failed in its purpose. Rev. is at present owner of a similar home in Lansing.

OLD SETTLER PASSES AWAY

Joseph Beaudoin died at his home in this city early Monday evening, aged 80 years. Deceased has resided in Charlevoix about 30 years, but is one of the earliest of the pioneer settlers, having lived on Beaver island from the time of the Mormon exodus.

Besides a wife, he leaves four children—Bert of this city; Charles, of Manistique; Mrs. Nellie Corbett, of Cheboygan, and Mrs. Phil Beaudan, of Gloucester, Mass.

WHAT THE LOCAL PAPER DOES

Ex-Governor Francis once said the following of newspapers:

"Each year the local paper gives from $500 to $1,000 in free lines to the community in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The editor, in proportion to his means, does more for his town than any other human, and in all farmers he ought to be supported—not because you like him or admire his writing, but because the local paper is the best investment the community can make. It may not be brilliantly edited or crowded with thought, but the Herald does benefit to the community than the teacher or preacher. Understand me, I do not mean mentality and yet on moral questions you will find most of the papers on the right side. Today the editor of the local papers do the most for the least money of any people on earth."

The attempt to "recall" the city officials at Cadillac, at the late election resulted in failure, as it should. The matter started by disgruntled hangers-on who had lost their city jobs under the Commission's regime.

LARSEN-LYNGKLIP

At the pleasant home of Mrs. Karen Lyngklip at Ironton on Thursday, Nov. 12 occurred the marriage of her young daughter Miss Lillie, and Mr. Peter Larsen both of Eveline Twp. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mitchell. To strains of the wedding march rendered by Mrs. Wm. Meggison the bridal party entered the parlor where the Rev. Quinton Walker of the Charlevoix Methodist Church heard their vows which made them one for life. A sumptuous dinner was served to fifty guests. The presents were numerous and valuable.

The young people are held in high esteem by their many friends at Ironton who wish for them the best things in life.

CONGRESSMAN SCOTT MARRIED

According to advices from Santa Rosa, Cal., Frank D. Scott, of Alpena, newly elected congressman from this district, was married in Santa Rosa, Saturday evening, Nov. 7, to Miss Kina Craig James, of that city. The bride is a former well known Cheboygan young woman, having been raised and educated in that city. A few years ago she moved with her parents to Bay City where she became a trained nurse. Later she moved to Santa Rosa, Cal., where she has since resided.

VOSBURG-RUSSELL

Married at the M. E. Parsonage by Rev. Quinton Walker Thursday, Nov. 12, Mr. Walter Vosburg and Miss Edith Russell, both of Charlevoix. The young people will reside in this city.

TO CREAMERIES AND FARMERS

Special Bulletin No. 48 From the State Dairy and Food Department

The outbreak of the foot and mouth disease in Michigan, if it attacks the dairy herds of the state, promises untold and irreparable damage to the dairy industry. In Berrien County it was found that many herds of hogs were afflicted with the disease before any symptoms were shown by the cattle on the same farms. This was traced to the fact skim milk from creameries receiving whole milk, was sent back to the farms to be fed to the hogs. The milk from one infected herd sent to the creamery in turn thus infect the hogs of all the farmers sending milk to that creamery. The hogs would in turn infect the cattle.

Creameries are hereby warned NOT to send back to the farm any skim milk unless it is first pasturized as long as the disease prevails in the state.

Farmers are warned NOT to feed skim milk to their hogs that come from any creamery unless it has first been heated to the boiling point.

The wide-spread prevalence of this disease caused by the shipment of feeding cattle from Chicago makes all points in the Lower Peninsula dangerous if skim milk is fed to hogs. The same argument applies to whey returned from cheese factories.

Compliance with these regulations until the disease is stamped out, is of the utmost importance to the creamery and the cheese factories of the state and their patrons if the dairy herds are to escape the frightful ravages of this disease.

EDUCATIONAL

Some things are too good to keep.

The Dictionary Club, of Charlevoix, have been having some work that is too good to keep and should be given wider bearing.

The topics concern the school and are of vital interest to all people who are parents and especially to the mothers of the community. On consultation with the Superintendent, H. A. Craig, arrangements have been made to have a public meeting in the high school Saturday afternoon, Nov. 21, at 2:30 o'clock. At this time a paper will be given entitled, "Making for Citizenship," and several other topics of interest will be discussed. Come and get in touch with some of the important problems in the educational world today.

If this step meets with the approval of enough people and sufficient interest is taken it will be made a permanent feature. All people interested in the schools of Charlevoix are invited and special invitation is given to the mothers of Charlevoix.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet Friday evening, Nov. 20th, with Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Harsha. Following is the program:

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it.

This is hardly fair to yourself; after you work for your money, it will repay the compliment by working for you if you put it to the opportunity.

Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business whom you are prone to envy, thinking they have a mysterious Midas touch. Almost without exception they began with no capital but the habit of saving for a purpose.

For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.50 a week. In six years he had banked $2500—enough to start a modest business of his own. RODAY—Pack your money.

FROM THE TIN BOX

By ALVAH JORDON GARTH.

(Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Not a friend in the world" said Rufus Deane, desolately, at six o'clock in the morning.

"A sense of comfort and true hearts to cherish me," he added that same evening.

For years he had lived alone, occupying a wretched room, with a poor family in the slums. Long since he had lost the use of both his lower limbs. He had been confined to the one apartment his wants attended to by his landlord, but living in the most narrow way. Somehow he managed to scrape up the few dollars required to pay for board and keep each Saturday night.

Then that day there had come to his lonely habitation a pretty, neat, but plainly dressed young girl.

"I am Rhoda Leslie," she said. "I was Rhoda Merrill. Do you remember the case?"

"Merrill!" repeated Mr. Deane. "I ought to! It was the first job I had, friend, Robert Merrill."

"My father," said Rhoda, and her eyes were filled with tears as she noted the helpless condition of this once proud and wealthy man. "He never forgot, and I never will! I thought you in another country."

"And I was only yesterday that I learned about you—poor, an invalid, friendless. Oh, sir!" and her eyes expressed the genuine love and gratitude she felt. "It seemed that I could not come quite enough to your side. You did everything for my father when he was alive. He told me that it was your money that kept me at boarding school for two years. He did everything to you. See, sir, I am the remark than to feel that his gratitude well repaid them for their exertions.

Then came dark days. Ernest Leslie lost his position. It had come about through the firm employing him learning of his negotiations for a little store. Then fell through because he could not arrange for the payments required.

One month, two months, passed by and Ernest found no work. Bravely, however, the devoted pair saw to it that their honored guest, the old manuscript, never suspected their real condition. They denied themselves every luxury. All they had to support themselves with was what Rhoda earned by some fine sewing, and a baby was coming, too.

The old man never surmised how hard the shoe of poverty was pinching until one morning and then quite accidentally. Under the kind ministrations of Rhoda and her husband, good food and sanitary surroundings, Mr. Deane had got so that he could move slowly about the room. As he neared the open doorway that especial morning he was amazed and then startled at a conversation going on below.

Rhoda was pleading with the landlord of the place for a respite of another week on rent payment. Hard-hearted creditor twisted now with keeping a lazy border, not even a relative, upstairs. Amid her tearful emotion Rhoda told of the love and duty they felt towards her former benefactor.

"The rent tomorrow, or out into the street!" the man heard the implacable landlord.

"The coarse scoundrel—my poor, little Rhoda!" raved Deane, and hobbled to a corner of the room, pulled open the top of his old trunk, and after rumbling over its contents, brought into view a well-worn purse. Then with this he stumbled to the head of the stairs.

He could hear Rhoda sobbing bitterly. He could catch the rough consoling words of the landlord. He moved forward. A scream rang from Rhoda's lips and her creditor dared stay. As Mr. Deane lost his balance and came rolling down the stairs—the big box came down with a slam and he on top of it. Remarkably active was the old man. Excitement overcome his crippling energy. He sat up shaking his fist at the landlord.

"You insolent ruffian!" he shouted. "Rhoda, my dear, pay this man all up, and about if he wants it and he's better keep out of my way, after scaring you in this way to his!"

And Mr. Deane opened the box and took out a roll of bills, and twelve hundred dollars was a more valuable seeming document.

Yours, Rhoda!" said tendering Rhoda the box as the landlord retired—"you brave, unselfish dear! I never suspected that you were poor, and kept silent about the little fortune I had. It all yours, now."

And Ernest Leslie got his little store, and Rufus Deane lived to live very dearly shared the luxuries of life with him.

Beaded Apron Tunic in a Party Gown

SUCH a pretty party gown, in which one of these beaded garnitures is featured, is shown here. The bodice and apron-tunic, of beaded net, is a new development of the ready-made bodice and tunic affairs that have so delightfully helped out in the making of evening gowns. The straight-hanging front, with frill of lace falling below the waist line, is the most up-to-date of style touches just now fashion does nothing to the waist line but ignore it. She would like to have all her devotees forget it, and a great number of them do.

The dress is of crepe de chine made with straight-hanging skirt with some drapery near the bottom where the left side vanishes under a hemmed bias edge at the right. The bodice is the simplest imaginable, a "baby waist"—that is, a plain gathered front and back with short plain sleeves. It is merely a foundation and background for the beaded bodice of the tunic.

The sleeves are finished with a narrow spangled band like that at the side of the apron-tunic.

The bodice and tunic covers the underbody back and front. A narrow fringe of beads outlines the short sleeves. At the back the bodice may be finished with a girdle or the frill of lace, somewhat scanty in fullness, may be extended around the figure. A fair result of beads finishes each side of the tunic at the bottom.

These beaded garments are shown in all the light colors and in black. Black and silver and black and gold on black are among the shades. Gold or silver with gold spangles and beads is in high favor. The tunic and dress match in color, as a rule.

The small corsage bouquet of satin roses worn at one side of the lace frill is a detail that should not be overlooked. It is much more than a detail in the costume.

ORGAN GRINDER'S DAY

HARVEST REAPED BY WASHINGTON STREET MUSICIAN.

Story From the Capital Concerning French and German Ambassadors is a Good One, Though It Is Not Official.

It was before the war came in grim earnest, of course, but here in the form in which it perhaps is respectable old story used to be told over the cigars at Washington. When the governments of France and Germany were merely barking at each other across the conference table, it happened one day that an Italian organ grinder, strolling along the stretch of Washington, planted his instrument of torture on the curb in front of the German legation and began grinding out the Marseillaise.

The minister of France's great national air fell upon the ears of the German ambassador. Count Bernstorff, as he sat within, deep in the diplomatic passions of his office, and a frown overspread his brow, for the Germans, though a music-loving people, love not the lure of the Marseillaise. However, he passed the incident, as a momentary annoyance, and buried himself deeper in his work.

When the musician, having reached the end of the Marseillaise, proceeded to adjust his machine and play it over again, the ambassador grew restless. And when the third round began, Count Bernstorff's patience broke under the strain. Hammering upon his call bell, he summoned an attendant.

"Go you and drive that fellow from the block!" he commanded, and was turning again to his work when a bright idea flashed upon him. "Here, wait a moment," he called, and, drawing a coin from his pocket, gave this servant some instructions along with the money.

The valet, swiftly making his way to the street, addressed the organ grinder.

"Can you play 'Die Wacht am Rhein?'" he asked.

"Yes, sure, Mike, I play him," replied the son of Italy, the idea falling on fertile soil.

"Two you know where Monsieur Jusserand, the French ambassador, lives?" now queried the servant.

"Yes, yes, sure, Mike, I know," responded the dago.

"Well, here's a half-dollar," said the servant, handing him the coin, "I want you to go up to Ambassador Jusserand's house and play 'Die Wacht am Rhein' for 15 minutes without stopping. Understand?

"Yes, yes, sure, Mike," exclaimed the dago eagerly, and, slinging his organ across his back, as he prepared to move on, added proudly:

"Today, beeg day, today I make a beeg score. I play at Jusserand's just now he give me one dollar to come here and play the Marseillaise for 15 minutes."—New York Evening Post.

The Dam Bill.

It was a legislative field day in the house, and a call for a quorum had been sent forth. Wearily the members dragged themselves forth from the cool home shades to the heat of a summer day. And as one congressman came out of doors and heard the question, "Is the dam bill up?" was overheard by a visitor who had come from the country to see his congressman. I must hasten to add that the country man was from Idaho and knew what he was talking about. The congressman, hurrying on to the capitol, heard the question, "Is the dam bill up?" Hurrying on to the house and pay "the Watch at the Rhein" for 15 minutes without stopping. Understand?

"Yes, yes, sure, Mike," exclaimed the dago eagerly, and, slinging his organ across his back, as he prepared to move on, added proudly:

"Today, beeg day, today I make a beeg score. I play at Jusserand's just now he give me one dollar to come here and play the Marseillaise for 15 minutes."—New York Evening Post.

SHORT AND SIMPLE GOOD-BYS

German Farmer's Farewell to Only Son and to His Horses Was Trial of a Patriot.

Going to war in the case of at least one of the belligerents was a very simple thing. And here is the proof of it compactly given in the Kansas City Star: "Gaffer Breitenscheer had one son and one horse. Yesterday the same and took away his son for the war. The good-bys were said at the gate. They were confoundedly short good-bys. Gaffer Breitenscheer wasted no words. He clapped his son on the shoulder. 'Do your duty,' he said —no more. And his son was even a trifle shorter about it. He said nothing at all. He simply looked at his father. But what a look! And then he swung off at a trot and was gone.

"That was yesterday. Today they came and fetched away Gaffer Breitenscheer's horse—for the war. The parting again was at the gate. And it was confoundedly short. Gaffer Breitenscheer wasted no words. He clapped his horse on the shoulder. 'Do your duty,' said he—no more. And the horse was a trifle shorter about it still. He merely looked at Gaffer Breitenscheer. And then he swung off at a trot and was gone."—New York Evening Post.

ITCHING BURNING ECZEMA

R. F. D. No. 2, Caldwell, Ohio.—"When our baby was about two months old she broke out over her body, face and head with eczema. It was bad, about as thick as it could be. It broke out in a kind of pimples. They spread and had white scales. She was very cross and restless. The eczema would itch and burn till she could not sleep. It looked very badly and would peel off when the places were. Her clothes would irritate the eruption.

"We gave her medicine, but it did not do any good. We had heard about Cuticura Soap and Ointment so we sent for a sample and it was not very long till she was better. I bought some more Cuticura Soap and Ointment which cured her completely." (Signed) H. E. Smith, Mar. 31, 1914.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

A double spendthrift is one who wastes both his time and his money.

A Pious Hypocrite.

Senator Cummins was talking about a notorious interlocking director, relates the Kansas City Star.

"This interlocking directorate," he said, "declares that if we curb his activities the poor will suffer terribly. I ask myself, though, is he really speaking in behalf of the poor or on his own behalf.

"He reminds me of a man who stopped in terrific indignation at sight of a group of boys stoning a bird that was tied to a tree by the leg.

"'You scoundrels! You pitiless scoundrels!' cried the man.

"And he took the bird up in his hand and placed it in his bosom tenderly.

"The next day at the office he was heard to remark with a chuckle:

"'Some people seem to get in a sticky over the yellow peril.'

"Yes, in a regular blue funk."

In the Footsteps of St. Paul

THE rapid development of Asia Minor will undoubtedly do much to awaken public interest in this wonderful land, and, what is more, call attention to those old cities made famous in Holy Writ through their association with St. Paul.

Indeed, was not the apostle to the gentiles born at Tarsus, one of his principal cities? Then was it not to the cities and peoples of this little-known but nevertheless glorious land that St. Paul made long and laborious journeys, enduring great hardships and perils in order that he might preach the Gospel? Here, too, were founded the earliest of the Christian churches.

Although Asia Minor—that great tract of land, 275,000 square miles in extent, which jots out from the continent of Asia like an arm towards Europe—was the scene of St. Paul's great labors, it is virtually a closed book to us. We know less about its ancient cities, its wonderful peoples and their strange customs, than we do about those of any other land. It might well be described as one of the least "explored" sections of the globe so far as the ordinary traveler is concerned. No one ever thinks of visiting it, for the simple reason that traveling in the country has been so difficult, and in parts even dangerous. This is all the more remarkable when we remember the part its cities have played not only in the early history of the world but in the history of Christianity, and how that for nigh upon three centuries it was the seat of the Roman world

Are you going to need a new Heating Stove this winter? Now is the time to investigate the merits of the several different makes that may be offered for sale. We will agree that there is a great many real good stoves, in fact they are most all good—but some are better—for instance the BECKWITH line known as

The Round Oaks.

We have them and think that if you will investigate their merits you will agree with us that they are the best.

NAVAL GUN CREWS

Warm Work Is Theirs When a Warship Is In Action.

RANGE FINDING AND FIRING.

How the Target or the Enemy Is Located and the Way the Monster Guns Are Operated—The Scene in the Conning Tower and in the Turrets.

The gray battleship seems strangely deserted out here, for her decks are denuded of men, while all rails and other upstanding circumstances have been laid flat on deck for big gun practice.

In the conning tower, with its twelve inch armor, stands the captain, the navigating officer, a midshipman or two and several other officers and men. The small circular erection, barely ten feet in diameter, seems very cramped for all it has to contain.

Above the conning tower is another armored structure, containing a range finder and sends like to the gunnery lieutenant, with half a dozen more officers and men. He is surrounded by strange looking instruments, while the man at the range-finder, with his eyes at its rubber eyepieces, is monotonously chanting out the distance of the approaching target.

Inside the turrets themselves the atmosphere and are grouped around their monster thirteen inch guns. The great projectile and the cordite charges behind them have already been pushed home by the hydraulic rammers and since their weapons are thus fully loaded, the guns' crews are idle for the time being.

But the gun layers—the men who aim and fire the guns—and the trainers—those who keep them pointing in the right direction—are anxiously keeping the sights on the target, and every now and then, as they move their small brass handles, there is a wheezing of hydraulic machinery, and the great breeches rise and fall ever so slightly, while the whole armored structure containing their revolves on iron or so at a time to keep the sights on.

A minute or two later, after an order has come through from the control position, the lieutenant in charge of the foremost turret suddenly rips out the order, "Bring both guns to the ready!"

The men standing by the breeches click over their small levers. "Right gun ready! Left gun ready!" they report in rapid succession.

The range meanwhile is decreasing rapidly, and about ten seconds later there comes the strident rattling of an electric bell.

It is the signal to open fire. The gunlayer holds his breath, sees the crosswires of his telescope cutting the fireworks of the target, and then presses an innocent looking brass thumb piece. At the door so there is a roar, and, with a cloud of cinders flame and a puff of brown smoke, a projectile weighing more than half a ton is hitting through the air on its way toward the target.

Meanwhile the turret the corresponding terrible, but inside it is barely felt, and the only means the gun's crew have of knowing their weapon has gone off is by the rocking of the turret and the recoil of the gun. Back she slides with the water whistling and gurgling through the hydraulic valves for her. She stops and then, as the spring out springs exert their strength, she creeps back to the firing position.

The men meanwhile are working like demons. Some one, by moving a small lever which actuates a hydraulic engine, has opened the breech. A cloud of acrid smoke rushes into the turret, but another man, turning a tap, sends a jet of water scorning into the chamber to extinguish any still burning fragments.

Everything seems chaos, but every one knows what to do—he has done it time after time—and in less than thirty seconds we hear a sharp order, "Right gun, load!"

A man moves an upright lever, and an arrangement looking like a miniature lift climbs into view through the floor. It has come up from the shell room below laden with the new charge and projectile and stops dead in the rear of the gun.

Reposing in a tray is the shot itself. Another lever is working, and a flexible chain hydraulic rammer, looking like a snake, darts out of its resting place and pushes the shot before it into the breech of the gun.

It is driven home with a dull thud. The rammer is withdrawn, another handle is pulled and two enormous brown cylinders of cordite fall into the tray just vacated by the projectile. They, too, are rammed home, and before we quite realize what has happened the rammer and lift have disappeared, the breech of the gun has been swung home and the great weapon is ready for firing.

In the fire control position the gunnery lieutenant has seen the first shot tear a jagged hole in the target and promptly whispers an order to a man at his side. The latter moves a small handle, and thirty seconds later there is another discharge.

In about ten minutes it is all over and the ship is approaching the target to see the result of her shooting.—London Answers.

FOR KEEPING BLOSSOMS.

How to Use Test Tubes For Flower Holders.

One of the useful ideas gleaned recently from the study of a beautifully arranged florist's window was the possibilities of test tubes as flower holders. These were glued at each side of the handle of a basket of flowers and were tied in place with narrow ribbons of same ribbon and almost concealed by the many loops bows. The ribbon was the palest blue and in each test tube were a single full blown pink rose and a few leaves.

The depth of the water allowed by these test tubes makes it possible to keep flowers in them fresh for a long time, while the effect is the same as though the loose flowers were held by the ribbons. Short test tubes can be used in candlesticks with good results provided the socket for the candle is deep enough to hold the tube firmly in place.

For a table decoration four glass candlesticks, each with a test tube holding one or two long stemmed blossoms, the space between the candle sticks festooned with some ribbon harmonizing with the general color scheme, make one of the prettiest arrangements at the minimum cost and trouble. This idea was borrowed from a florist's window and it never fails to be commented on by guests who see it for the first time.

Fashionable flower test tubes are cheap, costing anywhere from 1 cent to 10 cents apiece, according to size. The carving rim makes it possible to hang them almost anywhere by means of a hairy thread, and when a plant has ceased blooming it is an easy matter to introduce fluted blossoms in these glass tubes, thus prolonging the beauty of the plant.

HOW TO PRESERVE POISE AND BEAUTY.

When the eyes are tired and dulled, as after motoring, use either an eye lotion bath or one made of water to which a little boric powder or witch hazel has been added. Keep the eyes open in the water. This bath invigorates and brightens them.

Knitting the brows when reading or sewing is a habit certain to produce disfiguring lines on the face.

A good authority says that bending and fencing are not good exercises for brain workers. They should select long walks, swimming or something of a similar nature where, after the muscle movements are performed, the effects are generated by the spinal nervous system.

The following antifragrant lotion is one of the best that can be find. One and one-half ounces of witch hazel, one-half ounce of infusion of benzoin, one ounce spirits of wine and five ounces of orange flower water.

Many women allow their faces to become tense and set and then wonder why lines develop. Drill the muscles, cultivate a pleasant expression and remember that lips which curve upward and smile are much more attractive than the downward set.

Hot hands may be made comfortable and flexible by wetting them once or twice a day with dilute vinegar.

FOOD VALUES.

How to Get the Best Results by Balancing One's Diet.

"Bun and eggs, a glass of milk, a piece of custard pie with cheese." This order goes forth and only some hundreds of times daily in our restaurant, from luncheon time.

In the two rooms another order goes forth frequently, "Pill have some wurst and beer, a cup of chocolate and a French pastry."

These meals are all wrong, and a further glance at them will show why. Here we have the business man order big eggs, meat, milk, custard and cheese. The free and most important foods of the same class—protein. In other words, he is taking the same kind of food in five different forms, and his meal therefore is really only one kind of food taken ad libitum. His wife in the tea room sits waffles, soup, chocolate and pastry. Again four different forms of the same kind of food, so that her meal is all starch, sugar and fat.

Now, no meals so one sided can be healthful. A hasty glance would perhaps lead us to believe that the man's lunch was more wholesome than the woman's, but both are dietetically bad.

The ideal meal is composed of four different elements—the protein or muscle forming, the sugar, starch or fat forming, the fat or heat forming and the mineral elements which add flavor, refreshment and tonic qualities. The "balanced" meal must have some of each of the four qualities represented in the foods which compose it. In this way all the needs of the body are supplied by every meal, and no one food is oversupplied.

If we had taken the eggs from the first lunch and added them to the waffle of the second, and put in a vegetable or fruit salad we would have had a nearly perfect meal. From the eggs there are protein, the waffles give starch and fat, and the vegetable or fruit would give the necessary water and dayorful qualities to make the meal satisfying, energy producing and refreshing.

It is exceedingly simple to plan home meals or to choose meals from a bill of fare after the balanced plan. Select one food from each of the four groups or such combinations that will give the four different food qualities. Here are some wrong combinations:

Eggs, meat, cheese, milk (too much protein), rice, spaghetti, bread (too much starch), fried potatoes, doughnuts, croquettes (too much starch and fat), waffles, chocolate, cake, pastry (too much sugar and fat), vegetable salad, baked apple, vegetable soup (too much water and mineral).

Here are the same foods in correct combinations: Vegetable soup, eggs, pastry; meat, vegetable salad, dough-nuts, cheese, rice, cake; milk, spaghetti, baked apple.

How to Make the Marble Table Top Useful.

Lucky is the housewife who has sent her marble top table to the attic in place of the secondhand store, for she can find good use for it. No better molding board was ever made than this marble slab. Place it near the baking materials, where no needless steps may be taken, and the baking will be a source of comfort. It will also be a saving and a conference for setting hot things when taken from the stove. In keeping the marble clean there is no scrubbing with a brush, for a washing of hot water and soap will thoroughly cleanse it.

WOOD AND METAL AND MUSIC.

A Theory Born of the Patter of the Raindrops on the Roof.

Bruce Mittelbarger, the German musician, while sleeping under a roof of cedar shingles in Philadelphia, in 1754, was entranced with the lullaby produced by raindrops falling on the shingles, until the present time, wood has held an indisputable place in the manufactory of musical instruments. Mittelburger's first work under his theory that wood was more musical than metal was when he built a pipe organ—the first in America—with the pipes of southern white cedar, the same wood which had charmed his ear while he listened to the rain on the roof.

The superlative quality of spruce as material for sounding boards is due to the long, straight, regular fibers of which the wood is composed. The microscope reveals what the naked eye cannot see. The minute cells forming the wood are extremely long—full one hundred times as long as their diameter measurement—and each cell or fiber is stretched like a taut string. Although those cells, all lying lengthwise of the wood, are packed and stretched closely, side by side, there is room for vibration when they are struck.

All woods possess this quality or resonance, but in vastly different degrees. Some are dull and nearly dead, others emit tones quick and sharp, and still others give one sounds that continue a long time and gradually die away as if vanishing in the distance. Spruce is of the latter kind.

Wood possesses resonance, metal has ring. That may not wholly conform to dictionary definitions, but it classifies the two materials pretty accurately. The singing of a tightly stretched telephone wire across an open field in the autumn wind is a most pleasing melody to one who has an ear for the delicacy of the simpler sounds. But how much softer and melodious that singing wire becomes if the ear is pressed against the telephone pole so that the vibrations come through the wood to reach the ear, instead of directly from the wire.—Hardwood Record.

LUCK IN A BLUNDER.

A Story of Frederick the Great and a Frightened Ensign.

During the last evening of my stay at Friedrichsruhe Bismarck was at his best. He was in excellent spirits. After dinner we lit pipes and well filled tankards of beer were handy. The prince seated himself in his long armchair, put his feet upon a leg rest, and evidently he was settled down for a good talk.

He asked me what I should like him to relate. I said, "Pray sir, tell me any story that comes into your head." Puffing vigorously at his pipe, the following story was slowly developed:

"My grandfather served for three years under Frederick the Great and told me this anecdote: An ensign made a blunder during the maneuvers of troops at review. The king, as was his wont when annoyed, fell into a violent rage and pursued the terrified ensign, stick in hand. The young soldier ran for very life and jumped a ditch leaving the king upon the other side shouting the stick at him in a fury.

"Shortly after the escape of the ensign the colonel of the regiment came up to the king and said, 'Your majesty, the young man committed a blunder, doubtless. I have just received his resignation from your majesty's service, placing the document into the king's hands. 'I am sorry for it, for he was a good officer, but he can take no other step under the circumstances.'

"The king answered 'Send him to me.' The ensign was sent for and came, trembling, but this time the stripes shoulder in readily fell upon his shoulders or, still worse, he might be sent to prison. Without any preface the king replied, 'Here is your captain cy, sir, which I endeavored to give you this morning, but you ran away so swiftly that my old legs could not catch you up.'"—Sir W. H. Richmond in North American Review.

Origin of Gibraltar.

The "tar" in Gibraltar is a contraction of Tark or Tarif, the name of a famous pirate of medieval times. The whole word may be translated as "monsieur or cliff of Tark." This same root "tar" occurs in the word "tariff." Tark after a time came to mean a sea-rover or pirate, and tariff instead of robbing them outright, in the way our word "tariff" and its origin. It is interesting to note also that this rubber was further honored by having the town of Tarifa, near Gibraltar, named for him.—Detroit Journal.

It Really Does Relieve Rheumatism everybody who is afflicted with Rheumatism in any form should by all means keep a bottle of Sloan's Liniment on hand. The minute you feel pain or soreness in a joint or muscle, bathe it with Sloan's Liniment. Do not rub it. Sloan's penetrates almost immediately right to the seat of pain, relieving the hot, tender, swollen feeling and making the part easy and comfortable. Get a bottle of Sloan's Liniment for 25 cents of any druggist and have it in the house—against colds, sore and swollen joints, rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica and like ailments. Your money back if not satisfied, but it does give almost instant relief.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "THE RACE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweet heart Cindy Walker, sets out to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt, his father, opposes the boy's dream to see a great town. At Bendigo he meets Jim Whiting, a gambler, and Thomas Brady, head of the Quinby iron works. Mark's father dies and the boy's ambition grows. He is helped to Bendigo by Quinby, who is judge in Bendigo, becomes a boarder in Brady's home and meets Brady's daughter, Jessie. Mark's ability is noticed by a manager in Quinby's iron works and he is promoted to the furnace room of the furnace owned by Brady and Quinby. Jessie visits Mark's room in his boarding house. Mark goes to his job. Bonnie resents this and tells Mark to get another, which he does. Mark meets Whiting and is introduced to Bonnie. Mark goes to his relatives in Ironville and meets Helen. He finds Cindy about to marry another man. Mark goes back to Bendigo and Helen visits him. Mark plays regularly in wealth and society and neglects his job. Quinby discovers that his wife makes Mark welcome at his home. Mark's job is given to another man. Mark's friends desert him. Bonnie, Helen, Whiting, Quinby and Brady are seen playing poker together. Mark, now down and out, is thrown out of a gambling house by Whiting. Mark goes to his room and finds Cindy waiting for him. Cindy's father has died and she has come to Bendigo to be near Mark. Mark's friends rally to him and he is given his job back. Mark's friends desert him. Mark's fortune is made by Whiting. Mark meets Helen and Cindy. Mark's fortune is made by Whiting. Mark meets Helen and Cindy. Mark's fortune is made by Whiting. Mark meets Helen and Cindy

How to Make a Useful Knife and Scissors Sharpener.

There is nothing more useful in the kitchen than a hand operated with a easy power. It is needed for sharpening knives and scissors and useful to reinforce rust from steel knives and forks. Get a board six inches long, two inches wide and one thick. Cover with emery cloth. This puts a smooth edge on carving knives the same as a razor.

Ways of Iceland.

There are no trades or guilds in Iceland, every one being compelled to depend upon his own skill for his supplies. The natives make their own shoes, shoe their own horses, and manufacture their saddles. A few artisans are found in the capital—for example a bookbinder, a jeweler and others.

A gentleman closely identified with the commercial fishing industry has figured it out that the fall catch in Charlevoix and Island waters will aggregate 400 tons.

According to the report of the United States department of agriculture Michigan farmers produced 3,001,000 tons of cultivated hay during 1914. The yield last year was 2,520,000. The yield per acre this season is 1.28 tons, and the quality is one per cent better than the average crop for the past ten years.

The Western Union Telegraph company announces that beginning Dec. 1 an additional charge of 1 cent will be tacked upon all messages to meet the war revenue tax. This 1-cent tax will go upon day and night messages, day and night letters, cablegrams, press messages, transfer messages and forwarded messages.

While the freighter Lackawanna was bound homes Mr. Green the first mate, fell through an open hatch into the empty hold, receiving internal injuries from which he died the following morning. No one saw the accident; one of the crew in passing saw the officer lying on the boat's bottom. He was speechless to the time of his death.

No attempt will be made to obtain passage of a state wide prohibition law by the next legislature. This was the announcement made by Grant Hudson, state superintendent. Mr. Hudson asserted that the dry forces will have a big majority in the new legislature. He announced that the enactment of a law to prohibit clubs and fraternal organizations for maintaining bars while operating solely under government license will be sought by the league forces.

Chaplain Lougher, a champion of the men of the underworld, will lecture in the Methodist Church Nov. 25 on the "Outcasts of the World." Senator Townsend represents him as equal to Captain Hobson as an orator. He has no superior on the American platform. He speaks with a throbbing enthusiasm and with a statesman's conception of his theme. This lecture is not primarily to make money but to instruct and enthuse people on this all-important subject. All students in the public school will be admitted for fifteen cents, others for twenty-five cents.

The longest and most fierce northwest gale of the fall season has prevailed for a week, with but short decreases in its force. Tuesday morning the wind registered forty miles per hour with low temperature. Navigation was confined to one day (Saturday,) when three fish tugs went out with exciting results. The big freighter Lackawanna, loaded with pig iron at East Jordan for Buffalo, came down Saturday night and laid in the harbor three days. The steamer Bennett has made but one land trip in a week. The fishing industry suffered a serious check.

In the midst of clamoring at the cost of living and, in fact, the cost of anything, it is learned that the lumber manufacturers of the country are offering their product today at a price lower than any that has been quoted during the last twenty years. Announcement to this effect is made by J. E. Rhodes, secretary of the National Lumber Manufacturers' association, from the headquarters of the association at Chicago. "Build now," is the message issued by Mr. Rhodes to those in all parts of the country who are contemplating the construction of anything in which wood is to play a part.

Capt. Pete Campbell's automobile is on the ways for the winter, and the general public breathes more freely. Whenever Capt. Pete had a day ashore the past summer, he got out with the thing, and, positively, he had to be watched. One day Capt. Pete was passing the Sentinel office in his car some, at about a three mile gait. The writer flew to the door, and, with both arms sawing the air, stopped the vehicle. Capt Pete stopped so quickly that his engine "went dead." "What is the matter?" asked Capt. Pete. "You are exceeding the speed limit," we replied. The language he used as he alighted and cranked up the machine was scandalous. One thing that we have vainly tried to impress upon Capt. Pete's mind is the fact that the condition of his master's navigation license do not apply to his automobile. From the commencement of the trouble you could not get Capt. Billy Finzean into Capt. Pete's car on a bet. He has been through too many nor'easters.

California has its pigeon ranch, Ohio has its goose farm, Missouri has its skunk farm and Michigan has its arctic blue fox ranch. Michigan's fox ranch is for the raising of only arctic blue foxes, the most valuable kind, has been in existence only a few weeks and it is under the supervision of H. H. Chase, formerly of Cadillac, and is located on the banks of Bear lake at Bear Lake. The ranch and the foxes are the property of the Pioneer Fur Farming company of St Louis, Mo. The first arctic blue foxes ever brought to this country for breeding purposes came to Bear Lake a few weeks ago from the United States government reserves on the Pribofof islands. They were seven in number, but the farm soon will be inhabited by about ten times that number, as another large shipment is expected soon. The pelts of the arctic blue fox are valued at about $50 providing they are from captive foxes. The fox ranch at Bear Lake consists of an acre of land, inclosed by an eight-foot high board fence, surmounted by strands of barbed wire to keep out possible invaders. In the center wire pens or cages for the captive foxes are erected and each cage is about 20x50. Wire is placed in the bottom of the cages to keep the foxes from digging to freedom.

Petoskey Daily News: Two well known boys were fined themselves about several dollars over the amount they planned to spend for their hunting trip because they were not faithful with the boundary lines of their own (limest) county. The men were asked to join a party of hunters going to the upper peninsula but said they could not afford to go. They decided the trip would cost. Wishing to spend a few days in the woods, however, they secured a tent and camping outfit at about half the cost of the upper peninsula trip, and finding a dicky looking spot over Clarion more from home of game small game was plentiful, pitched their tent and made things comfortable for a stay of a week or ten days. Not being familiar with the south boundary of Emmet county they chose a spot for tent and hunting ground just across the line in Charlevoix county. They had secured several partridges, rabbits, etc., and were congratulating themselves on their fine luck when along came a game warden and the two Petoskeys were were "plinched" for hunting out of their home county without a license. After settling with the game warden and paying for their outfit and other expenses they found that as far as sportsmen concerned they might have better gone to the north woods.

BURIED IN THE TRENCHES

It beats all how quiet the Colonel is since election.

The big shell that landed in his vicinity on Nov. 3d seems to have buried him in the trenches.

See "Outlook" for official communique.

LOST.—Between the telegraph office and Hotel Charlevoix, Tuesday, a pocket book. Liberal reward. Apply Sentinel.

FOR SALE—Large second-hand hard coal burner. Inquire at this office.

Boyne Citizen: At seven o'clock last evening two of Boyne City's young people were united in marriage at the Presbyterian church, Rev. J. M. Gleason officiating. Paul Bailey, son of George Bailey, a pioneer resident of the city, became the husband and protector for life of Arlesyn Alexander daughter of Wm. Alexander, well known and highly respected citizen.

Central Lake Torch: Clarence Harris of Eastport, suffered a stroke of apoplexy Wednesday of last week, and passed away Monday at 1:30 p. m. He was sixty-four years old. He leaves a wife and three daughters; Mrs. Arthur Williams of Petoskey, Mrs. Don Burgess of Conway, Wis., and Mrs Vern Pilkington of Grand Rapids; also a brother, Frank Harris of Charlevoix.

Petoskey News: Dean Scroggie, a well known farmer living near Bay Shore, is reported severely ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. Masten, at Walloon Lake. He went there a few days ago for a visit and was taken ill. His sister, Mrs. William Gray, of Bay Shore, passed through Petoskey Wednesday enroute to Walloon Lake, where she will assist in caring for him.

Eugene Atwood, of Bay Shore, is reported to have lost two hundred dollars in money in the fire which destroyed the Bay Side Inn recently. He had secured the money to use in purchasing potatoes for shipment and after supper locked the money in his dresser drawer and went to the pavilion. When the building caught fire he was unable to reach his room to recover the money.

Traverse City Record: Hon. D. S. Payne, county treasurer of Charlevoix county, brought checks to the city yesterday amounting to $500, this representing the appropriation made by the Charlevoix Supervisors at their October session to the program of development. There are many acres of good land in Charlevoix county and the people of this county are anxious to secure settlers.

Boyne Citizen: At the regular meeting of the council last night a resolution was adopted to be presented to the Supervisors asking that the corporate limits of Boyne City be reduced to the extent of sixteen "forties." The resolution met with unanimous support and will be presented to the supervisors in three weeks. A copy of the same will be found in the minutes of the meeting in Friday's paper. This step will save the city thousands of dollars and enable the "City of Opportunity" to greatly improve needed sections.

East Jordan Enterprise: The hunting party consisting of Messrs. Mollard, Glenn, Dickens, Cameron, Hipp, Mums and Crago have returned from the upper peninsula and report a great trip and lots of experience. They had disposed of their forest camp and made a new one about 27 miles from a railroad, on a stream, at a place reached by boat. They secured nine deer. Messrs. Mollard, Hipp and Crago each getting two, and Cameron, Dickens and Mums one each. But when ready to come out they found themselves frozen in from getting out by boat, and they had to walk twenty-seven miles, in fifteen inches of snow to get to a railroad, and in the whole distance passed but a single house. Mr. Mums remained behind to bring out the camp equipage as soon as he can get means to transport it. There were other parties there caught in the same predicament.

Harbor Springs Inquisitions: Joseph Nagamaka, better known as "Captain Joe," died Tuesday morning at the home of his son-in-law, Alphonse, in Indian town. His age is said to have been over 82 years, and his whole life has been spent in the Little Traverse Bay region. In his earlier years he was looked upon as one of the most expert of his race as a hunter and fisherman. When tourists first began to visit this section Joe's skill in managing sail boats soon became widely known among the visitors and his services were in great demand. The old style "Mackinaw" then was the common form of craft used in these waters and some could sail a "Mackinaw" better than "Captain Joe." Visitors felt safe in making a trip to any point in this region when Joe had charge of the boat. The art of canoe making learned when a boy was turned to good account when the hardships of early life began to make inroads on Joe's iron frame. When he had to give up his usual occupations he began to make the miniature canoes of elm bark which for years were in great demand as souvenirs of a trip to Little Traverse Bay resorts, and there always was a ready market for the product of his skill. His home for many years has been at Seven Mile Point where his relatives still live. Nagamaka's life linked the early history of Emmet county with the present, and his death removes one of the most interesting and respected representatives of his race.

MARINE NOTES

The lumber laden steambarge Philetus Sawyer, Capt. Anderson, was windbound here Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

The Beaver Island tug McCann came over Saturday with four tons of fish, returning home Saturday night in the terrific northwest gale.

The fishing tugs Arthur and Fisherman, which have been operating here this fall for the Lake Superior Fish Co., of Chicago, left for Cheboygan Tuesday.

The steambarge S. M. Stevenson, Capt. James Sanford, in tow with a cargo of coal for the Coal & Wood Co., and will go into winter quarters in Charlevoix, where is now her home port.

Capt. E. N. Emery, of Old Mission, has bought the little steamer Lena Knobloch, which has been out of commission at this port for the past two years. She will be transformed into a freight-barge for coasting and fruit trade.

The steamer Rising Sun, owned by the House of David, of Benton Harbor, and commanded by Capt. Wm. Stuffelbeam, arrived Saturday and loaded with general supplies for High Island, where the community has extensive lumbering and farming interests. The steamer will yet make another trip to the Island this season. The Rising Sun was formerly the Minnie M., on the Mackinac-Soo run.

The Booth gasoline fishing tug Cassinot, which left port Friday to raise her nets was enveloped in the nor'easter that roared in force on that day. She ran out of gasoline and drifted about at the mercy of a big sea, while month anxiety existed here concerning her safety. She turned up here all right Saturday, however. In her wanderings she drifted under the lee of Cathead, where she was found by the Arbutus which towed her into Northport, where she secured a supply of gasoline and came home in company with the Arbutus.

The storm Nov. 15, 16 and 17 was the worst in history on Little Traverse Bay. The breakwater at Petoskey, one of the most substantial on the lakes, was demolished from one end to the other, and after the storm presented a gazed and impassable appearance to travelers. Part of the breakwater deck was torn off and the end section of the structure already noticed in these columns, the fifty feet in the air presented a scene that never has been equaled here for grandeur and fury. These waves broke a large hole in the bay side of the pretty breakwater lighthouse, buried iron beams under water, washed the lighthouse supplies into the lake, extinguished the acetylene light and ruined the $300 lamp. The damage to the lighthouse alone reached $1,000. The lighthouse was built three years ago and had weathered previous severe fall storms without losing a spinter.

TO CORRECT FAULTY STATUTES

Recommendations which if followed, will tend to lessen the laws delay are embodied in the report of the committee appointed under an act of the last legislature to revise and consolidate the laws of the state.

Accompanying the report was a draft of a bill providing for the proposed changes, which will be submitted to the next legislature.

Marriage and divorce laws will be dealt with in a special report now in preparation. This report also will be accompanied by a bill which it is said will provide startling changes in the attitude of the law toward marital relations.

JUST ONE WORD MORE

Kalamazoo Germans are up in arms over an address delivered by President Samuel Dickie of Albion college. During the college president's address he was interrupted by Daniel Asch, a merchant, who said it looked as though the college man was in the pay of the English government.

"We Americans have been warned by our president to remain neutral in this matter," said Asch. "You are not, Mr. Dickie."

Asch left the hall in a rage. A number of Germans met to frame an answer to the address.

We suggest the answer in one word: Belgium!

St. Ignace Enterprise: J. B. Eddy, superintendent of the hatchery at the Soo passed through this city one day on his way to Torch Lake where he will engage fishermen to obtain white fish spawn from the inland waters. The department has been unable to secure its usual supply of spawn from the great lakes and will make an attempt at another income. There are several inland bodies of water to lower Michigan which are said to teem with whitefish owing to the fact that the law prohibits their netting and they cannot be taken by hook and line, and it is the think idea that the department will experiment.

THE NEW BEACH HOTEL

ENLARGED STRUCTURE TO BE ONE OF THE LARGEST HOTEL PROPOSITIONS IN NORTHERN MICHIGAN

Of Greatly Increased Capacity, New House Will Have Many New and Attractive Features

The excavations now being made for the Beach Hotel extension, and reaching from the street level to a point almost to the level of the lake, is the beginning of an enterprise that will make the house one of the largest, considering its numerous cottage annexes, of the summer hotels in Northern Michigan; indeed, in some features, it will surpass in size any of the Charlevoix hotels.

An idea that startles the on-looker is the extent of excavation, in which will will be built three floors below the level of the street. Four stories are to be raised above the street, making the extension a seven story structure. The lower floor is to practically open out upon the gravel beach, and it will contain shower baths and dressing rooms for beach bathers. An up-to-date hydraulic elevator will be installed, which will serve the seven floors.

On the first floor below the street level will be a casino, with stage and stage appliances, the room to be 31x62 feet in size. One of the features of the next floor above this will be a tea room. The new office, which will be much larger than the old one, will be further to the west, and the present office room will be used as an ordinary dining room for maids and children. A commodious ladies' parlor will adjoin the office.

The great feature of the improvement will be the dining room, which will be on the street level floor, and will be 32x118 feet in area. The lakeward end of this splendid room will be supplied with large windows the entire width, affording a magnificent view of the lake.

The enlargement will supply the house with an addition of dirty-four sleeping rooms, most of them with private baths and every modern convenience. The work involves many minor changes and improvements that are too numerous to mention in this article. Suffice it to say that when completed the Beach Hotel, which already enjoys a reputation second to none, will rank with the best of Michigan's summer hotels in capacity and excellence. As already noticed in these columns, the ground is already being broken for the erection of a large cottage for North Bridge street, which is virtually an extension of the large cottage annex capacity which forms the Beach Hotel summer community.

The plans and specifications were made by Hussstedt & Kneer, of Chicago. The Bakers expect to have the work completed in time for the opening of the 1915 season, and it goes without saying that the work gives employment to a large number of men.

THE LECTURE COURSE

The Weather Bureau predicts cold weather but the Charlevoix Entertainment and Lecture Course committee predicts a good lively and exceedingly interesting number on the Lecture Course beginning December 7th.

Rev George L. McNutt, at the opera house on that date, will give you something to think about besides the European War. He will tell you things you don't know, give you facts and plenty of them with good clean stories and jokes as a side issue.

Mr. McNutt is the dinner-pail man, with a big heart, a big brain and a big message. He is different and original in the book-home. His facts are not taken from books, neither are they what he has heard, but from experience and hard labor in the University of Hard Knocks. His subjects are many; his knowledge is broad and takes in all classes and conditions.

You can't afford to miss this great opportunity. Come and get in line with the rest. Develop an interest in regard to your fellow-workers. You will not be left out in the cold for he has a warm spot in his heart for all. His lecture will be a real treat and one that you won't forget, for his ideas stick like burrs. He only lectures one hour in low of his hand and his message won't be put away in your vest pocket to be forgotten.

Buy your ticket now. Better still, buy a season ticket and bear the whole course. You will never regret it.

Adult tickets $1.50; student tickets $1.00 for the course, sold by Lena Hagatt, Perry Kasso and Ward Gosell, who are canvassing the city.

This was written by Jennie Carey. All the members of English III class wrote on the same topic and Miss J. Carey's was one of the best.

WAR TAX LAW OF 1914 PASSED OCTOBER 22, 1914

Some things that affect the general public.

The War Tax Law of 1914 as passed by the legislature Oct. 22, 1914, has partly gone into effect on November 1, 1914, when certain business lines such as Tobacco Dealers, Theatres, Banks and Brokers, Liquor Dealers, Commission Merchants, and many other lines of business had to pay a Specific Tax during this month to the Collector of Internal Revenue according to the new law as enacted.

On December 1st it goes still further into effect and we mention herein only a few of the things that will be borne by the public by stamp tax and which is of general interest and everyone should be familiar with.

On goods shipped by freight or express by one consignor to one consignee on one bill of lading, per shipment, 1c. the stamp to be attached to the bill of lading by the shipper.

On All Promissory Notes, whether given to individuals, banks or otherwise on each $100, 2c. stamp to be placed upon the note by the party giving or signing such note.

On Insurance Policies:—On each $1.00 of premium or cent, 5c. stamps to be paid for by the assured or party in whose favor the policy is written.

On Deeds or Reality Transfers, Mortgages excepted, when consideration exceeds $100 and does not exceed $500, 50c. each additional $500 also 50c extra.

Telegrams and Telephone messages:—On each message over 15c, 1c; payable by person paying for message.

Favior car seats 1c.

There are many more things that require stamp tax but these are some of the general or ordinary matters that interest everyone. There is no requirement for stamps on bank checks or certificates as heretofore been in order when stamps were used, as the banks have been obliged to pay a special tax which is supposed to cover that feature.

Familiarize yourself with these new requirements as you will meet with them when you ship goods by freight or express, or when you sign notes or get insurance policies or use the telephone on long distance calls, etc. or telegraph. It may be inconvenient but it is law and we must love and obey.

EVERY INCH A MAN

Among the Emperors, Kings, Presidents, field marshals and generals whose names are conspicuous in the war bulletins, there is one man who ranks them all, and he is a King.

Albert of Belgium!

Every inch a man!

When the history of this war is written the name of Albert of Belgium will be writ large.

Etta Thayer and Cora Driggett are the house keepers this week.

The class had its first observation lesson in the training room, Thursday afternoon of last week. The purpose of the lesson was to study and observe the method of teaching reading to the primary children.

The class had a preliminary debate Monday afternoon of last week, the subject being, "Resolved that the Women of the United States should have the Franchise." Both sides presented very good arguments.

The Charlevoix Lecture and Entertainment Course is presenting unusually good features this season. Let normal class is working with the lecture course committee for the disposal of the tickets. Read about the course and don't forget to buy tickets of the normal students.

A card was received by Miss Hilose from Mrs. J. D. Hasey, of Lansing, formerly Miss Margaret Zoller, of this city, and a member of the normal class of '06. Mrs. Hasey sent her best wishes to the class.

CONTROL SCHOOLS

Board Can Suspend or Expel Pupils—Duty of Boards of Education Defined By Law of State

The Department of Public Instruction is often asked questions in regard to the suspension of pupils. The school law gives, to the district board the right to authorize or order the suspension or expulsion from the school of any pupil guilty of gross misdemeanor or persistent disobedience. In such such cases the teacher has the authority to suspend a pupil temporarily until the board can take action on the matter. The Supreme court has held that it is not necessary that a pupil be guilty of a criminal act before he can be suspended or expelled from school. He must be guilty of some malicious or willful act of disrespect to the school and the misconduct must be gross, something more than a petty or trivial offense against the rules or he must be persistent in his disobedience of the proper and reasonable rules and regulations of the school. A pupil cannot be expelled for careless act, no matter how negligent, if it is not willful or malicious.

BENEDICT XV to WORK a REVOLUTION at the VATICAN

CROWNING OF POPE BENEDICT

DELLA CHIESA was almost exiled from Rome to be the archbishop of Bologna because of his liberal views. When the time for the elevation to the cardinalate was delayed until last spring, also because it was thought this honor would be of Della Chiesa would be something gained by the Hammer and Sickle in the Italian Parliament. Della Chiesa has been known as identified with Rampolla in contrast to the policies of Pius X and Merry del Val.

And now Della Chiesa is Pope Benedict XV.

Truly it is the return of Rampolla in the spirit if not in the flesh.

In a thousand ways, some little and some big, a revolution will be wrought at the Vatican. Just to mention a minor matter—Pius X could converse in a modern tongue save Italian. Pontiffs had to talk through an interpreter on the rare occasions when they were received by his subjects. Besides Italian, Benedict XV speaks fluently English, French, Spanish and understands German. Like Leo XIII, he will make a practice of addressing every visitor in his native language.

If, on leaving Bologna, Benedict XV failed to buy a return ticket to his archiepiscopal see as Pius X did when in 1903 he left Venice to attend the conclave from which he emerged pontiff, yet Cardinal Della Chiesa little expected to sit a few days afterward on the throne of Peter. A faithful disciple of Rampolla, and as such little liked by the state chancellery and a majority of the cardinals, in a few months standing, the archbishop knew that he had resisted him in the appointment of Pius X's ecclesiastical and political policies, the secretary of state with his powerful friends and, perhaps, the votes and the influence of all German and Austrian cardinals.

It was perhaps due to these many obstacles in the way that the clergy and the civil authorities of the diocese of Bologna failed to escort the archbishop to the railroad station and wish him all success as is the custom.

What happened within the frescoed walls of the Sistine chapel will not be known for some time to come. But, when the conclave finally did decide the time ripe, the necessary permission will be given and a new Cardinal Mathieu, with possibly his diary of the conclave, giving the details of the religious and diplomatic struggle that led the sacred college to vote for Cardinal Della Chiesa.

Giacomo Della Chiesa was born in Genoa on November 21, 1854, and belongs to one of the oldest families of the Riviera. On his mother's side his family has already given to the church another pope, Cosimo Migliorati, who was Innocent VII (1404-1406), while on his fathers, the new pope is connected with nearly thirty aristocratic families of northern Italy, among whom are some of the most prominent social leaders in the capital, like Marquis Durazzo, Prince Centurions and Count Sassati.

If Benedict XV's pontifical days very little is known. His sister-in-law relates that he was a quiet, obedient, and very studious child, indulged in his companions' pastimes. One day, when only twelve, the young marquis surprised his father and his uncle, a prelate, by his determination to become a priest, his father thought it over for a minute and then said:

"Very well, but first get your diploma and then renew your request."

The next year not a word more was said on the subject. The young man attended the school of Genoa, always distinguishing himself and later on entered the law faculty of the local university. His early instruction had been wholly forgotten by all when one day the young man returned home and laying on his father's desk the paper stating that he was a full-fledged doctor of law, said:

"Now will you give me your consent to become a priest."

The old marquis was thunderstruck. There stood before him the same slim figure of eight years previous, whose steady gaze betrayed a strong determination. The marquis surveyed him carefully and then said:

"Of course, if you so I think so."

That settled it. A few months later the young man entered the Capranica college in Rome, where he took his minor orders, and later on the Vatican academy, where he graduated as D. D.

It was while he was teaching that the then Cardinal Rampolla put his eyes on him. In 1887, when the Caroline Islands question came up and Rampolla was sent to Spain as special envoy, Della Chiesa was given him as his secretary and highly distinguished himself. The happy solution in 1887 of the Carolines Islands question by Leo XIII opened to Rampolla the gate of the Vatican state chancellery and Monsignor Della Chiesa went with him as assistant at the secretary of the ladder. A few years later, however, he succeeded Monsignor Tripepi, who was appointed cardinal, as Rampolla's substitute, and this gave him the opportunity of acquiring under great masters, Leo XIII and Cardinal Rampolla, the wide diplomatic experience which is now his chief asset.

The many years spent at the state chancellery were the highest of Benedict XV's life in Rome as a prelate. He resided with his mother, to whom he was deeply devoted, in Piazza di Spagna, in an apartment that the marchioness had furnished for him and which was the meeting place of Catholic artists and literati. Every evening the young diplomat found himself surrounded by a number of devoted friends, who were never tired of listening to his brilliant conversation, and for whom he always had a good Havana and a delicious cup of mocha. Politics was severely banished from the conversation. One evening to a diplomat who wanted his opinion on some burning question, the young monsignor said:

"My friend, why do you want to ruin your digestion and my appetite?"

On another occasion, having been asked whether the efforts of the church were proceeding on smoothly, he smilingly replied:

"No, they limp some, like me."

With Leo XIII's death and Rampolla's failure to be elected pope Monsignor Della Chiesa's happy days at the state chancellery came to an end. Although he still retained his position as Cardinal del Val's substitute, yet his influence was gone and he was gradually put aside. The new elements, composed of trusted friends of the new secretary of state, were hostile to him chiefly for this last, not so retained for his superior a devotion only equal to that for his mother. The new secretary of state knew that if Rampolla was gone Della Chiesa represented in the state chancellery Rampolla's tradition. Yet they did not dare remove him. His services, his advice, were still regarded as precious and foolish a man of Della Chiesa's intellectual caliber could not be appointed to a minor position.

The opportunity of removing Della Chiesa came in 1908 when, following the death of Cardinal Svampa, the archiepiscopal see of Bologna became vacant. In order to prevent criticism or all sorts Pius X decided to consecrate the new archbishop personally, but everybody understood that the idea was to send away from Rome one of Rampolla's devoted friends.

While archbishop of Bologna Benedict XV achieved the reputation of being a strict disciplinarian, a hard worker and a man of well-defined ideas. He was a great pedestrian though he invariably set up at his desk till long after midnight he was at work again in the morning at five. On one occasion, though seriously ill, he rose from his sickbed to perform a pastoral visit to a little mountain village, not wishing to disappoint the inhabitants.

FOREST WORK BY BOY SCOUTS

Lads Will Build Trail in White Mountains Intended for Protection.

Twenty-four boy scouts under direction of three scout masters will build ten miles of trail for the United States forest service in the White mountain national forest this summer, R. W. Woodward writes in Boys' Life. In return for this work the boy scouts will be paid at a rate equivalent to 18c an hour for all the timber through which it passes. The trail will be work done by the regular force. The trail makers will be selected from first-class scouts in Washington, Baltimore and Boston—eight from each city.

The trail which they will build is intended primarily as a fire protection against fire. However, it will also be useful in making the White mountain national forest more accessible to tourists and prospective timber purchasers, and parts of it may be used later on in the logging of the timber which it passes. The trail will be built in the form of a zigzag, so that the grade will not be steep. The work will be supervised by the forest officer who will have charge of the trail when it is completed.

The boys can practice many forms of woodcraft while they are at work. The work will be working approximately ten miles from the nearest town, Gilead, Me. They will camp in the valley of the Wild river, a tributary of the Androscoggin.

The trail work in itself will consist in clearing out the brush, grading the tread of the trail and building the necessary culverts and bridges. In cases where rock needs to be broken in the former officer who will have charge of the work prepare still more work.

An Exhortation to Steadfastness

By REV. L. W. GONNELL
Assistant to the Dean, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

These words were written by Paul when a prisoner at Rome, he was a Jew, addressing Gentile Christians at Philippi. What an overflowing of the Gospel Christ has made that a Jew can write than to a Gentile: "My brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved.—Philippians 4:1.

An Appeal.

"We stand fast in the Lord." These words imply several things.

(1) They had enemies, otherwise they had not needed an exhortation to steadfastness. Many seem unaware that we wrestle "against principalities and powers in the heavenly places." Even modern spiritualism, so far as it is not fraudulent, suggests a great, shadowing world of evil spirits about us. While we slumber they realmost oppose us, and we need to take the whole armor of God, if we would stand. How startling this appeal in a day when many religious people base their moorings of faith in the Word of God.

(2) They would need to progress if they were to stand fast. We gather this from the use of the word "so." This seems to send us back to the previous chapter where we see Paul, forgetting the things behind, pressing toward the mark for the prize: "so we are to stand fast, in other words, we may not stand still if we are to stand fast; as in riding a bicycle, the only way to stand is to keep moving.

(3) They had a secure position; they were to stand fast "in the Lord." Reader, are you not in the church indeed, but in the Lord? Main taining our position there, we are secure. Charles Simeon, the Cambridge scholar and saint, exerted a marvelous influence in his day. In the early hours of the morning, he would be heard walking in his study or on the roof above it, and they knew he was having communion with God. Maintaining thus our position "in the Lord," we shall be steadfast.

The Argument.

Our text begins with "therefore." This leads us back to the verses preceding, and we find in them his encouragement to steadfastness.

(1) "If there be any consolation in Christ, (R. V.) is in heaven." Philippi was a Roman colony, and many of its inhabitants were citizens of Rome. This honor was highly appreciated, and they would have suffered much for sake of it. To have our names in the Lamb's book, in the city of God, is worth any price which steadfastness may cost us.

(2) "From whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." The word "look" indicates expectancy. We are continually looking for the coming of a mother watching for her boy. Such an attitude toward the coming of the Savior was common in apostolic days, but is not so now. Perhaps this is partly explained by the fact that many think much of their country as a judge and have set their affections on things above, where Christ is seated on the right hand of God. Such an attitude would hasten the coming of the Savior.

(3) "Who shall change our vile body? It is our vile bodies that shall be unto his glorious body?" When Archbishop Blakney was dying his friends laid read this passage to him: "Bishop, said the archbishop, "our vile body, but body of humiliation. Our bodies are not vile, but they do humble us. The transformation will be in the days after the resurrection hint the glory that awaits us. Surely, we should stand fast!

(4) "He is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Voices shall be heard at least saying, "Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." With such a helper we need not surrender. So stand fast. In the Lord.

Questions We Should Ask.

"Am I really what I ought to be? Am I what, in the bottom of my heart, I honestly want to be? Am I living a life at all like what I myself approve? My secret nature, the true completion of my character, is hidden from me, and only I know it. Is it such as I should be willing to show? Is my soul at all like what I indeed desire to present to others to believe? In my heart at all such as I should wish the Searcher of hearts to judge me by? Is every year adding to my fitness to be? Am I ripe, to my conscientiousness, to my freedom from the hypocrisy of seeming so much better than I am? Was I compare myself with last year, am I more ready to surrender myself at the call of duty? am I more alive to the demands of the conscience have I shaken off my besetting sins? These are questions we ought to be putting fairly and honestly to our hearts.—Frederick Temple.

Why Some Were Didn't Care for Salmon Was in Fair Way to Have Hot Breakfast.

In some parts of the Canadian back country the recurrence of boiled salmon, broiled salmon, salmon cutlets, and salmon steak at every meal become, after a few weeks, a little monotonous. To the native palate, brought up on it, the constant reappearance of the selfsame dish is a matter of course; but to the newly arrived tourist it grows at last into a feeble joke.

"Is there nothing else for breakfast" said one a sick victim of colonial hospitality, as a whole fish and a pot of mustard were laid before him on the table."

"Nothing else!" replied the host, in surprise. "Why, there's salmon enough there for six, alst! there?"

"Yes," responded the guest, mildly; but I don't care for salmon."

"Well, then, fire into the mustard," was the rejoinder.

Mighty Handy.

Some negroes are insatiable "liisers," and their favorite organizations are those which assure a comfortable funeral.

A mistress was remonstrating with her servant about belonging to one of them.

"Bennibel, don't you think it is mighty foolish to pay the 'Friends and Tree Mourners society' twenty-five cents every month?"

"Naw'm, Miss May, I don't. You see, dee aint live none of de-evilses dee acts liberal, and dee don't skimp on nothin'. Dee gives you de finest kind of coffin, and makes a way for everybody to get to your burial. Ko den, sides dat, dee gives you thirty dollars at the grave, en you know thirty dollars comes in mighty handy."

Comparative Values.

"I suppose you had the usual trouble in Europe this summer," said Mrs. De Jinks.

"Yes," said Mrs. von Slammerton; "chiefly in the matter of getting money, however. Why, would you believe it, Mrs. De Jinks, a letter of credit over there wasn't of nearly as much value than a treaty of neutrality!"—Judge.

Is that kind of food!

Made of wheat and barley, it contains all the nutriment of these most nourishing grains, including those vital mineral salts—phosphate of potash, etc.—that are discarded in making white flour.

HER NOBLE MAN

By ALVAH JORDAN GARTH.

"You are the noblest man I ever know!"

Her fair soul in her eyes, Evelyn Snow stood before the man who at the risk of his life had saved her brother from a terrible death in a runaway. She was trembling all over. In her eyes was the warm ardor of more than gratitude, and Bertram Morse read what it was and his heart began to burning.

Evelyn was od toward him. Closer came the cherry lips, bent on bestowing upon him the kiss of utter thank fulness, the reward for his courage and manliness.

"No!" he said, and his voice was hoarse and restrained and he held her at arm's length. He deemed that his expression conveyed a charge of unmanliness. She tried to break from him and hide her face for shame, but he held these struggling hands imprisoned. "Wait!" he said, their pale face and deadly, tense. "You and I need not misunderstand. Your troth is plighted to Amory Kendall. He is my best friend. I do not be treacherous to him. You must not. My love!"—and his great frame was shaken—"oh, my love! This shall be the supreme moment of my life until I claim the kiss I only defer."

"What do you mean?" she fluttered, and half sobbed.

"That I am going away, that I hope you will be happy—that I have no story to claim—nothing you as his wife. But through all the lonely years I wish to feel that you owe me that kiss. It may be years, but some time, some place I will ask what I have earned so nobly now postponed. When I ask, will I have your promise?"

"Yes, yes—oh, you are breaking my heart!" and Evelyn ran from the room in sobbing distraction.

Bertram Morse hurried from the house and its vicinity. He thought only of reaching the outskirts of the town, of being where he could throw off his land spot where he could think out and wear out the great grief that was consuming him. He tried to sit by door side lane as he saw coming toward him Amory Kendall, but the latter interrupted him. He ran up to Bertram, affectionately embracing the arm of the loyal friend he loved next best to Evelyn.

"You big, brave fellow!" cried Kendall. "I've heard all about it. The whole town is talking of it. I couldn't risk you took, and well they may. Oh, how grateful I am to be alive! You must come at once and see her."

"I have just left her," said Bertram as steadily as he could, for his voice is a rare jewel. Cherish her as the apple of your eye."

"Why, how grave and strange you are!" said Kendall.

"I feel so," responded Bertram gravely.

"Sort of shaken up after your lucky escape—I see," remarked the light-hearted Amory, and let his friend pass on, little dreaming of the wild turmoil going on within that man's heart.

Till the dawn of evening covered him, till the distant bells chimed out the eleven o'clock, Bertram Morse, that the best-battering bricks began the greatest, he tossed on his bed, face buried in the grass. Bertram Morse fought out his great battle.

He loved Evelyn—he was even sure that she loved him. He was unfortunate in not coming to the scene until Amory had proposed to her. Good old Amory! They had been like brothers. He was not strong and muscular like Bertram, and that had made Amory always lean toward him protectingly. Tired, too, he needed a woman's tender care, for he were always sickly. He was so that I may provide the poor of the country with cheap eggs and milk. Somehow the councillors didn't argument him.—London Opinion.

Beginning of Antwerp.

Antwerp is made of houses in name from a castle which in Frankish times overlooked the site of the city. This castle was built to protect the entrance of the Schelt, and to prevent foreign traders introducing goods into the country without saying toll to the sovereign lord. The pounds of tolls and smuggling was in those days the cutting off of a hand, and, as in this case, the severed members were thrown into the Schelt, the castle came to be known as Antwerpen (or in Flemish, Antwerpen), "the place where hands are thrown." The castle and two severed hands appear on the city arms to this day.

The Savor of the Way.

"So you will insist on your carrying the hatchet."

"Yes. When I accompany her to a lecture hall she says I ought to do a little to make myself useful."

"You Will Not Send Me Away, Will You?"

Woman will forgive almost anything in man except cowardice or treason. There she draws the line. Not only to the feeling instinctive, but it comes to her through years of the human evolution. In the earliest ages her faith, as well as her safety, was in the man who stood face to face with the enemy and fought for her. It is not a difference in heroism that makes her admire Bertram Morse, but a difference in manliness. Nature has arranged that very nicely and women know and obey the law. Nature has arranged the same nature imposes upon them petite and delicate forms, unfitted for the battlefield, and good men understand that the best they can show in personal appearance and bearing, they owe second to the fearlessness of manhood.

Thus patriotism blossoms and bloomed in women's hearts as naturally as the old-fashioned rose grows in the old family garden, its roots are so deep, its vitality is ever equal and its fragrance is the sweetest thing in life. With full hearts but manly souls women can send forth their sons, their husbands, their sweet hearts, their protectors to danger or to death—to anything save hailing or cheering. A woman's heart cannot put it nearly when he said victory was yours. "Come home, love, I'll be behind the gun.—Editorial in Woman's World.

The Application.

A shire county lady recently received this among its answers to an advertisement for a lady's companion and inspector at a salary of $400: "Dear Sir—Herewith receive my application. I am a fearless rider, good driver and sanitary inspector. I am good looking, speak eight languages and can learn anything. In addition to performing the duties mentioned in the advertisement I am willing (without extra remuneration) to act as caretaker of municipal buildings and fireman and assist in cleaning the streets and collecting house rates. Should the not be clayey I will box rock in my spare time. I attach only one condition to this application, viz., that permission be granted me to keep two cats, as, so that I may provide the poor of the country with cheap eggs and milk. Somehow the councillors didn't argument him.—London Opinion.

FOOD COMMISSIONER PLEADS FOR MORE EXTENSIVE USE OF POTATO

By H. J. DANIELS.

"Jim" Helme, state dairy and food commissioner, is out with an unquestioned endorsement of Old Maistay Potato for a bilgier position on the Michigan table, and the growers of the spuds will thank him for the generous bit of advertising that helps their output.

He is active in its support because The potato is "nice high" in food value.

The potato is a mortal enemy to the high cost of living.

Mr. Helme calls attention to the fact that Michigan produces over 60 per cent of all the potatoes raised in the United States and that the crop this year is exceptionally large, giving assurance that prices will be reasonably low.

High now good potatoes are wholesaling in the big producing districts of Michigan at 35 to 40 cents a bushel.

Hitch man, poor man, digger and lawyer should be a constant gastronomic companion of the potato, says Mr. Helme, because it is the most easily digested of all our starchy foods.

He quotes a prominent scientist on the food value of the potato, who points out

That the potato is more easily digested than the starch in wheat, corn and other cereals.

That potato starch can be digested in one-sixth of the time of cereal starches. That one-fourth of the potato is food substance, also—five-sixths of which consists of starch.

That it is rich in alkaline salts in combination with citric and malic acids, the acids of the lemon and the apple

That the potato contains potash, which is a great blood purifier and an enemy of rheumatism, gout and Bright's disease.

That these salts are located just under the skin and for that reason if it should not be pared until after it has been cooked.

That a mound of baked potatoes has the food value of almost six ounces of beef, one pound of chicken, six pounds of beef tea and seven ounces of bread.

PLAN IS WORKING WELL.

The association of commerce of the city of Grand Rapids has undertaken a work that ought to result profitably to the small towns and villages within easy distance of that city. It has established a speaking bureau made up of practical business men of Grand Rapids who are posted on business and municipal affairs, and who are at least fair talkers. These men will go to any town in western Michigan that calls for them, and talk on such subjects as seems to the town officials most helpful to the town. The idea is bringing up a fine set of cherry trees as can be found in the whole country. Nothing better prices for fine cherries than around Traverse City, where the northern part of the state is bringing up a fine set of cherry trees as can be found in the whole country. The sun is today everything else the sun is today everything else.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN EXCELS IN CHERRIES

John T. Hutchinson Inspecting Cherry Orchards in the Grand Traverse Peninsula.

If northern Michigan had done well with nothing more than cherries this year the efforts would have been worth while. Actually there is a great cherry forest being brought up to maturity, each year thousands of new trees being set out. Systematic care and treatment are being given most of the orchards. Expert inspection is being given then by the public domain commission. Special care is being taken that no tree diseases get into the orchards, and the result is that the Japanese's brain drifted into the mouth of the harbor by an approaching storm. Fish are shipped all over the state from Leland, and fishing is the most important industry in the lift region town.

Fishing Boats in the River Mouth at Leland.

At Leland, in Leelanau county, north of Traverse City, does not fishing in the great sport, and incidentally the "meal ticket" of many people. The boats are put out, and the nets are put into the lake, when the nets are dropped down and steel catcher are made. The accompanying cut shows the fisherman's boats driven into the mouth of the harbor by an approaching storm. Fish are shipped all over the state from Leland, and fishing is the most important industry in the lift region town.

GRAPE JUICE FACTORIES BUSY.

Ever since the grape harvest commenced at Lawton and Mattewan this year the grape juice factories at those two villages have been working 24 hours a day, each employing from 60 to 75 men constantly with midnight shifts. The output will be something enormous. Each plant has bought and cared for about 100 acres of grape a day, equivalent to 10,000 gallons. Some of the vineyards have produced as high as six tons of grapes per acre, but the average has been much lower. The grapes have sold for $25 per ton for perfect grapes, and the harvest has been a good one, both for the grower and the factories.

With a hundred teams coming in with grapes every day, the problem of handling was solved by constructing an endless roller on which the grapes placed by the teams and they were kept going into the plant, reaching the vats where they were dumped and the empty crates taken to an opposite door where the grower drives around and collects them. This saves confusion. Some days the plants have been taxed to market which weighed 9,000 pounds and brought over $100, and three ton loads were common. The vineyards have paid well this year, for each of the plants have been for weeks paying out $3,000 a day, and often more than that for the grapes, with more than half of the returns being clear profit to the growers.

Preparing for Asparagus.

Give asparagus beds top dressing.

WHAT FIVE ACRES DID.

John Perry, an Indiana man, left for his home a few days ago with proof that northern Michigan land is about as valuable as any land in the country. The proof which Mr. Perry possesses to show his Indiana farmer friends was the deed to five acres of land situated in the district of Mr. Mitchell, near Cadillac.

Last spring Perry and his family left their farm home in Indiana and came to northern Michigan for five months. The accompanying cut shows the fisherman's boats driven into the mouth of the harbor by an approaching storm. Fish are shipped all over the state from Leland, and fishing is the most important industry in the lift region town.

Perry's health. He took five acres of potatoes from his farm, and cared for them in the spare time he had during the season. This amount paid entirely for the land and went far towards paying for the buildings which he put up.

"I'll be able to tell my friends," said Mr. Perry, "that I bought five acres of land in Michigan with money earned during six months stay, built on my buildings from one season's profits and, best of all, enabled my wife to greatly better her health."

"Sort and potatoes next year select the best little entire, discarding later on all the smaller ones

THINGS WE OUGHT TO DO

But It Seems Impossible to Do All of Them and Get Anything Else Done.

If we did everything we ought to do, we should never get anything else done. That does not mean that we should never get anything done that we ought not to do. It is not to be taken as a platitude upon "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." It means that we should never get any time for the things that we like to do whether we ought to do them or not. If we went to see all the people we ought to go to see there would be no time for people to come to see us. If we read all the books we ought to read we should never get to look at the magazines or the fascinating worthless novels, and should never set half through the "ought to" books at that. If we attended all the meetings we ought to attend, the pickles would not get made and the ironing would not get done. This is a question which has to do with women, you see, because men never think very much about what their ought and what they ought not do. They just do it anyway. If we went without the things we could not afford—but that may be getting a little off the subject. Remarks the Indianapolis News. If we played checkers with our husbands every evening we should have no time for crocheting. If we dusted the furniture and watered the porch boxes and fed the chickens every morning we should not have time for those delightful early morning conversations. If we pulled the threads and hemmed the dust cloths by hand we should have little time to dust. If we wrote all our club papers out of our heads instead of out of other people's books, we should have no time or brains left to help the children with their lessons in the evening. Duty is insistent. If we did everything she would do, she would demand every minute of our time and would still be insatiated. Of course, the best way to get around her is to want to do the things she wants us to do. Then she can not interfere with us and we can have a little time for existence, doing exactly as we please all the time.

Ancient Family.

Although most of the present-day descendants of the Hunns are to be found in Hungaria, the inventor family of the Hungarian nobility—the Esterhazys—claim lineal descent from Attila, and the Esterhazys, Hunsarian vassals, to some extent, bear out their claim. They show no trace of their ancestry in their appearance, for, although physically as well as morally, one of the most barbaric characters in history, while the Esterhazys are a conspicuously handsome family. The biograph er of Prince Paul Esterhazy attributes the improvement in physique to the fact that for centuries past they have their colossal wealth, the Esterhazys have been able to select the most beautiful women as their consorts. Although nominally commoners, the family owns still comprise 21 county seats, 65 market towns and 440 villages. When Prince Nicholas Esterhazy witnessed one of the famous Hungarian dances, he exclaimed, as he told Lord Leicester that he could not help thinking of the many shepherds as the earl could sheep.

War's Tax on Uniforms.

Some of the correspondents are alarmed at the "heavy tax" the soldiers' uniforms are beginning to show wear and tear. It may be interesting that a good uniform would last a campaign. That was not the experience of 1870. In December, 1870 (says Von der Goltz), according to a writer in the Manchester Guardian, German soldiers might have been seen plodding along in the rainy weather in the depth of winter barefoot, while many had only wooden shoes and linen trousers.

When the Tenth corps marched into Paris, it was in rags, and not a soldier was clothed in the regulation manner. Civilian garments, even the crop has been sold for a song. As is well known, during the South African war, the clothing was the dead for supplies, and our soldiers devolved quite a fancy for boots recured in this way. It was not uniform, but necessity developing a matter of taste and fashion.

The Pocket Stove.

In the ancient days of the open fireplace and the iron crane—not so very ancient, for the Scottish peasantry still uses used these—and even later when the Franklin cooking stove was the choice of such gentlemen that people started from their seats indignantly to see how one worked, a laugh of ridicule would have greeted the announcement that a stove could be made which one could carry in one's pocket. There are thousands of them in use today.

Little giants, they can do much work. They are called Alaska stoves that is what they really are—just a disk from three inches in diameter up to 18 inches wide attached. Below, the sunken iron the charcoal light its way from the current and there you are.

Russian Navy.

Russia has never been much of a naval power. Russian "naval supremacy" was never destroyed, since it was supposed to have never been destroyed the better part of her navy. Russia's navy is said to be in Japan. At present Russia has but eight modern battleships, while Japan has 14 and Germany 17.

Had Become Calloused.

"Does my practicing make you nervous?" asked the young man who is learning to play the bugle for the territorials. "It did when I first heard the neighbors discussing it," replied the sympathetic person. "But now I'm getting so I don't care what happens to you."—London Opinion.

SOME TERRIBLE WAR BILLS

That of the United States Government Heads the List in Point of Size.

The wars of Napoleon in 15 years cost France $1,000,000,000 writes Wendell Phillips Dodge in Leslie's. Our Civil war expenditures of the Civil government amounted to $3,000,000,000, or nearly thirteen times as much a year as Napoleon's. The Franco-German war cost France $1,000,000,000, besides an added war indemnity of $1,000,000,000. This same great war, which lasted only 180 days, cost Germany $450,000,000 for an average fighting force of 1,200,000 men. The other big European war of the past half century, the Russo-Turkish war, cost Russia $788,140,000, but she had two years' fighting for her money. The war in the far East cost Japan $500,000,000 and Russia $725,000,000, not counting lost ships. Only toward the end had either side anything like a million men in the field. Italy's little war with Turkey cost $400,000 a day, allowing for a mere 60,000 fighting men, and the Boer war, in which England's army averaged 200,000, cost $1,052,000,000 in two and a half years.

Guilty.

The justice of the peace in a town in Ohio, in pursuance of his duties, had to hear and judge cases that were brought before him and also to perform occasional marriage ceremonies. He found it difficult to disassociate the various functions of his office.

Everything had gone smoothly until he asked one bride: "Do you take this man to be your husband?"

The bride nodded emphatically.

"And you accept this man as your wife, turning to the bridegroom, "what have you to say in your defense?"

English Say Kaiser's Men Have Excellent Guns.

Correspondent Visits Hospital and Gets First Hand Stories of Incidents at the Front—Wounded Soldiers Tell of Charges and Life in Trenches—Many Interesting Experiences Related.

London.—An American newspaper man who has just visited the American hospital at Falington reports some interesting stories told by wounded men. He says:

"Nearly every ward was alive with phonographs or talking machines of some description, and around them hovered dozens of the less seriously wounded. A ragtime melody vied with that of an opera singer; a cloud of smoke arose from pipes, cigars and cigarettes.

"Passing to a wounded man, the left side of whose face was black and swollen, a surgeon said:

"Ask him to show you the piece of shrapnel that hit him. He kept it for a souvenir.

"The man was George Harper of the rifle brigade. He had been wounded in a recent engagement near Bethune. He took from a small cupboard beside his cot the head of a German shrapnel shell.

"I never knew anything after that hit me, sir; said Harper. 'It hit the ground first and then took me in the jaw. Yes, it hurts some now, for the teeth were knocked out and part of the jawbone broken, so the doctors say. These American doctors are fine, sir. They're wonders, sir. Little bunches everywhere. We by in the trenches and couldn't get at em. Then came the shell that got me and a lot of other fellows. When I came to I looked for a pal who had been next to me. There wasn't much left of him. I leaned over and picked up this shrapnel head for a souvenir. You can see where some of the red is still on it. The doctors say I've got a piece of shrapnel in my throat and a bullet in my chest and that I'm a lucky dog to be here.'

Of the sixty who were naked about their experiences not one begrudged praise to the Germans for their prowess with artillery. Nearly all agreed that the infantry fitting was good, but they excepted the sharpshooters, who they said, had picked off the officers to such an appalling extent that many of the officers disrobed their uniforms and carried guns as privates.

Thomas Smith of the Twelfth lancers was wounded near Soissons.

"We waited for days to get at them," Smith said, "but they had their big guns sweeping every road. Finally we were placed in the trenches with rifles. Later we got our chance. As we charged toward the German lancers they threw down their lances and begged for mercy. As we swept on by with our lances raised we were fired on from behind. I was shot and back for them, and we finished every one of them. We didn't want to take any of them prisoners anyway."

In another charge a lot afterward Smith says, a German lancer struck him astride with his lance.

"If it had been as sharp as our own lances are I would have been stuck through, but it only knocked me wind out of me, and I had strength enough left to get a couple of them.

Gasoline and naphtha are the easiest cleaning agents to use on fabrics of all kinds. But they should never be kept in the house in large quantities, as they are extremely dangerous. It is safer not to keep any amount of them in the house. It is often possible, if you live in the country, to keep a large corked bottle of gasoline in some sheltered place out of doors. If you live in the city the nearest drug store must be relied on to supply your want in small quantities.

Powdered French chalk should be used to remove grease spots from silk spots of unfastened wall paper, clothes and carpets. It is not always successful in one application, but should be brushed off and replenished until the spot has disappeared.

FOR THE BOUDOIR.

How to Keep the Hands From Chapping During the Winter.

The first wintry day is the day to begin to wage a war against chapped hands. If you can keep your hands from becoming chapped in the transitional weather between warm and cold, you will have little difficulty with them later on, for it is in the first cold days that they are especially sensitive to cold.

Chapped hands are almost always caused by inadvertently drying after washing or perhaps the water was too cold and very hard or used too hot. Both extremes are bad for the skin.

To preserve the hands in good condition in cold weather they should, whenever possible, be washed in tepid water, and if this is softened by a teaspoonful of borax so much the better.

Be sure to use a soap of good quality and when drying the hands take the precaution of rubbing each finger separately. If the hands are rubbed over once a day with a slice of lemon and a little cold cream or if cocoa butter is rubbed into them thoroughly before going to bed at night there will be little danger of the skin becoming chapped or rough.

An excellent and delightfully fragrant cold cream for the hands, or the face either, can be made as follows: Take eight ounces of almond oil, one ounce and one-half of spermaceti, one ounce and one-quarter of an ounce of white wax. Shred the wax and the spermaceti finely and put in a china marmalade jar. A small saucepan of boiling water will do. Stand it in another saucepan about a quart full of boiling water. Keep this simmering until the ingredients are entirely melted and then add a few drops of lavender oil and pour into small china pots. The little pots in which cheese often comes are excellent for the purpose. The preparation can be used as soon as it is cool and will keep for a long time.

Another invaluable lotion for hands that are inclined to be red in winter, even though they do not chap badly, is made of lemon juice, oats in decoction and glycerin, equal parts of each. This can also be used for chapped hands.

TOILET HINTS.

How to Care For the Face and Keep It Youthful.

Here are some suggestions for caring for the face:

Wash the face daily in very hot water. Use plenty of soap, lathering the face and neck with some soap and rinsing it off afterward with a bath towel.

Let no soap remain upon the skin, but be sure that it is removed by using as many waters upon it as one has patience to apply.

After a thorough washing the skin must have a little cream or a little skin food massaged into it.

Each night before retiring take a bowl of warm water, a cake of pulverized, perfectly unscented, and a soft complexion brush and wash upward and outward until your face feels fresh and tingling. Then rinse all the soap off and dash with cold water and dry well. Once a week steam the face by applying to it heavy towels wrung out of very hot water to which you have added a pinch of borax.

When the face is very red discontinue the application of hot cloths and with the finger tips work in some good cold cream. Rub always upward and outward. Use pat upward and outward. Use pat upward and outward. Use pat

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

CHAPTER XXII—Continued.

"You see," he concluded, "it is entirely fair, I am, therefore, justified." he exclaimed strongly. "the present attitude of labor. It is utterly lacking in sense of gratitude, of loyalty. I like to think of the millie as the means to life for thousands of men. And it pains me to see them become hostile and grasping. What have they to complain of?

"Probably they feel entitled to a little more than a mere existence.

"Didn't we grant the sliding scale three years ago?

"Perhaps," Mark returned dryly, "they guess from the number on hum plus to palmetto that in prospect that the scale could fairly be raised. It could."

"I don't hold with you."

"What does Henley say?"

"Why would Henley say but, Pigs? He is mad—utterly mad in his hatred of unions."

"Quite mad."

"In this case he is right. I have not deserved to be compelled to stand and deliver. I have been willing to compromise our differences. I have let sentiment, I have let toward them as a father to his children. They have grew to just one of my possessions, I grew to them. And my plans for the future do not include a strikeless in income from raised scales or costly strikes. Mr. Quinby's hand—brushed in the stress of emotion—"If I were but as rich as Mackleroy! He has been half served by the strike. Mark, Mark, Quinby, it seemed, had forgotten his late irritation in the stress of emotion.

"Who made him," Mark corrected.

"No," contradicted Quinby sharply, "not to whom he has given opportunity. I have given it to my partners. As I never have I been so ill served as in the handling of this dispute." His pleasant face was flushed. He leaned his sink into Mark's heart.

"That is where I need you, Henley is the last man in the world for such a matter. It is not a bully's task, "Truitt, I wish you to take charge of the situation, stand between Henley and the men, and settle it."

"Hurrah! Kaster ordered than done. I don't hanker for the job, Mr. Quinby.

"You are the only one of the lot who can meet labor in a human pleasant manner. It is your gift, I believe, who saved us from a strike three years ago—I have never voiced my appreciation of that, but I do so now. You can do it. And you owe it to me to try. I am not fitted for such a thing—in the abstract. I also hold that they do not apply to the case. But the world would not understand that. It would say—" He paused again, leaning back to imagine what the cruel cynical world would say.

Mark thought he could imagine it.

"What," Quinby brought his hands in a slow splendid gesture down on the table, "would Henley say but, Pigs? Mr. Quinby, I am not fitted for a strike. I have been willing to compromise our differences to make our interests one. I have been willing to compromise. I have let sentiment, I have let toward them as a father to his children. Mark thought he could imagine it.

"Where," Quinby brought his hands in a slow splendid gesture down on the table, "would Henley say but, Pigs?

"Truitt—I Place Myself in Your Hands."

Mark's shoulders. "I place myself in your hands. My reputation is dear to me. Not for my own sake, but because of the work to which I have pledged my life."

Mark turned a frowning gaze out of the window. Ten miles or more sped by before he looked at the waiting Quinby.

"I'll try it."

"I knew you would." Quinby smiled once more. "Succeed and you will find no end to my gratitude. I believe, in thinking of retiring—" Their ways parted.

"Does Henley know it?"

Quinby ignored the question. "He himself has said you are the only man of the broad vision and—"

"Does Henley know it?" Mark interrupted. "But if I put it through, I'd rather point to it as my work."

He laughed quietly. "Strange, city." he laughed quietly. "Strange as it may seem, the notion appeals."

But that, I fear, is not the crux tion." Quinby shook his head sadly. "A broad vision has—unfortunately—has chained me."

Mark's lips left the matter of reward for future determination.

At Buffalo they left Quinby, whose car was attached to a New York train.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Philanthropy.

The Quinby strike is now history. It is, however, no part of recorded history that during the anxious months preceding one man was toiling, planning, spending himself to avert the tragic outcome he foresaw. It was quite hidden work. Even had it succeeded it would have been no more heralded than its failure.

He did foresee the outcome as tragic, but not because a philanthropist's reputation hung in the balance.

There was one man who saw and understood his efforts. He was Henley.

They were together one day. Mark urging earnestly for a compromise, Henley listened, not because he was impressed by the arguments, but because he was studying the pleader.

"Are you for me," he interrupted a long period to demand sharply, "or against me?"

"I'm for both."

"You can't be for both. Are you?" Henley jeered, still trying to play the man of peace.

"No. I am trying to obtain a little justice and to save the Quinby company's one man."

"Why? They think as I do—they don't see the point. We and we can afford idleness better than the men."

"They're growing bitter. There will be violence."

"Then let there be violence. I'll know how to meet it." Mark saw that he was hopeless. "There'll be no compromise. Let us fight it out, show, while were ready, we can show the men. The harder the fight the better I'm satisfied, because I know I can win. The longer it takes the longer I can stay."

"You're hopeless." Mark eyed him significantly. "I see I'll have to appeal to Cassar."

"Meaning Quinby? Cassar's good must feel flattered!"

"It is your interest in the premises. I should think it would be to your interest."

"Is that a kind of a threat?" Henley inquired harshly. "I'm not afraid of Quinby just now. Bower or later I expect to be kicked out of the concern I have made it what it is. But I don't stand. And I don't propose to see the industry ruin to suit the whims of Quinby walking delegates and grafting labor leaders. I propose to let Quinby's confidence. I'm free to say I don't like it. It looks to me as though you're hedging, so you won't have to go out with me.

"What do you expect?

"I made you. I've given you all you have. What do you expect to stand by me?

"You demand more than you give me. I can give you all that you have and you refuse—"

"The men are for their living, as we are. Most of them get a good living. When they're worth it they get more. You get more. If they don't like our terms let them find better employment elsewhere—I can't. Cassar, don't count too much on him. There are bigger interests than he. I stand at stake just now, and you'll find when it comes to a point there'll be no doubt as to a stalwarts, but I've great said he's a fool."

Mark scrutinized Henley's words but school his own fears. Henley referred him frowningly.

"What," he demanded abruptly, "has got into you the last year? Before I could always count on you. Now I don't understand you.

"What is it, I mean?"

Mark laughed shortly. "I don't understand myself.

* * * * *

Mark had been partly right when he attributed the change of their return to reaction. A lighter mood followed. Cassia's work allowed them to meet but seldom and then often for only hurried visits. The engagement bred by separation drove such problems as Quinby and Cassar into the shadow, into the background. But the shadow never quite lifted. As winter wore on Mark became aware of growing up in Mark's heart a new inter- ing to attract, and sometimes it intruded even into the brief hours that should have been given solely to love.

There was an evening when he came to her apartment, tired and discouraged, but with an air that sent her memory back to a slender youth going nobly forth each day to labor meant for stronger men. She, too, was tired from a long exertion—one whose close allowed them this leisurely meeting, the first in weeks.

"Its week," she told him after he had been there a little while, "I was offered the superintendent of nurses at the Todd hospital."

"That's fine! I'm glad. When do you begin?"

"Have you forgotten? I think I mentioned it to you."

"Take it anyhow," he answered promptly. "Since you won't we can help you."

"I don't like to be under obligations to him.

"Take it. If he meant mischief, I think we'd have heard from him before now. And it's only fair for some time to be at a decent salary of him. God knows I'm doing enough for him.

"You mean with the men."

"Yes. Though, if he only knew it, I'm not doing it for his sake. I'm there it was for the men I undertook the job. He shook his head gloomily. "But the worst of it is, I'm almost certain to fail.

"Oh, I hope not."

"Yes. Sometimes I think I'm the only sane man left on earth. Each side thinks it's bound to win. One side is—and it isn't the men. The men want to cease to be men. It makes me sick to think what they'll have to pay if they do. Will this hopeless—what? I don't know how the issue is taking shape. But you can't stop the quest taking from me?"

"I don't find it queer."

"It is queer. I haven't come to the why yet. Do you believe," he asked abruptly, "that we can awaken all the sympathies?

"I believe that it can."

"Wouldn't it be strange," he went musingly, "if through Quinby—the philanthropist!—I've found my big idea?"

"Your big idea?"

"Yes." He forgot that no Richard Courtney had ever defined it for her. "I'll probably fail in the attempt. But after that—who cares?—the happy city, and in Bethel. The thing's getting into my blood. Or am I, after all, the one who is mad?"

If she was mad, he laid it to weariness. "If you are, I love your madness."

A silence. When she broke it he, absorbed in the train of thoughts set in motion by mention of the happy city, did not catch the odd strained note in its words.

"Then you think I'd better take the position?"

"Ah!" He came back remorsefully to the subject. "Of course, you must take."

"Even from Quinby?"

"Wherever it comes, you're fitted for it. You've earned it."

"But," she asked quietly, "I'd have to live at the hospital! I'd have no excuse for keeping this apartment."

"Oh, so, surely not! You mustn't give it up. I need you, Kasia—there are times when I need you very much. I love—he still called it love—from his heart for the moment. He leaned over and caught her to him.

"Not at once, perhaps," she murmured weakly. "I could come here sometimes—until the lease expires—if I wanted. "Do you think love is determined by a landlord's contract?"

"Not by that!" With a little gasping cry she reached up and clung to him.

During the last days of the negotiations Mark Kaustier hoped the strike would be averted. Then men, listening to his persuasion, agreed to accept a nearly nominal increase in the wage scale. But the agreement must be signed, not by the men as individuals, but by the union for them; from the time of the organization, its very life at stake, would not be moved. Three men were in Henley's office on that last night before the decision was announced. One had just made the final plea for the compromise.

Henley shook his head firmly. "I will not recognize the union."

"But they ask so little."

Mark glared at the other man, a tall stately figure, pacing, hands clasped behind his back, up and down the room. A troubled disquiting frown roughened the lofty brow.

"I'm looking ahead," Henley replied. "Labor organizations never go back, unless you catch you young and kill them off. Recognize them now and they will be back in three years demanding a larger share. Next, it will be the closed shop. Then another raise, and so on. You're running our mills for the benefit of men who have no stake in them, never knowing when they'll be after us with new outrageous demands. I will not have it." Henley spoke with feeling.

The pacing figure stopped, looking at Mark. "What have you to say to that?"

I say, the men are desperate. They'll stop at nothing to win the strike. It will cost us millions."

"Cheaper now than ever," Henley interrupted.

"I say," Mark went on, "this industry, this company, can afford to grant the demands labor will ever make. And there's such a thing as humanity. I'd that last enough—" He paused, looking steadily at Quinby. "If that isn't enough I am the public in on the men's side and it hasn't forgotten the Stamos—victim of prosecution and other unfortunate incidents publicly uttered by a certain famous philanthropist."

Quinby groaned and resumed his anxious pacing. But he was hailed by Henley's next words.

"You had a visit from some men in New York last week.

"How do you know?" Quinby was visibly startled.

"I advised them to see you," Henley rejoined. "They're men of power. They have resources. They can make and unmake men and reputations. They can destroy you as easily as they would a corner grouse. They're interested in the future of steel. They're more interested, as every controller of property must be, in the fight to stamp out this epidemic of labor agitation. I remind you, it isn't safe to disregard their advice."

"What interest have they in my reputation?"

"Humph! They think as I damn your reputation."

Quinby started, stared. His tongue fumbled vainly for words to answer this astounding lese-majesty. He took a step toward Henley, menacingly.

"Humph!" Henley grunted again. "You mean—sure your wind. I'm not afraid of you just now. And I won't use weapons to be crippled by striking in to the union. The men who say you won't permit it either—without punishing.

"I suppose you think they can keep you in this company, too?"

"No," Henley answered steadily. "Between you and me they won't interfere. But between you and them—between your executive reputation and their interest—they will interfere. The labor unions are your common enemy. If you let them get a foothold here, you may as well tie down and die. For there isn't a spot on earth where the truth about Quinby—hatred gave savagery to the throat—the pious fraud, the hounder of women, the orator in business dealings, won't reach.

Quinby's place had no power now, as at another time, to subdue Henley. He sank into a chair, stretching out his hands to Mark in a helpless gesture. "Can't you say something?"

"If you aren't a coward and a fraud." Mark answered with undisguised disgust, "you'll know what to say. If you are—" He concluded with a shrug.

It was an miserable moment for Quinby. He can made a pitiable effort to gather the tatters of his vanity around his naked cowardice.

"I leave you in charge. I go to New York tonight. An expedition starts for Tibet tomorrow. I shall join it."

He stared stilly in the door. There he stopped for a second, looking back with eyes that were not good to see. Finally, turned to Mark. "As for you," he began sternly, "I've let you play your game, because you could do harm. But now, having learned that you are a pale ewe in the reality of a coward—"

Mark had his gaze quietly. "I have learned more than that. But, at least, the fleece were of less, after all."

The next day the failure of negotiations was announced. On the next the strike was ordered.

Henley was ready. On the morning of the third day attached outside of strangers appeared in the vicinity of the Quinby works, a number along with the air of casual ease. They were Henley's strike breakers, gathered from many cities.

And the strikers were ready, though few of them were of great position.

The first equal slipped unnoticed into the mills, and a second. Then along the mile or more of street an electric word passed from vacant lot to crowd to crowd: "Henley's strike breakers!" The third equal reached the refuge of the mills and was greeted by a sullen overbearing dash. The fourth found the way blocked and itself pressed back by a surging curving mob. The remaining equal hesitated, balked to this point and in a body turned to force to drive a lane through the resisting pack of men and women but the mob grew faster, gathering force and with it came hooting jeering and shrieking taunts and blasphemies. Blows were struck, missiles hurled. Then above the clamor a shot was heard.

As if a woman is killed!" answered by a hoarse frenzied howl. Men reached for weapons flashed pockets where they had lain hidden. Other shots were heard, fired pointblank at living targets. When it was over, the strike breakers had fled and two more men lay dead on the streets. Through the labyrinth of silent machinery and quiet furnaces a man ran, frenzied with the thirst for blood hunted out and shot down those of Henley's men who had reached the mills. . . . Mad? Mad as though a battle waited to be fought.

Two days the terror lasted. The mills guarded properly—were wrecked. Timid posses were driven back. Crazed orators harangued the crowds and took for heroic text "the Stamoes twice of injustice."

Then, with measured tread and gleaming bayonets, came the force of the state of Pennsylvania. Then the strong—hovered once more over Quinby's mills.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Pressure of Truth.

The attack was broken. Engines crunched and furnaces glowed again. The men, starved out, crept back to the mill gates, begging for work. The superintendent, hard and cold, in union, at least in Quinby's mills, never raised its head again.

Jeremiah Quinby returned—not, however, with a blare of trumpets. In fact, he came almost secretly, though not with the stealthiness of the corporer so bold or so shrewd as to with his weaknesses and his cowardices. The public had lately become deeply interested in the Stamoes affair. The prosecution and the devoted head of their author had heaped its critical attention.

Quinby's return was not without comment. The press, which had spared the arrogant Henley, and to this Quinby, without

"Tell him to come here." Mark ordered the cabman. "Tell him his father is dying."

As a rule, Rowland a big Irishman in the crowd, audible even to the rear, cry out: "Truitt's the only man av th' lot wid bowls i' him."

"Fool—idiot!" Their shook clenched fists at the Irishman. "Are you taken in because he's trying to make the strike? Who are he working for then, you or Quinby? Where was he when Henley's men came to stay? Who was at your jobs and shoot down your women? Who was there when you were children were starving for bread? Where—"

But the cabman had reached him with Mark's message. Then the crowd, leaving the cabman, trying to take its meaning. Then he uttered a single word:

"Dying!" He leaned toward the crowd, intent on his message. "Dying! "My father's dying, but he can wait while I tell you what I have to tell you." Then he started out to be cause to our house, because my father was sick. . . . I'm not about this long ago. . . . Mr. Quinby's father was a poor man, taught him all he knew of the trade. Then the old man broke. He lost his job, been old anywhere else, but he had borrowed himself up trying to make Quinby's furnace hold fire. They threw him out, of course—and left him to die. Trouble—partner of Quinby! The old man's heart broke. Then his mind gave way. And now he's dying. Do you know where? In Hose alley!

The crowd had become very still. To them, too, the tragedy that torn of the cabman was cruel; inflate repetition could not take away its bitterness.

"And that isn't all." The emotional delirium reached its climax. The hoarse was a girl—just an ignorant Henley girl she was—who had the courage to be. But when he left as he left her, he swore that he would be back to see him she married a worthless runway she had to have. Then she went out late the city to make her own living—you know the fight and the prize women must pay or go down. And she—the girl he wouldn't take up with him—is dying.

Bewilderment choked back the stream of words. For a mace—whose pallor was not due to the garish acetylene lamps—had been found to be sobbing a way swiftly toward the crowd. The crowd let him in. Then proceed closer. Only Flotr and the Irishman recognized him. Flotr had taken the Irish arm and jerked him roughly from the box.

The Irishman's heavy hand fell on Flotr's shoulder. "Let us, sor." The Mark's shoulder. "Let us, sor." The big man fell back before the livid countenance Mark turned on him.

"Let go your coat. I'll do no harm. I'm only taking him to his father, where his place is instead of here hanging around where he isn't fit to touch."

Flotr jerked his arm free.

"Let him go."

But the Irishman caught him. "Tell Flotr the message, sor, lest you. I'm thinkin' he's just loony, sor.

DEFENDS POPULAR REMEDIES

Speakers Says Newspaper Should Investigate Merits of Medicines Before Barring Advertisements.

That an organized attempt has been made to blacken the reputation of the popular family remedies of this country, and to mislead the public regarding the merits of medicines the advertising of such medicines, was the charge made by Carl J. Hoffstatt, of Buffalo, N. Y., at the convention of the Advertising Affiliates at Detroit.

Mr. Hoffstatt is a director of the Proprietary Association of America, which includes in its membership two hundred firms which make the popular proprietary medicines of America.

Mr. Hoffstatt pointed out that it is the duty of the newspaper publisher to refuse the advertising of any fake or fraudulent medicine, but as it is not in his province to say fake or fraudulent advertising, but it is not right to shut down on all medical advertising because there have been some fakers, any more than it would be right to refuse to publish all department store advertising because certain stores have made a practice of lying about bargain sales.

Disease and death are mysterious. People who are perfectly well are interested in reading, for the time worn patent medicine joke, just at they laugh again and again over the misspelled sentences of the operation joke —"The operation was a success but the patient died." Title so-called humor has perhaps hurt the medicine business more than any thing. Yet when the hitherto healthy man feels a severe pain or illness, he immediately turns to medicine, and will bless the cure whether it be at the hands of a regular doctor, a specialist, an osteopath, a Christian Scientist or patent medicine. Nothing is more deadly than disease, nothing more beneficent than a cure.

Mr. Hoffstatt refuted the idea sought to be spread about that patent medicines are dangerous by showing that from 1900 to 1913 the amount of prepared medicines produced in America increased from $100,000,000 to $160,000,000 and that there is absolutely no evidence that the American Medical Association is trying to secure legislation against so-called patent medicines, the family doctor, individually, being the best customer they have for them. He estimated that 65% of the business of physicians is practically confined to proprietary medicines.

The writings of Dr. Wiley, he said, have also aimed to destroy confidence in proprietary medicines, but that Dr. Wiley's views are not infallible is shown by cases where he condemned as poisonous that which he recommended in case where, with all the power of his government, he forced a preparation as being dangerous to health, and was ingloriously vanquished.

There has been spread the idea that patent medicines are made of secret ingredients and, by smart advertising, sell one dollar worth for ten dollars worth, as a matter of fact, the medicine business is notoriously difficult, and where there has been one success at it, there have been a hundred failures. Any medicine which has no merit cannot live, because persons who are duped into buying it once will not buy it again, and the profit from purchases of a medicine can only come from repeat sales to the same, satisfied people. Therefore, any medicine which has been on the market for a number of years, and is still advertised, must have merit behind it to account for its success.

In conclusion, Mr. Hallett decreased that no newspaper is doing justice to its readers in the matter of medical or other advertising, unless it investigates, so, only the worthy of the advertisement offered for publication, but the merits of the article advertised. He pointed out that the few newspapers who have been deluded into the policy of barring out medical advertising have adopted this general policy, rather than to form an investigation bureau of this kind which could, in a constructive and useful manner, investigate and decide what is a good product and what is a fraud. Not only the medicine business, but in every other business which advertises, the worst fakes are the poorest.

The audience seemed to agree with Mr. Hallett's ideas on medicines, for the chairman decided the question at issue in his favor.

How Customs Change.

If some of the notables of ancient times were living today, what sort of ships they would act!

Noah would charter an ocean liner. Nero would step into the parlor and turn on the phonograph while Rome burned. Jonah would be swallowed. Hot. Hur would plan a 60 horse-power racing car and whirl around earlier tracks. Jason would hire the great detective bureau of the country to find the Golden Fleece. Instead of being burned at the stake, Joan would mount to the sun in a Blériot monoplane—without fear of being melting off. Napoleon would invade Russia in a Packard Twelve. Dewey would go on the Chautauqua circuit. Cain would plead circumstantial evidence. Jeff would be more and emotional insanity.

The Rainbow Monkey.

You have all seen black monkeys and gray monkeys and brown monkeys, but how many of you have seen a rainbow monkey?

The rainbow monkey's name is the mandrill and he lives in the hilly part of Africa. He is, indeed, a weird looking creature. His face is a bright blue, and on either side of his long hideous face are deep grooves of purple and scarlet and black. His eyes are tiny and glow like ugly sparks of fire.

The mandrill has funny, stubby ears and a tail that is a little knob of stump, and his hind legs are a deep violet color.

In fact, if you haven't seen a rainbow monkey, you probably will exclaim: "There isn't no such animal!"

Masterpiece in Mosaic.

At Irtz, a little town in Italy has just died a remarkable old man, a septuagenarian named Pratesani. He was very poorly but had he chosen he could have become one of the most famous European sculptors. As it was, he finished life as he began it—more or less penniless. When a boy he was apprenticed to a marble cutter, and he at once discovered his power in the chisel. For 60 years, says the London News, he had worked at his trade, doing the dreadful works of art, mostly in mosaics. M. Pratesani's masterpiece took him 20 years to complete. Twenty years. It is a black marble table. In the middle is a chessboard, on either side of which are playing cards arranged in fan. On the table are dominoes and dice, cigars and cigarettes, and several coins in gold and silver. The table is supported by three lions' heads. The materials in the table, besides the black marble, are carat, onyx, porphyry, malachite, lapis lazuli, the tones of which are black, red, orange, blue and white. Ninety different kinds of marble also were used.

Ignorant Butcher.

Mrs. Poiron-Joyen had picked up a few French phrases which she worked into her talk on every occasion. Entering the butcher shop one day, she inquired if he had any "ris veau?"

"Bend what, ma'am?" asked the butcher, puzzled.

"Bon vivant," she repeated. "That's the French for good liver, you know."—Boston Transcript.

Uses of the Chin.

The newest theory regarding the chin and its use from which seems the most reasonable yet advanced is that the chin is period of force exerted by our lower jaw in chewing our food, and in speech. According to this theory the chin is situated at the center end of the jaw bone where the pressure is greatest, and is made up of a heavy mass of bone and then is covered with thick pads of more greater force to the jaw a motion.

Refreshing Drink.

A tablespoful of hard to extract jelly dissolved in a glass of cold water makes a delicious and refreshing drink for a patient in a sick room, or on hot days to serve at a family berrar in place of tea or coffee. Some extract jelly dissolved in hot water is very soothing in a cold in the head.

Improvement on the Saw.

The efficiency of the saw has been greatly increased by the recent invention of a Frenchman. The teeth of the blade are alternately bent outward and inward, so that the cut made by the saw is almost twice as efficient as saws of the usual pattern, the kerf being at times as large. The blades do not break easily. They are made of wood or metal and are made in a great variety of shapes and styles.

Devotion.

"A woman's devotion is a wonderful thing," said the sentimentalist. "No wonder it is called the heart's treasure." "Where Henrietta places her affections her admiration is unquestioning. Her eyes are for her husband, and she sling our bulldog is that she thinks the wonderful will spoil his facial expression."

Our dead are never dead to us until we have forgotten them.—George Eliot.

The KITCHEN CABINET

"Recent achievements have done much for the science advocating food and Dieudonné in many branches of labor, but no branch of industry has been more revolutionized than that of cooking, by the Boston cooking method."

Another article which the fireman receiving one made in delicious pastry is the fact that a demand for pastry is a demand for a food which is so delicious and so nourishing which is so much neglected by housekeepers.

BEETS BAKED AND BOILED.

It would almost seem that there was nothing to say that has not been beforetimes said about beets, yet there are always some new thought to add to each one's knowledge of the ways of beets

A garish fine if not used in combination with some clashing color like carrots, for example. With the white of potato or the green of peas or cucumbers, they are exceedingly agreeable to the eye.

For a simple meat relish try this: Boil and mash fine a few beets, season with salt and pepper, add a generous amount of butter, then add grated horseradish to the plate, with a little lemon juice or vinegar to give it piquancy.

Beets should be carefully washed not to break the skin, and then boiled until tender, or baked in oven. The skins will then slip off. If the beets are dropped in cold water, they may be treated as ones taste dictates.

Beet Relish.—To one quart of cooked chopped beets add one-quart of cooked cabbage, one-half cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of pepper, a half teaspoonful of cayenne, one cupful of grated fresh horseradish, and vinegar to make it of the consistency to use as a sauce. Can cold. This will keep all winter and is very good.

Beet and Rhubarb Jelly.—Measure equal quantities of new beets and rhubarb, cook until tender in little water as possible, as the rhubarb is very juicy, mash and strain through a sieve, when tender, then drain in a jelly bag. Measure the juice and allow a pound of sugar to each pint of the juice ten minutes before adding the sugar heated, when it boiling on a cold plate pour into molds and still. This cold-weather preserve is especially good with meats.

Baked Cranberries.—Choose a wide, flat earthen dish large enough to allow a pint of berries to lie on the bottom. Pour over them a strip made with two cupfuls of sugar and a cupful of water. Place in a slow oven and bake until done. Take from the fire, but do not stir until cold, when each berry will be coated with jelly, and when piled into glass dish look like candied cherries.

The beds may blow and the fruit may grow,
And the autumn leaves drop crisp and sere,
But what recks the son, or the rain, or the year,
Thy love ever a song unto my dear.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT.

Having a half cupful of grape juice left over it was added to a cupful of cranberry sauce, a cupful of flour and a tablespoonful of baking powder to a rich crust and baked, making a most delicious pie. Another dish is baked chicken salad at Thanksgiving and consists of a cupful of sugar with the grape juice, simmer with a little water, and bake the shell first if so desired covering with meringue, and brown in oven.

Empress Cream. — Soften a tablespoonful of gelatin in a quarter of a cupful of cold water, add to it a cupful of hot milk, a half cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of vanilla. Strain into a dish and set in cold water. Beat as it begins to thicken and when it is very light and fluffy add white of one egg, one tablespoonful lemon juice, a little of the grated rind, half a cupful each of chopped dates, nuts and figs and a half pint of cream beaten stiff. Turn into a mold and serve, when molded, with small cakes.

Hot Potato Salad.—Boil a half dozen potatoes and slice quite hot. Fry thin slices of bacon and cut them into small pieces until there is half a cupful. Pour off the fat from the pan, leaving two tablespoonfuls. Into this stir a tablespoonful of flour and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of mustard, a few dashes of pepper and a quarter of a tablespoonful of salt. Stir constantly until smooth adding gradually a half cupful of mild vinegar. Let the dressing boil and the bacon and a small onion finely chopped and the potatoes, serve quite hot. This makes a good supper dish.

Dr. Marden's Uplift Talks

By ORISON SWETT MARDEN.

THE PRICE OF ONE CIGAR A DAY.

"How can you afford all these books?" asked a young man, calling upon a friend, "I can't seem to find money enough for even the leading magazines."

"Oh, that library is only my one cigar a day," was the reply.

What do you mean?" inquired the visitor.

"Mean! Just this: when you advised me to indulge in an occasional cigar, several years ago, I had been reading about a man who had bought books with money that others would have landed the cigars, and I thought I would try to do the same. You may remember that I said I should never smoke more than a cigar a day."

"Yes, I recall the conversation, but I thought you were the connoisseur."

"Well, I never smoked, but I put by the price of a five-cent cigar every day, and as the money accumulated, I bought books—the very books you see here.

"You don't mean to say that your cigar cost no more than that! Why, there are dollars worth of them.

"Yes, I know there are. I had six years of my apprenticeship to serve when you advised me to be a man. I put the money, which, at five cents a day, amounted to $18.25 a year, in a savings bank. I read the best books by themselves, as a result of my apprenticeship cigar, and, as the money accumulated, I would by this time have saved many, many times the price of the cigar, and would have been better off in every way and own a library besides.

"I have accumulated a good books. There is something in the very atmosphere of a library that is ennobling and inspiring. One seems to absorb culture from the atmosphere of a good library and commune with them. The mind changes; our ideals enlarge when we are surrounded by good books. One can learn to love books, and derive most pleasure from them, and constantly belong in their presence and get into association with them.

"Good books have a broadening and brightening the lives of a multitude of people. How many a wretched, poor and forsaken perhaps by the world, has found in books a friend, and a refuge from his want and woe, a pleasant substitute for his gloomy surroundings, and has learned that a prince is some great book.

"I have great faith in the increased cost of living, but never in history could poor people get so much for the money, and enjoy even the things that were luxuries a short time ago. Our income seems to be the price of life's essentials, and even the things that were luxuries a short time ago, for very little money, are today the products of the greatest minds that have lived, and are within reach of all. Copies of the great masterpieces of literature, which a few years ago were only within the reach of the rich, are now often found in the poorest homes and are read by the poor instead of a cigar.

"Any of our choicest friends live between the leaves of our favorite books. We become more intimate with them than with any living characters. We are not afraid to open our hearts to our favorite authors. They never need be no claim of opinion. Our companions in books are dead.

"People are often ashamed to be seen with some persons with whom they are associated, and they are often secretive about some of their friendships, but they are frank in choosing friends in books. Hence, the voluntary association of book companions is very important, and we can quickly estimate a man's character by his choice of books. Books are signs of his culture, his good taste and refinement, or the reverse, according to his choice. The books we collect are confessions of what we like and what we are.

"Books are useful to improve yourself read books which tend to elevate you, books which will stimulate you to be a little better to try a little harder to be somebody and to do something in the world.

"WHY CAN'T I DO IT?" THE ANSWER.

Spartan mothers, in order to stimulate their sons to endure, used to take their boys to the Pantheon in Athens, where the young Spartan mothers would be fired by the sight of the statues of the nation's gods and heroes. Standing before one of those heroic marble figures, the mother would tell the story of the original, while boyish hearts would sparkle with awakened emotion at the inspiration of her words. Many a young mind was thus fired to emulate the heroes that were appealed to by him.

No other one thing is of such prominent importance to a youth as to be constantly stimulated along the line of his career and nothing else will give him such inspiration, nothing else be so ambitious to emulate the stories of those who have accomplished things under great difficulties.

Emerson says: "I cannot even hear of personal vigor of any kind, a great speech, a great action, without fresh resolution." Tale is the moral of our history.

Great inspiring life-stories of those who have won and pushed their way to the front against all sorts of obstacles have proved the turning point in the lives of many of careers. They have encouraged the disheartened to hold on when they were ready to let go; they have induced them to persevere when they had decided to turn back. They have given them fresh hope and renewed confidence in themselves when those dearest to them had had predicted failure and had told them that to continue would be a waste of valuable time.

Smiles' "Self-Help" was a wonderful stimulus to me and I believe it has proved the turning point in the careers of tens of thousands of youths. Nothing else is more fascinating than the romance of achievement under difficulties. The youth full of hope, bubbling over with enthusiasm, reads the life-stories of men and women who have succeeded under difficulties, and he says to himself: "Why can't I do it?" To which something within him replies: "I can and I will."

Ambition requires a great deal and a great variety of food to keep it vigorous. Ambition must be fed, and the food must be of a robust will power, stern resolve, physical energy, powers of endurance, to be effective.

The fact that you have an almost uncontrollable impulse, a great absorbing ambition to do a thing which others say is beyond your ability, demand and your better self, is a notice sent upon you that you can do the thing and should do it at once.

There are tens of thousands of day laborers in this country—common workmen—putting their lives into drudgery, when if they had only been aroused to their possibilities, would have been employers themselves—would have been men of force of standing in their community—but they have held down by their ignorance of their own power. They have allowed themselves to be trodden on and to they must be hewers of wood and drawers of water. We see everywhere—splendid men and women, who impress us as giants in possibilities, but who are held down, ignorant of the great forces that are stirring within them.

Why not take an inventory of yourself at the beginning of this new year? Find out what you are and what you are doing and think you ought to do better, try to discover, no matter how low it takes you. Just where your trouble lies. Find out the things that keep you back. Make long searching tours of discovery, be your own conscienceist. Say to yourself over and over again: "Who others do and can do, I can do, when things." Constantly ask yourself: "If others can do it, why cannot I?"

You may find some great nugget of gold in these tours of self discovery which you never dreamed you possessed—great possibilities of power, which you never suspected, and which may, if developed, revolutionize your life.

Stars Enough for All of Us.

When Emerson advised everybody to hitch his wagon to a star, it was thought the advice was impracticable—that there were stars enough to go around. At that time there were only three or four thousand stars visible, which number was far short of the demand. But when maps of the sky were made with the assistance of the telescope and camera, it was found there were 50,000,000 stars—not one quite enough for all. These stars were below the seventeenth magnitude, which was as far as the optical instruments would reach, but since then, in place of seventeen magnitude stars have been brought to view, and now the number of stars is estimated at 1,000,000,000. So there is no trouble about it. There is a star for every wagon, and a few left for others generations. So hitch your wagon to a star, and don't delay. Time limes demand it.—Ohio State Journal.

The Bazar of Austria.

The most interesting of Austrian institutions, has nothing to do with monarchy, is the "bazar." In social rank he occupies somewhat the same position as the old English yeoman, farming his own land, and in many cases adding to his income and fortune than the nobility. The "bazar" has a strict social code of his own, sitting neither with the laborers on one hand nor the aristocracy on the other, is apparently quite content with his lot, and takes pride

PARIS GAY AGAIN AS HER CITIZENS RETURN

Streets Crowded and Schools Reopen After Months.

Paris.—Paris is filling up again and assumes a pleasant look, some small signs of being her old self. Her streets are filling more and more every day and there, the cafe terraces are less deserted, and the artists of whom four fifths are Parisians grow in number daily. It is estimated that from a quarter to half a million people have returned within the last fortnight.

Details for the return are not for the week. In the first place, the fear of being shut up in a beleaguered city is a great deterrent, and it needs only to count the calculations of those who died when those "terrible Germans" were practically under our walls. Winter is coming on, and life in a metropolis is miserable, especially when one is in one's own familiar home, is preferable to the discomforts and misery of an unknown countryside or provincial town. Schools have reopened, and parents naturally want to be with their boys and girls at this important period.

Hence there are two-thirds-Paris still ugly possibilities to be sure, but reflection has led people to see that the chance of being the individuals victimized in a small or a city of nearly 2,000,000 inhabitants as to be negligible.

Consequently, though half or more of the shops are shut and nearly all the hotels are shut, though there are no motorbuses, the city is beginning to look normal again. Of course, the crowds are at the second hour of decline, and while the cafes are open, which is until 1 o'clock, they are nearly as thronged as in the antebellum days.

CANAL NEUTRALITY RULE.

Only Six Fighting Ships of Warring Nations May Pass at One Time.

Washington.—President Wilson recently issued a proclamation announcing the neutrality regulations for the Panama canal zone.

It provides that all vessels of belligerent nations shall be allowed to pass through the canal in the order of their arrival at either end, but that twenty-four hours shall elapse between the departure of vessels belonging to the flags of two nations that are at war.

War vessels shall pass through in different nations shall be allowed to pass through the canal in the order of their arrival at either end, but that twenty-four hours shall elapse between the departure of vessels flying the flags of two nations that are at war.

No more than three vessels flying the flag of any belligerent nation shall anchor in the waters adjacent to the canal at one time, and not more than three, making six in all, shall pass through the canal at one time.

Commanders of belligerent vessels are forbidden to embark or disembark troops in the canal zone except for the purpose of making necessary repairs.

One more than three vessels flying the flag of any belligerent nation shall anchor in the waters adjacent to the canal at one time, and not more than three, making six in all, shall pass through the canal at one time.

HOW TO UTILIZE A WORN EVENING GOWN.

Relaxation robes, charming affairs of the dainty woman's wardrobe are called. But what's in a name? It is more helpful to most women to be told of the ways and means of making this or that article of wearing apparel are to be had in the shops, and varied are the prices asked for these garments. Exquisite are those of the de luxe family, while those for real comfort and utility are beautiful in line if not such exquisite material. The former are in many cases so much like the gowns for evening wear it is difficult to distinguish. Basques lend themselves readily to a attractive negligee, while the two piece idea is thought well of for this purpose. Turkish trousers are also introduced, while the Chinese coat worn over the accompanying straight skirt, is one of the most comfortable of all designs. Crêpe effects are charming. Lace pockets worn over accordion pleated slips or the frilled skirt offer many suggestions to the clever needlewoman. In fact, a half worn evening dress in the hands of this woman has its days doubled, for it is a foundation for saving time and expense. A lace jacket or one of chiffon with a power of this description would give the impression of an imposing material with which to develop her power.

Crepe de chine, silk the soft silks, chiffs, silkstone, quilted silks and the various crepes form the simpler negligees. The same homemaking plan calling for puffs, bit, lace, ribbon and ribbon roses trim the gown suitable for cost of lace, chiffon and silk.

PHYSICAL BLIGHT AS FRUIT OF THE WAR

Offspring of Survivors to Be Weak and Crippled.

Washington.—Over Europe of the future, no matter upon which side victory rests, declare medical men and scientists, will sweep the devastating hand of physical blight. Children with crippled forms, weak bodies and unbalanced minds will fill the cradles of every nation now at war, offspring of the men now moulding for interment the figures of the great conflict.

Dr. Alec Hrdlicka, curator of the National museum and noted anthropologist, is one of the savants who has studied the effect of Europe's conflict upon the children yet to be born. To him the present war presents a vastly different aspect with regard to future generations than any conflict his sight presented before.

Since men of science first began to study the effect of wars upon the human race it has been contended that whatever the best physical examples of a nation went to war to be destroyed the physical manhood of that nation suffered. Thus it was discovered that for every man killed or fatally wounded of four died of disease. As warfare approached its present modern form the number of killed and wounded in each engagement decreased, while the number who died from "natural causes" increased. Army physicians say that the percentage of mortality from wounds in the present conflict is far less than it has been in any of the wars of the past.

But the effect of such medical men and scientists who add to that statement that it is not that the wounds of war will not detract from the physical welfare of Europe's future race, but that disease, which, as will the men who return on wounded, will be a factor of very serious consequence in the future life, so far as the physical welfare of the race is concerned. Small pox, typhoid, typhus, cholera, venereal diseases and scurvy will be the legacy of the war.

Rev. Lloyd Vinyard, of Elizabethtown, Ill., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Charlevoix Baptist church. He arrives here today, and will hold services next Sunday.

The room in the rear of Frank Wood's barber shop, used for many years by Mr. Wood as a shop, is being transformed into a club-room for the Odd Fellows, who own the building and occupy the second floor for lodge purposes.

Rev. Lloyd C. Vinyard, of Elizabethtown, Ill., who a few weeks ago conducted special meetings in the Baptist church, was called home on account of the serious illness of his father. Before leaving for his home, he had accepted a call from the Baptist Organization to become their regular pastor, and now is returning to his charge. Will begin regular services in the Baptist Church, Nov. 29th. All are cordially invited to attend.

Although Upper Peninsula railroads have announced that they will not accept the carcasses of deer killed by hunters for shipment, there has been no embargo placed upon the animals by the state or federal governments, and until such action has been taken the roads will be compelled to accept the dead deer for transportation. It has not been ascertained whether or not the deer are affected with the foot and mouth disease and until such information is secured by the state and federal departments there will be no embargo placed on the shipment.

Southwestern Michigan was swept by its first blizzard of the season. State officials in charge of the fight against the two animal plagues prevailing in this section—the foot and mouth disease and glanders—are highly elated at the coming of snow. They asserted it would do more good than anything else toward preventing further spread of the disease. It was noted by state officials that the deer in the north country have the foot and mouth disease. A thorough investigation has been made of the deer in the north woods, and no traces of the epidemic have been discovered.

At a recent meeting of the republican State Central Committee, held in Grand Rapids, a special committee was appointed to draft a plan for the amending of the present law relative to primary elections. The principal idea of the proposed new amendment will be to change matters so that it will be compulsory for party members to vote their own ticket. The report of this special committee will be submitted to the state central committee at its next meeting, Dec. 15. After the state body has passed upon it it will be presented to the republican members of the state legislature. The spring state convention will be held in Grand Rapids in February.

November 1914 reminds us of months of that same name in the sweet by-and-by. It has been a "monster,"—one of the sort that makes sailors swear, Gales and blizzards have followed each other in swift succession. The wind-bound shippers hug the radiators and get up in the night to talk to the barometer in language not on the glass. The growling habitant shovels snow and coal as the nor'wester howls. But it is Thanksgiving today, and tomorrow begins the month in which Christmas comes. So we another unpleasant and storm-inspired thoughts and thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift for what we have received but really have not deserved, looking forward to the happy Christmas which brings joy to the world because on that day a Child was born.

The habit of the old soldiers and their families of spending occasional winter evenings at the homes of their old comrades was renewed on Saturday evening when about thirty assembled at the home of Captain Barnes, the occasion being the commemoration of his eighty-fifth birthday, as near as may be. It seems that his advent was duly celebrated for the 20th, but that day falling on Sunday and his parents being strictly religious it was postponed to the following day; that he has more than made good for handicap of any lost days of his youth any one of his acquaintance will readily concede. Although all the old boys are sliding far on the down hill side of life on these occasions they demonstrate that they are still capable of enjoying themselves and doing full justice to all that is placed before them and this characteristic has never been more in evidence than at the most royal welcome at the home of Captain Harrison Sexton on the evening of the 21st.

Mrs. Ray Ashdon left Monday for Hillyard, Wash., where her mother is critically ill.

W. F. Smith is at the Petoskey hospital under treatment for a bad case of rheumatism.

O. D. Hammond has been appointed by the governor as a delegate to the good roads congress, to be held in Chicago Dec. 14-17, and he says he will go.

The last of the trout eggs were shipped to the Northville hatchery yesterday. Mr. Stewart is now waiting for the waterfish spawning season to open.

Regular meeting of Charlevoix Lodge No. 292, F. & A. M., Dec. 1st. Annual election of officers and other important business. All attend.

King Saunders and Jack Superneau left Tuesday morning for Detroit, where they will spend Thanksgiving with friends. Later attending the Y. M. C. A. Conference held at Ann Arbor, Nov. 27-29th.

J. S. Ackert is in Detroit this week investigating the matter of accepting the position on the road that his brother Lawrence has filled for a Detroit concern. Lawrence having been given other territory. This is a probability that Mr. and Mrs. Ackert will move to Detroit.

Railroad rates from cities in Michigan to points outside the state are to be boosted one-half cent per mile. The tariffs have already been filed and the new rates will become effective the last day of next month. This announcement came from the railroads themselves. They asserted that the interstate commerce commission had approved the action despite the fact that two cent fare laws are in operation in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. The increased rates will be effective in those states, it is announced. The two-cent per mile rate between points within the states will be continued as at present.

Petoskey Daily News: Such courage as displayed by a party of St. James Beaver Island, residents should ultimately win success. The old saying "that heart we've was fair lady" must have filled the heart of one Harold McCann with more than the ordinary amount of bravery for with Miss Ella Martin, his fair bride-to-be, he braved the angry waves of Lake Michigan and made the crossing from Beaver Island to Charlevoix during the driving storm in order that they might be in Petoskey to be married at St. Francis church Monday morning. The young people are well known residents of St. James, the bride being the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Martin, and the groom the son of Mr. and Mrs. John McCann. Father Bruno performed the ceremony, the young couple being attended by Alfred Gaudette, of this city, and Miss Carrie Hynd, of Cheboygan.

Northern Michigan

The James H. Johnson Pickling company, of South Haven, are securing acreage and will place a pickling station in Charlevoix. Three hundred acres is the amount the company wants to contract for. The company will furnish the seed free and are paying high prices. Farmers here are taking contracts for next season.

Some statistician of western Michigan has figured out that more than three per cent of the people living in the rural sections of the western part of the state are on relief places, and less than forty-five per cent of the people in the cities and villages are living in rented homes. This means that the people as whole are pleased with their lot and have located in this region to stay.

Prisoners in the Emmet county jail were frustrated in attempting a wholesale delivery. Under Sheriff Doherty nipped the plan in the bud by discovering several saws made of bars and loose bolts on a steel wire window screen. The inmates had used a saw improvised from a table knife. The Indian released from custody confessed to the plan of the others to escape.

The Morgan livery barn at Traverse City, the oldest livery of its kind in northwestern Michigan, was destroyed by fire of unknown origin last Thursday morning. Eighteen horses and vehicles were saved. The barn was built in 1870, and livery equipment was owned by Glen C. Morgan who operated the business for the last year. The building is located across the street from the Park Place Annex, and all that saved this part of the hotel was a foot of snow which kept the flying shingles from igniting the roof. The loss on building and contents is estimated at $6,000, partially insured.

The iron ore boat Lehigh of the Lake Superior Iron & Chemical Co. went ashore last Thursday near Manistique with a considerable load of ore. The Lehigh was bound for Sault Ste. Marie when she encountered the heavy storm of last week. The fall of snow was sufficient to keep boats in a day or two over their schedule. The Lehigh made her last regular run to East Jordan sometime ago but it was found that more of a certain grade of ore was needed and she was bringing several hundred tons of the required kind to ashore. Word has not been received as to when she will reach her destination.

The hunters from below crossing the straits for the north peninsula weeks ago to shot deer, reported a big kill of yesterday number 3,592, according to a statement made by Pioneer Wenzel of the Chief Wauagan, who each year keeps an accurate record of the numbers. These figures are less than last year for the corresponding period by 200, the number coming north up to and including Nov. 16, 1913, being 3,792. The list of dead and wounded of the human army, by reason of the savage attacks of the deer slayers, apparently shows no diminution from former years, judging from the casualties daily reported through the press.

Petoskey News: The Grand saw mill at Walloon Lake, was destroyed by fire early Saturday evening and is a total loss. The mill had been been in operation for several weeks but a crew of men had been at work there repairing and overhauling and getting the place in readiness for active work. The mill is not a large one but gave employment to quite a number of men a part of each year and provided a place where the farmers and residents of that village could go for custom sawing. William Grund, owner and manager of the mill, was quite extensively engaged in the acre or more of pickles. The farmers realized a good profit if means to them and the business opportunity for pickles have recently arisen. A total 120 acres have been contracted for. A few more farmers will be called on and it is expected that by the end of the week 100 acres will be signed for. The company, whose headquarters are in Detroit, is planning on putting up twenty stakes, 12x14, and covered by a roof, and also a large warehouse, calling for the expenditure of at least $6,000. The site has not been definitely selected, but it is probable that it will be near the old tanks. This new business will give employment to several men almost continuously the year around.

VAN PELT REPLIES

CHICAGO, Nov. 30, 1914.

EDITOR SENTINEL:—

Mr. Arnold's article, issued in the Boyne City Citizen of recent date, is just what I expected to hear from some first-class, well-educated farmer. He has certainly made things plain from his standpoint, and no one can criticize in the least what he has said.

If the road should be built as they are now building it, a little here and a little there, there never would be any incentive to build good roads diverging from it, but if a permanent and durable road could be built all around Pine Lake, at one time, better roads would be built leading in all points from it as a natural consequence. The great benefit to be derived from this road is the thousands of people that it would bring into Charlevoix. Co. for the summer, who naturally would buy property, not on the driveway, but find locations near as Mr. Arnold says divides Pine Lake from Bear Lake. The whole country cannot help but be benefited by it, and were I a business man and owned Charlevoix Co., without doubt the first thing I would do would be to build this road, the same as a man will put out a street in addition in a town or in a city.

I think Mr. Arnold has been a little too hard on the men who have automobiles because they are here to stay, just exactly the same as horses are planted oxen in our county thirty or forty years ago, and in ten or twelve years from today, more farmers will be using automobiles to market their crops than they will have horses.

Now, what appealed to me, when I first began this propaganda, was that good roads, which would last 50 to 100 years, would reduce the taxes materially on my property as compared with building them the way they are now, and rebuilding them in a couple of years. I have been asked what I thought of the supervisors voting to build a few more miles of road this year. I think it was the proper thing for them to do. I do not see how they could have done otherwise. They want good roads, and until we all see the advantage of building the road all at once, to one or two years at the outside, instead of continuing a mile or two on each road as we are now, there never will be a time when there will be a continuous good road from one end to the other. If it is ever to be done, it has to be done all at one time in order that we may get the good out of it.

I am continually receiving articles and all kinds of literature from the people who have read these articles. One says that a cement road is best, and another that a brick road is the proper thing. We, of course, know that brick roads have lasted twenty or twenty-five years, and that cement roads are lasting well where they are built, and we all know that the macadam road does not last, in fact, it cannot last and you cannot hold it so it will last, and the upkeep is a great deal more than any other road. Probably the upkeep of the brick road would be less, as I know places where it has lasted ten years without a dollar having been spent on it, and with much heavier traffic than we would have.

Really, aside from the taxes, it is nothing to me whether these roads are built or not, but I have lived in Charlevoix thirty-one years, and expect to live there thirty-one years longer, and I believe it is the best county in the world, not in the state, but in the world.

I hope others will write and give their views the same as Mr. Arnold did. The way to get the most out of the sun is to reach it. We will never know what is inside if we do not. There may be a big fat worm there instead of meat for all we know.

Now, good people, talk it over, and let us do what the majority think best, but bear in mind one thing, your taxes, with roads being built as they are now, will be double later on. The only way to do is on the road proposition is to build the best you can when you first build. If there is any merit in what I have said, let discuss their proposition and get at it, and if there is not, abandon the idea. Personally, I can get over the road as well as anybody, but I am talking for the general good.

Very truly yours,
GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

MASONS VINDICATE K. OF C.

(From the American Catholic News Review)

A committee of thirty-second and thirty-third degree Masons of California, to whom the Knights of Columbus in Los Angeles submitted their ritual and obligations on account of the wide circulation given the so-called "Knights of Columbus oath," have rendered a report in which the following statements occur:

"We find that neither the alleged oath or any oath or pledge bearing the remotest resemblance thereto in matter, spirit or purpose is used or forms a part of the ceremonies of any degree of the Knights of Columbus. The alleged oath is scurrilous, wicked and libelous, and must be the invention of an impious and venomous mind. We find that the order of Knights of Columbus, as shown by its rituals, is dedicated to the Catholic religion, charity and patriotism. There is no propaganda proposed or taught against Protestants or Masons or persons not of Catholic faith. Indeed, Protestants and Masons are not referred to directly or indirectly in the ceremonials and pledges. The ceremonial of the order teaches a high and patriotism, instills a love of country, inculcates a reverence for law and order, urges the conscientious and unselfish performance of civic duty, and holds up the constitution of our country as the richest and most precious possession of a knight of the order. We can find nothing in the ceremonials of the order that, to our minds, could be construed to be any treason."

Signed by Motley Hewes Flint, thirty-third degree past grand master of Masons of California, Dara Reid Weller, thirty-second degree past grand master of Masons of California, William Rhodes Harvey, thirty-third degree past master and master of Scottish Rite lodge; Samuel E. Burke, thirty-second degree past master and inspector of Masonic district.

The verdict of a jury in Waterville, Minn., in a libel case, completely exonerated the Knights of Columbus from the charge of taking the alleged oath.

AN UNFAIR CRITICISM

A Chicago correspondent, signing himself "Safety First," writes the Grand Rapids Press a very harsh criticism of the U. S. weather bureau service in which he exhibits a marked spirit of unfairness.

The statement that "a majority of the worst storms come without any signals being displayed," is a very radical departure from the facts.

Storm warnings were ordered and displayed for every heavy blow that this fall, and that one was the second installment of the one that preceded it, notwithstanding the warnings were displayed to the recognized advantage of the shipping interests.

The weather bureau does not claim to be infallible; but the writer, with an experience of 35 years in the weather bureau service, asserts, unequivocally, that 75 per cent of the storm warnings "justify." We are pretty well conversant with the sentiment of sailing masters, and they will bear us out in this statement.

As to the fog bell, that is another matter. It is certainly a help to vessel masters in foggy weather, but with a snow-storm and northerly or westerly wind it falls short of what the skippers would like, and that is a fog whistle on south point. This will come soon when the government emerges from the financial hole in which a democrat administration has driven it.

THE WORK OF AN ARTIST

One of the most ingenious and attractive window displays that we have ever seen has been shown in the Charlevoix Hardware Co's store the past week. It is a locomotive and tender, fabricated from various articles in the store's stock, and, it entitles the fabricator to a certificate of merit in his line. The body of the engine is an ordinary tubular boiler, standing resting horizontally upon a pair of lawn mowers from which the handles have been detached. The forward trucks are likewise lawn-mowers, but of a smaller size. About the only part of the "engine" that was built for the occasion is the engineer's cab, which was made of sheet iron.

The steam dome is a copper oil-can and an ordinary hand bell rests in its proper place. A short piece of steel iron pipe constitutes the smoke-stack, for cylinders coffee grinders of a new pattern are utilized, and as cylinders stove-poker serves as the connecting rod of the drivers. The headlight is a nickle plated consider with the opening heating front.

The pilot, or "Cow-Catcher" is made from a combination of different size files. The tender is a small old-fashioned wood heating stove with hearth.

Wm. Bognet is the artist, and he certainly scores big on a window display.

PROTEST WITHDRAWN

The protest filed by the employees of Charlevoix township against the spreading of taxes on the alleged grounds of unfair equalization by the board of supervisors, upon which the board of state tax commissioners stopped the spreading of the tax, has been withdrawn by the aforesaid supervisor, and the several supervisors have been notified to proceed with the spreading of the tax.

HOW THE RED CROSS SEAL ORIGINATED

Nearly $1,900,000 has been raised by Red Cross Christmas Seals in the last six years, and yet many people who will buy these holiday stickers at the seventh annual sale do not know how the charity stamp idea originated.

It was war that brought forth the charity stamp—our Civil War of 51 to 65. Some of your grandmothers first played "post-office" with stickers similar to Red Cross Seals "way back in 1862, when they conceived the idea of selling stamps at fairs for the benefit of the relief funds for the soldiers' hospitals in Brooklyn, Boston and elsewhere. Nearly $1,000,000 was raised in this way before 1865. After the war this method of raising money was discontinued in this country for a generation, although it found vogue in Portugal, Switzerland, Austria, France, Spain, Denmark, Norway, Russia, Sweden, and other European countries. There are now several thousands of different types of charity stamps used in all parts of the world, as many as forty being used in Austria for children's hospital aims.

Stamps on seals were first used to get money for the anti-tuberculosis crusade in Norway and Sweden in 1904. To Jacob Riis, the well-known social worker of New York, and to Miss Emily P. Bissell, the executive secretary of the Delaware Red Cross, jointly belong the honor of originating our American Red Cross Christmas Seal. In 1907 Mr. Riis' interest was aroused by the recent of a Danish Christmas postage stamp on a letter from Norway. He published an article about this quaint looking stamp in the "Outlook," and suggested some possible uses for it in this country. Miss Bissell at once saw an opportunity here and prepared a stamp, from 'a sale of which her society realized $6,000 for tuberculosis work. So impressed was she with the success that she induced the American Red Cross to take up the sale in 1908 on a national basis. With very little organization and with hardly any attempt at careful advertising the sale that year brought in, nevertheless, over $135,000 for anti-tuberculosis work in various parts of the United States. In 1909, with more thorough organization, the sale was increased to nearly $250,000; in 1911 to over $300,000, and in 1912 to over $400,000. Last year the sale was increased to nearly 45,000,000 seals, netting $450,000 for the anti-tuberculosis campaign.

It is fitting to note that war, inhuman and cruel, was the mother of the Red Cross Seal, and that now war for humanity against disease brings it back to its fullest usefulness.

Red Cross Seal sale will continue in Charlevoix and throughout the state and it is desirous that every one should help in this good work. M. W. N.

WEST MICHIGAN TO PROFIT BY WAR

An Effort to be Made to Attract Belgians to Settle in Our Country

The people of western Michigan propose to profit because of the distress of the Belgians, as well as to assist these people. a plan has been evolved for enclosing copies of western Michigan magazines, leaflets and folders in the many packages of food products and clothing being forwarded from this section to Europe. It has been pointed out that the better class of people in Belgium can read English and that in sending printed matter about western Michigan in the boxes and barrels, there is a chance of interesting some of these people in the wonderful opportunities for industrial development that exist in the western Michigan country. At a meeting of the Traverse City Committee of Twenty-Five last week, the subject of Belgian relief was given great consideration and the plans already formulated for gathering together carloads of articles suitable for sending across the ocean, where elaborated and at the same time the kind and amount of printed matter to be sent along with the goods was considered. At first it was suggested that folders be prepared in the Belgian language and then it was made known that the class of people who would be most desirable would be able to read the English publications and even if they could not understand all the words used in our magazines they would be able to appreciate the pictures of well-kept farms and heavily laden orchards. So it was decided that Grand Traverse and western Michigan printed matter should be sent on with the food and clothing supplies.

The fact that the Belgians are in distress and appealing for living people was a strong factor in coming to a decision in this matter. It was believed that western Michigan could assimilate ten fifteen thousand of these people and be the richer and that the people themselves would enjoy a greater prosperity than they have ever known in the old world.

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it. This is hardly fair to you, for if you put some money in it will bring the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.

Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business whom you are prone to envy, thinking they have a mysterious Midas touch. Almost invariably, everyone they began with no capital but a strong will and an inflexible purpose.

For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.50 a week, in six years he had banked $2000—enough to start a modest business of his own. MORAL—Bank your own money.

THE LOST FRIEND

By H. M. EGBERT.

Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.

Col. Jim Rice sat in the swivel chair and looked at Miss Elizabeth Mae and pulled his drooping mustache.

Colonel Rice was the best man in the world whom one would have associated with a large city store. A tall, upright fifty, perhaps, with a dignified figure and military bearing, there was something chivalrous about the man in spite of his reputation. If there can be grades of feat livers, the colonel undoubtedly belonged to the highest grade. In so famous he was regarded as a man of unblemished reputation and those who knew what his life was somehow excused him.

The colonel had fallen heir to the store on his brother's death, and he had not known what to do with it.

His first act was to call all the employees together and raise their salaries. Then he promoted all the pretty girl clerks. The colonel's old bachelor friend said that the prettier a girl was—little was that the prettier a girl was—and every girl was pretty if she had health and a sweet temper—the less right she had to stand on a pedestal. Miss Fay, being the prettiest and sweetest of the lot, was appointed the colonel's private secretary.

This was as far as the colonel got before the departmental managers interfered and told him with their respects that he would have to leave the management of affairs to them. He yielded to the inevitable and turned into bankruptcy.

The colonel made them agree that the revised salary schedule should stand, and after that he became down to the store for two hours a day and pretended to answer letters.

It wasn't much fun for him, he came more than twice a week but for Miss Fay. She was down every day and also came from a little town to Looked at Miss Fay and Pulled His Drooping Mustache.

Connecticut. She was one of the pretiest girls he could imagine, and she was with her fluffy brown hair, gray eyes, red lips and fine figure. The colonel was a little afraid of her at first, but after a while he was her confidant. He knew how to do that; he was always gentle and always a gentleman.

He had employed her as his secretary, at twenty dollars, one Monday morning, and he learned about Tom. Tom was a young farmer in her home town and they were engaged to be married—perhaps in a year's time, when she had saved her insurance money and he had begun to make things go better. He had only lately taken over the farm, and it was heavily mortgaged.

"Miss Elizabeth," said the colonel, and, though it was the first time he had ever called her by her Christian name, the tone was not familiar. It was impossible to take exception to his words. "Miss Elizabeth, I'm pretty much too charming a girl to take up country life. Don't you think I'd have your pick of a dozen million dollars?"

Miss Elizabeth laughed softly and looked at the colonel with that tender expression that always puzzled him.

"I'll prove it," said the colonel. "I'm going to take you to the best hotel in town, and just you watch the men stare at you."

Miss Elizabeth put on her hat and accompanied him. She had never before taken a big restaurant before, had never eaten cold patient consommé or iced champagne. She enjoyed each bite, the spoonfuls of the ice cold wine out of coolers, although her parents had been prohibitionists. Still, she did not want to hurt the colonel.

"I have had a most delightful time, you are very good to me," she said. When they returned to the office.

"Pray! Pleasure the expression, mean!" inquired the colonel, and Miss Elizabeth nodded gaily.

That was the beginning of many luncheons. At times the girl's conscience hurt she felt that she ought not to accept so much kindness from this friend. But he was always so gentle, so entirely respectful to her. There one day the manager insisted on her doing with him and go to the theatre.

She did, and that night, after she had left him at her door, Miss Elizabeth began to dread that his interest in her was one wholly platonic. There had been an undertone of something that she did not understand in his manner that evening. And, what mattered her most, she had somehow felt that it was not advisable to make any reference to him in her letters to Tom.

Tom was looking forward anxiously to coming home for a short visit in the following month. Perhaps then Miss Fay would tell Tom. Perhaps.

She went to bed with a conscience not wholly at peace that evening.

It was a day or two later that Miss Elizabeth spoke of her vacation to the colonel.

"Why, I have been thinking of that," he said. "I shall want you—at least, I should like to have you help me, if you can. You see, Miss Elizabeth, I am taking a little yachting party to Key West, and I ought to keep in touch with business affairs. If you could accompany us, you can have another holiday when we get back."

The yachting trip was to take about six weeks. Miss Elizabeth had never been at sea; much as she wanted to see Tom again she hesitated over the resistance. The colonel told her that there were to be three or four other ladies. They were to go aboard the vessel at the little private dock at seven in the evening, a week thence.

Miss Elizabeth wrote a letter to Tom, explaining the situation and promising to come home as soon as she returned. Then, at the appointed hour, she accompanied the colonel who called at her boarding house in a taxicab, to the pier.

The yacht lay alongside the wharf. A watchman paced her decks, but, though they inspected her from stem to stern, there was no sign of the others. They had sat down for a moment in the dining saloon. The girl was becoming a little nervous.

"We will have dinner now," said the colonel.

"Just a minute," said the girl hurriedly. "When will the others be here? Your address—she has not expected before dinner."

The colonel called his stateroom and looked hard at her. Then he stretched out one hand and patted hers gently.

"My dear," he said, "we are going to be the only two passengers aboard this trip."

The girl looked at him with terrified eyes and rose from her chair with a gasp. To the last day of her life she always pictured the colonel thus, seated before her, pulling his drooping mustache, and smiling at her with such a kind expression on his face.

"I thought you understood the situation. Perhaps I was wrong; I had no idea I deceive you. That is not my way. There are certain conventions—why did you think I was taking you out to luncheons and dinners?"

"As a friend," she cried hotly, feeling her cheeks burning.

He shook his head. "Men of fifty do not make friends of their young employees in that way, my dear," he answered. "I am sorry. Let me help you with your coat."

They went up the stairs to the deck and stood side by side there for a moment. Everything in Elizabeth's life seemed to have crumbled into ashes. She tottered.

"I am sorry," she said. "I wish I had understood. Good-by."

For the life of her she could not summon any indignation against him. She did not feel the insult then, only the unbearable loss.

Colonel Rice took her hand in his and bent over it. They strolled up the dock, he called a taxicab and saw her to her door. Then he raised his hat and left her.

On the following morning a special delivery message arrived for the girl, asking her to be at her position in the store till the colonel's return. They need not meet, he said, but he trusted she would take charge of his interests till he could make arrangements. Elizabeth went back to business.

She did not see him again. The yacht was wrecked in the great storm that ravaged the Florida coast that summer. Colonel Rice never appeared at his office. He died, with all his crew, but he had had time to make certain arrangements. The girl became heiress of the possessor of a substantial legacy, but she never told Tom of her inheritance. That was a page of her life that she tore out of the book.

"I thought you seemed delighted, dear, you are very good to me," she said. When they returned to the office.

"Fear! Pleasure the expression, mean!" inquired the colonel, and Miss Elizabeth nodded gaily.

That was the beginning of many luncheons. At times the girl's conscience hurt she felt that she ought not to accept so much kindness from this friend. But he was always so gentle, so entirely respectful to her. There one day the manager insisted on her doing with him and go to the theatre.

The "Triple French Twist" Coiffure

AMONG the new ways of doing the hair which were launched with the opening of the present season the style known as the "French twist" made headway faster than some other of the new ideas. As ordinarily done it proved a rather trying coiffure to all but youthful, round-faced wearers. It brings the long coil of hair to the top of the head and putting a portion of it forward on to the forehead a more becoming arrangement result, especially when the hair was first waved.

At the end of the summer women had become very tired of the same mode in hairdressing and were all eager for something—almost anything—which promised change and variety. Hairdressers took advantage of this state of things and the readiness with which the French twist was accepted, to introduce some new ideas. Embodying something of the French twist, in conjunction with neatly waved hair, they have produced some charming coiffures, none of them more artistic and few of them as pleasing as that pictured here.

This coiffure is called the "triple French twist." It is soft-looking and is becoming to almost any face, and it is distinctly new. It does not require a great abundance but takes some time, as all the hair is first waved in large regular waves. Also small supports of crepe hair may be necessary, in case the natural hair is too fine, to support it.

The hair must first be parted off at each side in a part extending from the outer angle of the eye to the neck. This divides the hair into three squares. The large one comes in center and one at each side of the head. Each portion is then waved.

The hair at the sides is combed forward to be out of the way, and the central portion separated in three strands and lightly rolled into three twists, which are pinned down and afterward combed rather so that they have the appearance of one long twist of hair. This must be soft and loose-looking and to provide a support the hair at the crown is to be teased before it is twisted, and afterward spread into the loop roll. Invisible wire pins help to join the three separate twists into one.

The hair at the sides is brought up into the twist the ends turned under and the side hair pinned along the center twist with small wire pins. If there is not enough hair to make a soft, abundant appearance small pads or supports are placed next the center twist at each side, the waved hair combed over these and the ends pinned under.

The use of the most elaborate of neckwear pieces which tempt the wearer to show considerable of the bands of velvet ribbon, without an attached ruff, coupled with the hooks and eyes or snap fasteners at the left side, and set close up about the throat, have small fancies could be made a startlingly novel and beautiful bit of finery will seem your attire. Those who work with ribbons are inspired by these beautiful fabrics and watch the ensuing models from the viewpoint of the ribbon specialist.

Therefore, if you linger at the ribbon counter you are sure to be charmed by some novelty produced by the adaptation of ribbons to certain whims of fashion.

Besides the things that we have not seen before there are those with which we are familiar, but they are made up in the new patterns in ribbon and with novel finishing touches in ornaments.

The most fascinating places in the array of novelties are designed for neckwear. An example from among these is shown in the ribbon neckruff, of which a picture is given here. It is made of moire ribbon in broad black and white stripes, but plaited to a band of black moire ribbon having a white picot edge. The band fastens at one side with a snap fastener under a knot with hanging loops and ends. A handsome American Beauty rose made of satin ribbon and in the natural rose color is fastened on the band just back of the loops and ends.

Black Rooms the Fad.

The fashionable hostess this winter will give her parties and afternoon tea in black wedgewood cups, set out on a leadwood table, and in the center of the table will be a black jar filled with blazing red and yellow tulips, golden chrysanthemums or scarlet nasturtiums. If she is a hostess who can afford to highlight her attire, she will have a whole black and white drawing-room, for this is the style fashionable for last now. Trying on fashionable show signs reading: "Have your rugs and carpets dyed black; we do it." and decorators are specializing in wallpapers of dull gray tones which second artistically with white or black woodwork and black rugs and hangings.

THE CHILDREN

FOOTBALL GAME IS MODIFIED

Interesting Substitute for Popular Pastime in Use Now in Kansas Schools—How It Is Played.

An interesting substitute for football that retains most of the elements of the popular game, and at the same time is free from roughness, will be introduced by many boys' clubs. A game is tag football. It will appeal particularly to the boys who are too young to play regular football, or who have been forbidden to play because of physical incapacity. It is also a good game for older boys when there are not enough players to form two eleven teams. With some adaptations it has also been played successfully by girls.

The game is played with a rugby ball, or a regulation football, by two opposing teams of from five to eleven players each. Scores are made by the goal and small rules hold good except where special rules are prescribed.

After the sides have been chosen, the ball is kicked off, and the receiver runs toward his opponents' goal until an opposing player touches him. The ball is then declared a fumble, the ground on an incomplete pass, or if he charges the ruler runner, he is tagged, or at the point where he goes out of bounds.

Because of the obvious futility of straight-line plays, the forwards spread out along the scrimmage line. The play is therefore much more open than in ordinary football.

As in football, no player may kick the ball when it is on the ground, except the kicker, who may make a free try for a goal. Another footballer may not kick the ball kept in mind. Players must be on-side at the kick-off, at the beginning of each down, and at the free kicks for field goals.

An important variation from football is that the side putting the ball in play may have only one man on the scrimmage line if it so chooses. Every man on the team is eligible at any time to receive a pass, contrary to any direction. It is therefore a running, passing, kicking game, and can be played without likelihood of mishaps long after the ground has been frozen.—Youth's Companion.

SHOOTING A PING-PONG BALL

Toy Weapon Projects a Missile, but a Perfectly Harmless One—Fills Long Felt Want.

There is justly a deep-rooted objection to the toy pistol because of the damage and injury which is likely to be inflicted by it; but at all same time, there is a period in every boy's life when he calls for a toy pistol, and one which does not shoot a missile does not seem to fill the bill. Every doting parent knows the difficulty of denying a child such a trifling thing as the result is that almost invariably the parent waives his objections.

jection, for a limited period at least, and the child gets the coveted toy pistol. In order to provide a pistol with the requirement that it should not hurt, a curious sample of new design suddenly sprang into vogue, which, although not a disaster under any circumstances, is most everyone knows, the ping-pong ball is made of the finest, most tender of cellulose. It is molded in two hemispheres, and the two parts cemented together making a perfect sphere and one which is exceedingly lively, the action of which is all bounds from point to point make much merriment. The pistol which was recently patented is shown herewith, and its mode of operation may be readily observed.

A Dog Trainer.

"Hey! What are you doing there?" Little Arthur was caught. He was up in the pantry with his pockets full of luscious fruit, while below stood a bull terrier trying wildly and frantically to reach him. And the owner of the tree and the dog had just come upon the scene. "What, dye want up the pear tree, young fellow?" asked the newcomer. "Well, I'll tell you how." "Pip-please, sir, I-I-trying to teach your dog to stand on his hind-legs!"—Baltimore Trifles.

A Spelling Lesson.

What does Ghoughphtheightteen spell?

Do you give it up? It spells potato, that is, according to the following: Gh stands for p, as you will find from the last letters in hiccough; ough for o, as in dough; phth stands for t, as in phthisis; eigh stands for a, as in weighor; ti stands for t, as in gentle, and eau stands for o, as in beau.

Thus you have potato.

together to make use of his own camera in making the enlargement. That is he makes the enlargement with the same lens with which the original picture was made. The attachment is made of some light material and has facilities for holding the plate or paper on which the enlargement is to be made. The negative to be enlarged is placed in the back of the camera and the lens is directed into the negative of the attachment. The whole is then placed where a strong light, either natural or artificial, is allowed to shine through the negative and lens and to project the picture into the attachment. This does the work of a rather expensive enlarging arrangement at a little cost. The attachment was recently patented.

CREED OF THE COUNTRY BOY

Life Out of Doors and in Touch With Earth Is Natural Life of Man—Boy Should Be Trained.

In every school house in Prince Edward county, Virginia, a placard containing a creed for the American country boy is posted. It is the boys Corn Club of Virginia has been posted. It reads:

I believe that the country child finds made is more beautiful than the city which man made—that life out of doors and in touch with the earth is the natural life of man. I believe that work with nature is more inspiring than work with the most intricate machinery. I believe that the dignity of labor demands not on what one do, but how you do it; that opportunity comes to a boy in the city that life is larger and freer and happier on the farm than in the town; that no surgeon depends not upon my location, but upon myself; not upon my disease, but upon my health; not upon my book, but upon pluck. I believe in working when you work and in playing when you play, and in giving and demanding a square deal in every act of life.

CAR GOES 28.7 MILES ON GALLON OF GASOLINE

Red Crown Shows Remarkable Test.

Judges by C. A. C. Committee. Surprising results were obtained Tuesday in Chicago, when, in a distance test of the Independent, a 1916 big six went 28.7 miles on a gallon of Red Crown gasoline. The test was made to demonstrate the fuel economy of high test gasoline, by the technical committee of the Chicago Automobile Club.

Red Crown gasoline, 58 test, was decided upon by the judges and drivers as the best gasoline to be used. All through the trip the claim was not allowed, except when traffic congestion made it necessary. The cam adjustment on the carburetor was disconnected, and in order that the test be a fair one, the fan was in operation throughout the run.

Next came the acceleration test. With the carburetor adjustment the same as during the economy run, the car was driven from standing start to thirty miles an hour in 14.45 seconds. The Standard test was the car run at four miles an hour, then speeded up to forty-four.

The test proves that the six is not extravagant to the consumer, where the best gasoline is used.

SUFFERED FOR FOUR YEARS.

Mr. J. M. Sinclair of Olivebill, Tenn., writes: "I strained my back while working at my kidneys and caused an awful bad backache and also inflammation of the bladder. I suffered for four years so much worse that I consulted a doctor. He said that I had lumbago and that my heart was affected. I suffered four years and was in a nervous state and very much distressed. I suffered so I could not do a day's work. My kidneys were disordered, my sleep was broken, I was nervous and very much depressed. I was so weak I could not walk 100 yards without stopping to rest. I had tried many kinds of medicine and spent much money without receiving any relief and was discouraged. Should I ever be permitted to establish itself so firmly here it would cause not only tremendous losses to stock but seriously interfere with the supply of meat for the public.

The foot-and-mouth disease affects particularly cattle, sheep and swine. It is characterized by sores in the the mouth which make swallowing painful and difficult, causing the animals to refuse all food, and by sores on the feet which cause lameness and in severe cases, occasionally result in the hoofs dropping off. The animals lose flesh with extraordinary rapidity and in the case of milk cows the milk supply is so seriously affected that it frequently dries up altogether. The first evidences of the disease are a chill followed quickly by fever, the temperature sometimes rising as high as 106 and thereupon there are vesicles or blisters about the size of a pea appear shortly after in the mouth and spread rapidly. As the disease advances they saliva hangs from the affected animal's mouth, which is opened and shut with a peculiar smacking sound. In a short time similar eruptions appear on the feet, which are red, tender, swollen and painful, the consequence the animal persists in lying down and bad, sores soon develop and the feet of milk cows are also susceptible and the sores interfere with milking.

Most Contagious of Stock Plagues.

Although the mortality is, except in very severe outbreaks, comparatively low, foot-and-mouth disease is probably the most contagious of all stock plagues. The germ which causes it is so small that it is invisible under the microscope and can pass through the finest filter known to science. It can be carried in any one of a hundred ways. In addition to direct contact with affected animals, the disease can be communicated by hay, straw, bedding, harness, ropes, in fact, anything that has ever indirectly came in contact with diseased animals. Cats, dogs, and poultry have been known to carry the infection from farm to farm, and in particular this is frequently done by unknown tramps. Finally in the present outbreak cases are on record where the contacts of farmers has led them to visit infected herds. On their return to their own homes they have given the disease to their own animals. For this reason the authorities have gone so far as to prohibit the entry into the district of anyone not a bona fide resident, and of anyone strangers from visiting their stock.

The contagiousness of the disease indeed is such that when one animal in a herd becomes infected it is considered useless to attempt to save the remainder of the herd. For this reason the federal authorities have adopted the only practical method of stamping out the disease, namely, the slaughter of all cattle, sheep and swine on an infected farm. When a case is discovered a deep trench is dug, the animals led into it, slaughtered, their hides slashed, and the carcases burned. The immediately stop drinking coffee and drink Postum in its place. Once these movements have been halted and all the exposed cattle brought to a standstill, it will be possible for the federal authorities to locate all suspicious cases and by the slaughter of all exposed cattle ultimately eradicate the disease. The federal quarantine is accompanied by state and local quarantines of individual infected farms. From these no produce whatever can be sent out. In many cases children are not even permitted to go to school, and the farmer cannot drive his horses on the public highways.

Stock Raisers Should Help.

The chief obstacle in the way of the successful prosecution of this campaign of isolation and extermination lies in the danger that there may be concealed sources of infection. Although the farmer receives the appraised value of his herd, it is inevitable that the summary slaughter of all his stock should cause him considerable inconvenience as well as to direct financial loss. To those who can see no further ahead than this and who do not realize that it would mean to the entire country if the disease were once to gain a firm foothold here, there is a natural temptation not to report suspicious cases to the authorities. It seems probable that they think they are making ventures about her, putting sights upon her, and that they hold her in the rule of others, they may not even be conscious of her presence.

Thousands of young women are held back from undertaking what they long to do, and are kept from trying to make real their life-dreams, because they are afraid to go out into the world. They shrink from exposing their sore and sensitive spots, which smart from the slightest touch. Their supersensitiveness makes cowards of them.

The great majority of people, so much have rough manner or bearing, are kind-hearted, and would much rather help than hinder fellow-beings, besides, they have all they can do to attend to their own affairs, and can ill afford to spend time in gratuitously analyzing the nature and feelings of those whom they meet in the course of their daily business. In the busy world of affairs it is give and take, touch and go, and those who expect to get on must rid themselves of all morbid sensitiveness. If they do not, they doom themselves to unhappiness and failure.

A college course is of inestimable value to a girl of over-refined sensibilities. Oftentimes when girls enter college, they are so touchy that their sense of honor is constantly being hurt and their pride stung by the unconscious thrusts of classmates and companions. But after they have been in college a term, and have been rubbing against other girls, they realize that it would be the most foolish thing in the world to feel resentment, for one knows that she is hurt, she knows she will be unpopular and will soon be laughed at. She is simply forced to drop the foolish weakness. Girls who are morbidly sensitive on entering college often come out at the end of their four years' course with little sensitiveness left, and with a good share of common sense.

There are many, however, who must go through life without going through college, and it does not trouble them in the least that they are unbecoming to gentlemen.

Children are especially susceptible to praise. A boy will work harder to get the appreciation of those who treat him as if they believe in him than for almost anything else. Nothing except blame will so dampen his enthusiasm as the lack of recognition of good work or the failure to appreciate his attempts to please.

I know a mother who reared her children upon the plan of praise. She never missed an opportunity to commend them for anything, and to show appreciation of their efforts to do right. The one she says, has had definitely more influence for good than perpetual scoldings. "Don'ts" harm, and yet, how often we hear them about her, putting sights upon her, and that they hold her in the rule of others, they may not even be conscious of her presence.

Thousands of young women are held back from undertaking what they long to do, and are kept from trying to make real their life-dreams, because they are afraid to go out into the world. They shrink from exposing their sore and sensitive spots, which smart from the slightest touch. Their supersensitiveness makes cowards of them.

The great majority of people, so much have rough manner or bearing, are kind-hearted, and would much rather help than hinder fellow-beings, besides, they have all they can do to attend to their own affairs, and can ill afford to spend time in gratuitously analyzing the nature and feelings of those whom they meet in the course of their daily business. In the busy world of affairs it is give and take, touch and go, and those who expect to get on must rid themselves of all morbid sensitiveness. If they do not, they doom themselves to unhappiness and failure.

A college course is of inestimable value to a girl of over-refined sensibilities. Oftentimes when girls enter college, they are so touchy that their sense of honor is constantly being hurt and their pride stung by the unconscious thrusts of classmates and companions. But after they have been in college a term, and have been rubbing against other girls, they realize that it would be the most foolish thing in the world to feel resentment, for one knows that she is hurt, she knows she will be unpopular and will soon be laughed at. She is simply forced to drop the foolish weakness. Girls who are morbidly sensitive on entering college often come out at the end of their four years' course with little sensitiveness left, and with a good share of common sense.

There are many, however, who must go through life without going through college, and it does not trouble them in the least that they are unbecoming to gentlemen.

Children are especially susceptible to praise. A boy will work harder to get the appreciation of those who treat him as if they believe in him than for almost anything else. Nothing except blame will so dampen his enthusiasm as the lack of recognition of good work or the failure to appreciate his attempts to please.

I know a mother who reared her children upon the plan of praise. She never missed an opportunity to commend them for anything, and to show appreciation of their efforts to do right. The one she says, has had definitely more influence for good than perpetual scoldings. "Don'ts" harm, and yet, how often we hear them about the home

WOOD POINTS OUT U. S. WAR PERILS

Lays Down Four Fundamental Army Reforms Needed.

WOULD ESTABLISH RESERVE

Serious Menace Is Found In Lack of Ammunition—Creation of Three Tactical Infantry Divisions With Continental Limits Urged—Legislation to Eliminate Unfit Officers Proposed.

Washington.—Herewith is presented the vital section of a report which General Leonard Wood, formerly chief of staff, now in command of the department of the east, with headquarters at Governor's Island, sends to the secretary of war the other day.

Recommendations in the report for the reorganization of the army are accepted by military men as the first steps that must be taken in any plan for preparing the army for a great war. It is upon these recommendations that Representative Gardner based, in part, his resolution for an investigation of the military defenses of the nation.

When the Gardner resolution is finally considered by the rules committee at the coming session of congress the following recommendations made by General Wood will be presented as a concise embodiment of the fundamental needs of the army:

"First—The establishment of a reserve of trained men for the regular army sufficient to bring it immediately to full statutory strength and to replace the losses of the first three months of war.

"Second—The present provision of the remaining 42 per cent of our mobilization project for field artillery guns as yet unprovided for and the necessary ammunition for those now under or under manufacture. The present shortage in ammunition constitutes a grave source of danger. Ammunition of this type cannot be bought in case an emergency should arise requiring its use without great delay; no nation carries it for sale. It cannot be manufactured in this country, no matter what efforts we make, without such delay as would probably render it unavailable during the emergency. This condition is a very grave one, greatly diminishing our chances of success in case of war, and should be remedied with the least possible delay. The importance of promptly securing this ammunition cannot be too strongly stated.

"Third—The creation of the necessary organization to give three complete tactical infantry divisions within the continental limits of the United States.

"Fourth—The enactment of such personnel legislation as will eliminate effectively the unfit and eliminate the official cohort to continued efforts through establishment a condition under which progress in rank and command will have a close and dependent relation to individual capacity, fitness and accomplishment. Such is not the condition now.

"The first and second of the above recommendations deal with conditions which should be corrected with the least possible delay, as their continuance forms disaster in case of war. Their correction will take time, and measures looking thereto should be pushed as rapidly as possible.

"The third is necessary to complete one field army of regular troops within the continental limits of the United States. It means a field army of about 70,000 troops in a population of more than 100,000,000.

"The fourth is essential if we are to attain the highest degree of efficiency."

General Wood's recommendations follow the line of his speeches and his most apparent weaknesses. Questions relating to the militia and a voluntary army have been strued in the war department and before congress over since the miserable showing made by the embryo soldiers who jumped from the factory and office into the country's service during the Spanish war.

SCARED BY A FISH

Or Maybe It Was a New Species of Inland Sea Monster.

A VISION IN RED EAGLE LAKE.

It Couldn't Have Been a Dream, the Angler Admits That, Nor a Bear, Nor a Shark, Though It Did Look Like a Dog, but Anyhow and Luckily It Got Away.

In camp on Red Eagle lake in the Glacier National park, devoured by mosquitoes as big as collieries, as fierce as lions and as numerous as dropped water in the Pacific ocean!

This is a bad beginning for a fish story. The language seems to suggest that the narrator has already become unreliable. As a matter of fact, phrases such as are strictly accurate may be painfully misleading.

The language of hyperbole is needed to present an adequate picture. Perhaps the mosquitoes are not quite as big as collieries or ostriches as stated, but they seem to be.

But to the fish story. And the language of vivid metaphor shall be laid aside. What follows is facts—unadorned, unexaggerated fact. I could not have dreamed it. I cannot even now that I have begun to put pen to paper hope to tell it in such a way as to bring the reader with resulting amentness before the eye of my brother anglers.

It was evening. I was on the lake alone in my little canvas boat. The fishing had been good. I was returning to camp satisfied. The sack of fish, my fishing rod, the tackle, tackle, tackle, etc., lying at the bottom of the boat, I paused after to leave the rod to poke out over the stern, the flies trolling the water—out of mischief, as I thought, the hooks being safely tangled with any of the truck.

So I moved along contentedly happy in the slaughter I had accomplished and whistling my favorite tune with no care in my heart or mind. Then a shot shot over the stern of the boat before my very eyes!

I had the presence of mind not to make a forward dart and grab for it as it disappeared. Such a violent movement would undoubtedly have capsized my collapsible boat. I sat in speechless amazement, too startled for thought.

And then close by a mighty splashing and plunging. I turned and saw on the top of the water something swimming, a red-brown head and shoulders. I was frightened. It was no huge.

I thought of a bear, of a shark, and stories of sea monsters flashed through my mind. The thing was swimming slowly. What I could see of it looked for all the world like the head of a magnificent red-brown dog I used to own.

Then I came to myself. I realized that this was a fish of a species not known to me and of no interest to anyone else. He had taken my fly, had hooked himself on to the rod which he had dragged overboard and was swimming slowly because he was drawing it along the bottom of the lake.

I chased him. He dived, came up again with a splashing like that of an elephant in a pond and smashed down again. Aim as I could keep up with him, so heavy did he swim and so much time did he waste in his frantic efforts to get free.

If I had been able to row properly, facing in a direction opposite to the one in which I was moving, I believe I could have overtaken him. But I needed both my oars on one pin, and so had to backwater with the oars, doing power at every stroke. I was nothing daunted. I was still too stunned to think normally. I was punished by the fact that such a monster did not break my frail tackle in a moment. There was no resource so long as the forty yards of line continued to unwind or the rod to move easily overboard.

As often as he swung over and dropped down, so often I reeled in what slack my yielded beneath him. Five times he came up to the surface and I was quite near him. He seemed to be anything from four feet to six feet long. I have at home a muskalonge which I caught five years ago in the St. Lawrence river. He weighed thirty-two pounds and measures forty-seven inches. This fellow was much bigger and more terrifying. And I have no other means of knowing at the time and night.

Again the sixth leap and dive sounding gave, and the monster was seen no more. I moved slowly back to camp actually unnerved by the adventure. Anyone who can fish with my launch at me—I feel afraid to be alone in the fading evening light, alone on a lake of water inhabited by such creatures as the one who had pursued me and whom I had pursued.

I was glad to hear the friendly bell of my guide from the anchor place of camp which he had constructed to secure a score of the mosquito and to waft the smell of supper. Then I reckoned up my loss—a rod, $35; a reel, $17.50, and a four dollar line—nearly $55 worth of property at the bottom of Red Eagle lake.—Detroit Free Press.

THE GRANGE

Conducted by J. W. DARROW, Chatham, N. Y., Editor of the New York State Grange Review.

GRANGE ACTIVITIES.

Community Service Occupies the Attention of Many Eastern Granges.

The lines of service for the grange in its relation to the community wherein it is located are many. It is gratifying to note that so many granges are cooperating with village and town authorities, with the school and the church and with other farmers' organizations in an endeavor to make the community a better place in which to live and to further its interests in various ways. There are many instances of this sort of endeavor on the part of the local granges, a few of which may here be cited.

One grange that was almost dormant a year or two ago decided that unless it was the best show of life and so turned its attention to things it might as well cease to doing for the village in which it was located. It raised $100 toward repairing the town hall and assisted in procuring furniture and fixtures for a hall for general public use. It also contributed $25 to the hospital in a neighboring town and made other contributions of a minor nature to such or worthy purposes.

One of the most noteworthy forms of grange enterprise in the New England states is the erection of public drinking fountains on the public squares of the villages. These fountains become a means of attention to grange endeavor and constantly remind those who see them that there is a grange in the community and that it is doing something.

Perhaps one of the most commendable forms which grange activities may take is in the employment of a public nurse for the community, whose services are free to those who may need them and who may be unable to provide themselves with such assistance. A notable instance of this sort has been seen the past summer in the work of a nurse secured by the Webster grange of New York state who will approve the same and issue a certificate of authority to begin business. The local association will pay $1,000 for each share in the land bank, and directors and officers will then be elected and may proceed to do business. The money received for shares will form the capital to loan on real estate mortgages.

There is one very important advantage in the local association plan. The officers of the local association know the individuals who wish to borrow money, and they also know the values of the property on which mortgages are desired. They are in constant touch with the men interested, can make collections cheaply, and the members get the benefit of any profits and of low rates of interest on loans. Now for the first time in this country, "mortgages of the small homes and farms are placed on the financial basis to which their merit entitles them and on a plane equal to that of any other industrial security." The farmer may borrow on a mortgage for forty years or less, and on a forty year mortgage he would make an amortization payment of 1 per cent a year, and at the end of forty years the mortgage will have been canceled. The rate of interest which he will pay the Land bank will be determined by the rate of the Land bank plus the cost of administration. The mortgage cannot be called for payment so long as the borrower pays the annual dues, for he may pay part or all the mortgage at any time.

"Those who have been looking for a safe investment will find it in the Land bank bonds. They will be written in small denominations and may be bought and sold by one person to another. It will doubtless be a boon to many wage earners who wish to lay by a little now and then for a "rainy day," for the bonds will not only be safe, but they will be convenient.

It is interesting to note in this connection that a New York institution has recently organized among its office force and staff a local Land bank, and force of them have subscribed for shares to the matured value of $40,000. The local issue or association may be for four kinds of issues: Installment shares, on which dues may be paid at 50 cents per share per month; second shares on which dues may be paid at the option of the owner; third, matured shares, on which the member will pay dues $50 or more at time of issue, and the dividends will be added to the share mature at $100; fourth, income shares, on which the payment of the face value of $100 shall be paid at time of issue, and the dividends will be paid semiannually in cash.

The Land bank of the state of New York will probably be organized this fall, as more than the required ten associations have enrolled, or declared their intention to enroll. The ten associations that have already enrolled have a subscribed capital of $32,000 and have total resources of $41,000.

The Land bank offers to farmers a plan and an opportunity to finance their mortgages on real estate for long terms and to amortize the debt by small annual payments. It is now up to the thing they have long needed. The first thing to do is to organize the local savings and loan associations, and every step in the process will be marked out by the state department of rural culture on request.

The Titusville (Pa.) Herald says editorially that "One of the favorable signs of the present day is a marked diminution in the number of petty lawsuits that in years gone by were so common before the county justice of the peace." It gives much of the credit for this condition of things to the grange. "Through this organization of farmers there is not only a feeling of fellowship engendered and cultivated, but business methods and customs are learned which lead to a better understanding, one with another."

LAND BANK LAW.

Financial Legislation In the Interest of Farmers.

Some of the Salient Features of New York's New Land Bank Law, In Which Grangers as Well as All Other Farmers Are Deeply Interested.

At the last session of the New York state legislature a law was passed, which was promptly signed by Governor Glynn, authorizing the organization of the Land Bank of the State of New York. Plans are under way for the organization of this bank and for the formation of more savings and loan associations. The Land bank is the central association and will be located in New York city.

There are now over 200 local savings and loan associations in the state. Their method of organization is as follows: Fifteen persons, men or women, may unite to form a savings and loan association. They can operate in a territory confined within a radius of fifty miles. The organizers should all reside within that territory. If, however, it is found impossible to organize without going outside the territory they may secure enough persons outside the fifty mile radius to assist in forming the association.

The Land bank will be organized by the local savings and loan associations and will be owned by them. But no local association will be compelled to become a member of the Land bank. This will be determined by its members. But if it is not a member then it will derive no benefit from the Land bank. A local association will become a member of the Land bank by taking one or more shares in it, and it will then be entitled to all the benefits accruing from such membership. When ten or more local associations desire to organize a Land bank a meeting of their members will be held and a charter and bylaws will be prepared and submitted to the superintendent of banks, who will approve the same and issue a certificate of authority to begin business. The local association will pay $1,000 for each share in the Land bank, and directors and officers will then be elected and may proceed to do business. The money received for shares will form the capital to loan on real estate mortgages.

There is one very important advantage in the local association plan. The officers of the local association know the individuals who wish to borrow money, and they also know the values of the property on which mortgages are desired. The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

CHAPTER XXIV—Continued.

Together he and Mark dragged Plotz to the door and forced him outside. Plotz, dazed by Mark's appearance, resisted but feebly.

Before the grim majesty of approaching death even Plotz's madness was abashed. The supreme calmness ness received back the atom that, when imprisoned in flesh, had been Roman. It was Kasia who saw.

"It is dead."

The Marks uttered a low moan, then became silent again, resumed her rigid gazing at the motionless body. Plotz's hand passed over his eyes in a bewildered manner. The woman who kept the door made the sign of the cross and went quietly on.

Kasia bent over to kiss Roman's forehead. Then Plotz came out of his daze. He caught her roughly and dragged her back.

"No!"

"Fool!"

"You're not fit to touch him—his brother—husband—wait—slowly into the kitchen," Plotz followed.

He confronted Kasia and Mark. "You can go now, both of you."

"Oh, Plotz—no!" Kasia began pleadingly. "The Marks needs me also."

"We need nothing from you. We weren't asking for your help in this. You left us to be a fine lady. Now we don't want you."

"But I came back and you couldn't let me stay."

"Yes, I was you found that Jim Whiting couldn't give you what you wanted. Then the poor fool could use us then—as he did." He nodded toward Mark. "Now," his teeth bared in an ugly grimace, leer, "now did the Hunky girl get to be such a fine lady?"

"Be still!" Mark stepped close to him, sternly. "Isn't there any decency in that crooked mind of yours? Remember she came to them, he pelted toward the little bedroom, "when they needed some one. You were out filling the streets with your blackguardly rant. And where money do you think had to keep them alive because you wouldn't do a man's work?"

"A man's work!" Plotz laughed, a horrible shaking cackle. "To a cracked brain that isn't to betray and gouge and drive—" He broke off. "Do you mean it—have no remorse?"

"Who else would have cared?"

"Poor west, back into the dead room, clutched his mother by the shoulder and shook her roughly. "Tell him! Tell him! Tell him!" Hanka heard exclamation answered by a spiteful voice Hanka did not know. The voice was strident and came from the sitting room. To the kitchen came the murmur of Kasia's voice and his cheerly bite.

He had been there but a few minutes when the voice Hanka did not know came eager, with an undertone that sounded like a threat. Kasia uttered a low hurt cry. Hanka rose and crept along the little hall to the door of the sitting room door. The thick soft tresses fell tumbling around her. Hanka, in troubled wonder, watched the round arm that wielded the comb, the smooth firm shoulders. At Kasia's age Hanka had already begun to wither into an unfortunate that most passed by unheeding. She went over to the dressing woman and touched timidly the firm, still youthful flesh.

"You are like your mother."

"What was she like?"

"She was like you." Kasia did not scold. "Mine was lean and scared her."

The comb became still. "Did she love my father?"

"Such a love! I have never seen."

It had been dark almost an hour when the best friend Hanka had found in Kasia coming to the door and a startled exclamation answered by a spiteful voice Hanka did not know. The voice was strident and came from the sitting room. To the kitchen came the murmur of Kasia's voice and his cheerly bite.

He had been there but a few minutes when the voice Hanka did not know came eager, with an undertone that sounded like a threat. Kasia uttered a low hurt cry. Hanka rose and crept along the little hall to the door of the sitting room door. Hanka listened low but very distinct words came to her:

ILLINOIS GRANGERS.

What Some of Them Are Doing in a Single County.

The following interesting items have to do with some of the granges in Winnebago county, Ill., and are hereprinted as suggesting lines of work in which other granges may well engage:

In Maple Grove grange a mixed people's chorus was organized to furnish music for every meeting. A young lady member who recently took the short course in domestic science in the state university told the grange about it. "The Need and Benefit of Farm Accounting" was discussed by a competent accountant employed by a farming implement factory. Maple Grove has started a grange newspaper called the Honey Dipper, its contents being of local interest. At one meeting a short talk was given by a man who came with the necessary ballots to show the women how to vote. Farmers' institute, and rural adviser gave an interesting talk on "Selection of Seeds and Preparation of Seed Bed."

Westfield grange changed the time of meeting from the day meetings that have been held all winter to the evening sessions and listened to a timely talk on "Soil Problems" by the county agricultural adviser and a talk on "Road Improvement" by the superintendent of highways.

Harmony grange is to hold all its meetings at the consolidated school house in its district. As there is a domestic science department, which they are free to use, it makes the work of entertainment very easy, a least and hostess being appointed who entertain for the day. It seems to be doubtful if any grange in Illinois has established so close a relation to the school as has this grange. The result is being seen in the increased membership, which is largely teachers and scholars. At one meeting seventeen applications for membership were received, most of them being from high school boys attending the consolidated school.

Riverside grange indies gave a housekeepers' carnival at a recent meeting. One of them presided and introduced the several characters as they appeared. The first was Mrs. Epicure, who discussed "Three Meals a Day." Then Mrs. Orderly spoke about order and cleanliness. Mrs. Motherly talked about the care and bringing up of children. Mrs. Social dwelt on the social spirit in the rural community. The carnival ended with the tableau, "Work, For the Night Is Coming," by these ladies.

County Line grange has a current events feature in which everything of special interest the world over is touched upon. It is a great help in keeping busy farmers posted. This grange has an orchestra among its members.

Centerville grange recently had a meeting in the interests of the rural school, at which the program was in charge of three school directors, one from each district represented in the grange. The subject under discussion was, "How Shall We Get More People to Attend the School Meetings?" The county judge also gave a talk on "Women and the Vote."—Michigan Farmer.

NATIONAL GRANGE.

Official Announcement to Patrons by Master Lecturer.

The following official communication regarding railroad rates to the National grange session at Wilmington, Del., next November is issued by the executive committee of the national grange, through its secretary, C. O. Bains of Canton, Mo. Patrons everywhere will note the instructions issued and make their plans accordingly:

The following railroad rates, to be in effect during the session of the national grange, to be held in Wilmington, Del., Nov. 16-24, have been secured by the following roads:

New England Passenger association, fare 2 cents per mile in each direction, short line mileage, going and returning via same route only and over which one way tickets are regularly sold. Reductions apply only from principal stations where tariffs are on file and through tickets are in stock; other stations will require not less than forty-eight hours' notice to the ticket agent so that fares and tickets may be obtained from the general passenger department of the railroad interested. Tickets to be sold and good going Nov. 9 to 11 and returning to reach original starting point not later than Nov. 25. Reduction will not apply on the Bangor and Aroostook railroad in Maine.

The above rules and regulations will be observed by the Central Passenger association. The Trunk Line association has adopted the same, except with a minimum of 31 for the round trip. All roads west of Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis have advertised excursion rates to be in effect until about Dec. 1, and all or others from the west can take advantage of this rate by buying to the nearest point and then repurchasing at the reduced rates. By following these instructions the fare will be practically the same as one and one-third on the basis of the old rates.

A Sure Oyster.

"Senator Wombat is considerable of an oyster, I take it?"

"Yes, yes. He voices elegant in banquetting a match."—Pittsburgh Post.

GRANGE REQUISITES.

A Broad View of the Possibilities of Work in Many Ways.

Speaking at one of the Massachusetts field meetings, President Butterfield of Amherst Agricultural college gave what he considered six necessary qualifications of the grange of the future.

"First—It should be a truly national grange—national in scope, representing the interests of no particular section, but farming interests as a whole.

Second—It should be composed not only of farmers, but should admit those working in harmony with the farmer.

Third—It should be purposeful. The grange stands for education, especially along agricultural lines, and the social and entertaining branches of the association should not be neglected.

Fourth.—It should be a studying grange and should understand that the problems of the day are not solved by mere opinion, but should be weighed carefully and decided vigorously.

Fifth.—The grange of the future must be community minded and should interest itself in the affairs of the community in which it is located and should work for its welfare.

Sixth.—The coming grange should possess aggressiveness. It should take a wide interest in all matters of legislation, both state and national.

A study of the grange and its present day work will show that it meets these requirements. It is practically universal in its scope, having state organizations in more than thirty states, the same not represented being mostly the cotton growing states of the south, and these have the Farmers' union, which often works in unison with the grange to secure legislation. While it is a farmers' organization, there is a tendency to have all those who work in harmony with the farmer—the rural teacher, the rural minister and many others who are more or less connected with rural work and rural progress are being admitted. The educational and social features are being made strong factors in grange work today.

The grange today is making itself so influence in public questions and possesses plenty of aggressiveness for its work. Its community influence is great, but we believe there is plenty of room to enlarge upon the community work of most granges.

What He Forgot.

"What!" exclaimed the head of the concern when on consultation, "did Mr. Getrox only contributed $50 to this worthy cause?"

"Only $50," corroborated the young man who had been out to get subscriptions.

"But he ought to have given $500."

"Exactly. He forgot the ought."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Puzzling.

It puzzled the child where cows could get their milk, and she longed to learn. "Now, where do you get your beers, Lizzie?" her mother asked in turn.

And then, with sublimity opened eyes "And suddenly blind," she replied in guise, "Why, we ask them in quick autumn."

A Rural Complaint.

"Do you think beef will be higher?"

"Yes," replied the statistician.

"Well, it's too bad the way things are mismanaged. I wish there were some way I could save my diamonds in the barn and put the cow in the safe deposit vault."—Washington Star.

Northern Michigan

A new shingle mill which will turn out more of that product than any similar plant in northern Michigan has begun operations in connection with the W. H. White lumber mills at Boyne City. The new factory was constructed near the site of the one burned about three years ago. It is situated on the Boyne River and the logs which are used for the manufacture of shingles are taken directly into the mill from the stream. When the mill gets to running to capacity, about 100,000 shingles a day, it is expected that about 50 men will be employed.

East Jordan is one of the fortunate towns of the State which have secured the M. A. C. extension school for the coming winter. Supt. Holliday of the public schools and a local committee have completed arrangements with the Agricultural College whereby two lecturers from the college will be sent there Dec. 14 to conduct a school for farmers for five days. The two selected by the college for East Jordan are Prof. E. L. Grover who will lecture on the subject of soil fertility and Prof. O. E. White, on the subject of horticulture. These men are among the very best in the state in their lines and the information they bring should be worth dollars and cents to the farmers of this locality.

FISH!

I have on hand at all times both Fresh, Salt and Smoked Fish, at prices that will suit all. HUGH L. BRADY, Charlevoix, Mich. Next to Washburn's Machine Shop.

.˙. ˙. Local and Personal Notes .˙. ˙.

J. E. Converse, of Bay City, is here attending court.

G. E. Dutton and wife are visiting friends in Wisconsin.

The tax roll will be in the hands of the city treasurer for collection Dec. 15th.

Peter Vanderende and wife, left Friday for a two weeks trip to Grand Rapids and Detroit.

Rev. Harris of Petoskey will hold service at the Episcopal Church, Thursday evening at 7:30. You are invited.

Chas. A. Neubert has started a cigar factory in the small Fagan building near the corner of Antrim and Bridge street.

O. C. Butler, of the mechanical department of the lighthouse service, has been here the past week overhauling lighthouse and fog-bell machinery and appliances.

The third annual Masonic party will be given at the Masonic Temple Christmas night, Dec. 25th, and it is proposed to make it the big social event of the year.

The Lillian Lyons Stock Company is playing at Petoskey all this week at the Majestic, and giving excellent satisfaction. Manager Miles scored high when he hired it.

Rev. Mr. Vinyard, the recently installed pastor of the Baptist church, has been compelled to return to Elizabethtown, Ill., owing to the critical illness of his father. He will be absent for an indefinite period.

Frank Coutts has sold his restaurant to Warren Moore. Although Mr. Moore is an American citizen, he comes here from Cobalt, Ont., where for several years he has been chef in a large restaurant. He will be ably assisted by his wife.

The Booth tug, E. M. B. A. left here Sunday night with nets for the Manitou Island fishing grounds, under the direction of the U. S. fish commission, for whitefish spawn. She returned Wednesday night with three tons of whitefish and one hundred quarts of eggs.

The first half section to the steel and reinforced concrete south approach to the city bridge is completed, and they are now waiting for the concrete to sufficiently harden before opening it up to traffic and tearing up the other half. The work is of a most permanent nature.

The big wrecking tug Reid came in here Sunday and proceeded to East Jordan as soon as the steamer Lehigh, which the Reid released from the beach near Manistique. She was partly loaded with iron ore, much of the cargo having been jettisoned. The steamer had the bottom knocked out, but did not appear to be leaking badly.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Frazier received news Tuesday of the illness of their daughter Lois, who is visiting relatives in North Dakota. The doctors there pronounce it a mild form of typhoid fever, and expect no complications, but nothing serious is looked for. Mr. and Mrs. Frazier left for North Dakota Tuesday.

Avery Delong, who came here as a bill-poster for a theatre company, last week, was arrested Saturday and lodged in jail charged with attempt to commit an unmentionable offense of the Swift nature, on the evidence of several boys. When arraigned before Justice Cooper he plead guilty and was bound over to circuit court. Delong claims he was drunk when the offense was committed.

The meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at the home of Captain Gallagher on Friday afternoon Dec. 11, at 2:30. The topic is Scientific Temperance and a report of the scientific temperance instruction in the public schools will be given by Miss Hinsse. Music will be supplied by the county normal class and some of the county normal students will take part in the discussions.

John Kirby, of this city, is known as a good blacksmith; but as a disciple of Vulcan he has crossed the border into the realm of "arts and crafts." Some time ago we described the beautiful sconces which adorn the fireplace in the Masonic club room—a piece of art that not only satisfies the aesthetic but also ornamental. Now he has "passed onward and upward in the ladder which leads to fame in the Mystic Circle," and has completed another set of sconces for a hearth that is beyond the ken of the average Charlevoix Masonic, bearing emblems to which both John and the writer are strangers as novices. The Scottish Rite vesening to the 32d degree, is the subject upon which John has spent many an industrious hour. Double-headed eagles, triangles, lotus flowers and the mystic "32" stand out in burnished steel, later to receive a dressing of nickle. It is a beautiful work of art, but it is not for us of lowly Masonic attainment to venture our sins upon. There are now no more words for John to compose.

The Lillian Lyons Dramatic Co. all this week at the Majestic.

Call in and pay your subscription and get a "handy kitchen implement."

Capt. Peter McCafferty is in command of the big Booth fishing tug E. M. B. A.

Mrs. N. L. Lewis was called to Kingsman, Ohio, last Friday, by the death of her grandmother.

Hon. A. Buttars returned Friday after having spent ten days at Fort Amsin with his envoiee and sister.

J. R. Cooper is contracting for sugar beet acreage for the Holland-St. Louis Sugar Co., paying six dollars per ton.

One great feature of the SENTINEL is the serial story, which is always high grade. Watch for "The Call of the Cumberlands," to begin soon.

Regular meeting of Charlevoix Council No. 81, Royal and Select Masters, Monday evening, Dec. 14th. Election of officers and other important business.

Whitefish spawn are being gathered by Mr. Hansen at Charlevoix from Round, Beaver Island, Manitou Island and Antrim, and are shipped daily to the Northville hatchery.

What few there are left of the old civil war veterans met with comrade George W. Cook last Saturday night. A pot-luck supper was served, and the evening was enjoyed as only old soldiers can enjoy themselves.

D. S. Payton has removed his household effects from this city to East Jordan where they will reside. Mrs. Payton and daughter go there this week. The many friends of the Paytons view their departure with sincere regret.

The lighthouse tender Sumac has been "here and hereabouts" the past week on her annual fall work with buoys and light stations. She leaves today to tow the Grey's Reef lightship to winter quarters at Sturgeon Bay.

For the past two weeks, and up to this writing, (Tuesday afternoon) there has not been a flake of snow on the ground nor in the air. The weather has been, most of the time, pleasant and enjoyable. Automobiles have been continuously in use, both locally and over country roads.

Work on the Beach Hotel extension foundation has been progressing rapidly under the favorable weather conditions. Considerable night work has been done by the aid of arc-lights. The frames for the basement stories are being erected. A large force of men are engaged in the work.

A "bachmalian orgie" on the street Sunday night, in which five actors played parts, made business for the police court Monday. One man was landed in jail after such resistance to an officer that handcuffs were used, and others were arrested on warrants Monday morning. We are constrained to spell names for reasons given elsewhere. The wives and parents are the real sufferers, and we would not add to their burden.

Van Van Leuven, R. F. D. carrier on route 4 since the beginning of rural service, died at his home in this city last Thursday morning after a protracted illness of organic heart trouble. The remains were taken to Milford, Mich, his former home, for interment. Deceased was 37 years old, and leaves a wife and one child. He was an Odd Fellow and Elk. "Van" stuck to his route after he was really incapacitated for work, and when he was compelled to throw it up his brave little wife carried the mail until the serious condition of her husband confined her to the home.

Mr. Alois Volter, formerly connected with the Charlevoix Sugar Co. factory here as an expert in sugar refining, and for several years superintendent of a refinery in the State of Vera Cruz, Mexico, was compelled to leave that disturbed country last May, for reasons well known. Last week he had orders to report for duty, and he left Monday for New York, where he takes steamer for Mexico. Mr. Volter considers Charlevoix his home, his family living on Hurlbut avenue. Concerning Mexican troubles, he leans decidedly toward Villa, who, he says is the only leader who has true patriotism.

The SENTINEL "single-list" circulation extends from Alaska and British Columbia on the north to the Gulf of Mexico on the south; from California and Oregon on the west to the Atlantic coast. It would interest you to call and investigate the scope of territory covered by our subscription list. The SENTINEL prints double or more the reading matter printed by any other paper in Charlevoix county, and there is a corresponding excess of expense over the publication of any other county paper. Call in, investigate and subscribe for yourself or a distant relative or friend.

FOR SALE—Resort cottages will be rented. Houses and lots in any part of the city, also 14 acre close to city. Apply to H. S. Harsha.

SUMAC THIEVES' VICTIM

Breaking of Lighthouse Tenders' Wheel Leads to the Prosecution.

Sentences involving three years' imprisonment and a fine of $100, says a Milwaukee paper, were imposed by Judge Geiger in United States district court, again proving that one cannot monkey with Uncle Sam and "get away with it," and all because the lighthouse tender Sumac broke one of her wheels in striking a submerged wreck on the Michigan side on September 26.

Max and Hyman Meyer, conducting the business of the Milwaukee Scrap Iron company, go to the house of correction for six months each.

Frank Allen, former keeper of the lighthouse depot at the foot of Greenfield avenue, was sentenced to the federal penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth for one year and six months.

William S. Cody was given four months in the house of correction, and Louis B. Sears must serve sixty days in jail and pay a fine of $100.

The Meyer brothers were granted a stay of ten days in order to arrange their business affairs, the bond being fixed at $500 each.

As a result of revelations growing out of these cases others will follow in addition to those still pending against Joseph and Emil Benesch, junk dealers, and Fred Hagenbucher, a saloonkeeper, all serving time for of government property from the lighthouse depot.

When the tender broke one of her rudiform wheels in September, Captain Stoddard ordered Capt. Hubbard to bring the vessel to Milwaukee, where two of manganese bronze of four blades each in sections would be put on. Ten blades having been on hand at the depot for some time. When it was made known to Inspector Stoddard that no blades could be found, the fact, coupled with the hasty resignation of Allen some weeks preceding, led to activity on the part of Special Agent Bragdon of the department of justice and subsequent arrests.

Although lengthy statements were made on behalf of each of the men, all of whom had pleaded guilty, Judge Geiger expressed the belief that all had full knowledge of the situation and that the offenses were serious. Besides the straight charge of theft, the many indictments covered conspiracy, receiving stolen goods, sliding and shetting and misprision of felony, the last appearing in a court in this district for the first time, and one of the rarely few in the country. It being one in which a person has knowledge of the wrongdoing and does not impart the information to the government.

ACCOMPLISHING GREAT GOOD

The Western Michigan Development Bureau is a Gold Making and Gold Saving Mechanism

The Detroit Journal says: "The work of the Western Michigan Development Bureau is attracting attention throughout the middle west because of its novel methods of seeking to build up its section. The headquarters are in Grand Rapids.

"Exhibitions are given at fairs and other advertising is done. A corps of agricultural experts is maintained to tell prospective settlers where they can to best advantage. For instance, if the settler wants to grow potatoes, a tract of land suitable for that purpose is suggested to him.

"Commenting on the bureau, the Toledo Blade in a recent editorial said: 'We should look on our district as a gold mining company looking upon its mines—as a storehouse of wealth to be developed to its utmost. Such a bureau as that devised by western Michigan is a gold-making and gold-saving mechanism.'"

CIRCUIT COURT

Good progress is being made with the calendar over at the court house where Judge Mayne is holding the December term of the circuit court. In the following cases the plea of guilty was entered; sentence deferred:

People vs. George Bassett, desertion.
People vs. Sherman Wilday and Peter Marchinkowski, larceny.
People vs. Milford Rood, burglary.
People vs. Jos. Cady, burglary.

In the case against Clark E. Glaster, desertion, goes over to next term. Also the civil case of Milford vs. East Jordan Cooperage Co., and East Jordan Electric Light and Power Co.

Now on trial, Morton Freeman vs. East Jordan and Southern R. R.

LIVELY TIMES IN LANSING

Frank Sparks, Legislative Correspondent, Makes Predictions for the Winter

"Sparks," as he is known throughout the length and breadth of Michigan, because of many years work in the halls of legislature for the Grand Rapids Herald, makes some interesting predictions, and no man is more familiar with the situation or better qualified to prophesy than "Sparks." From his writings in Saturday's Herald we clip the following:

"Just a glance over the membership of the new legislature will show to the lounge lizards that there are breakers ahead for them. The house is usually pretty much parcelled, and this year is moreso than before. But it is in the senate where the jolt is likely to come. Twenty-two of the west can claim here is seventeen out of thirty members, and one of those is pretty apt to slip a cog, leaving it tied up.

"With Lieutenant Gov. Dickinson, a pronounced dry, it is positively certain the liquor committee of the senate will be so composed that any prohibition bill that comes in will at least be reported out and fought out on the floor.

"It is a safe conclusion, too, that several kinds of dry legislation will be up. A proposition to submit the question of prohibition to a referendum is among the certainties. If such a bill is presented, it will almost certainly pass and will be a very good indication that it will pass the senate. Some of those who are credited with being inclined toward the wet side come from dry counties, and under the conditions could not consistently vote against submission of the question to the people. If this should come about Governor Ferris will simply have a chance to either sign such a bill or veto it, and it is certain he would veto it under the conditions. So look out for some dry legislation during the coming session of the legislature. It's in the cards."

PICKLING STATION

Charlevoix to be Added to the Chain of Seven Cucumber Pickling Stations

It is definitely settled that Charlevoix is to have a cucumber salting station. The James H. Johnson Pickle Co., of South Haven, had a representative here recently looking up the matter. He was directed to secure a building for the purpose. The company wants 300 acres of cucumbers in the section tributary to the proposed factory. There is every indication that the demand will be fully met. The factory will be built on city property near the sugar factory building.

The Johnson Co., has seven stations in Michigan and Illinois, and it is proposed to make the Charlevoix station the largest of all. It is expected, if the farmers come up to the mark in the matter of acreage contracts this winter, work on the station will begin early in the spring.

An Alpena special says that plans are already being made there and at other points in northern Michigan, for one of the largest cucumber pickling plants of catching fish through the ice. Two or three Alpena men make it a business to visit Canadian settlements and devote all of their time to the catching and marketing of the members of the fishy tribe. In anticipation of a big season's business they are busy now getting their little shanties built, their stoves repaired and all of their equipment in first class condition. Practically every coast, and many inland towns which are near lakes in this section, do a big "through the ice" business during the winter months.

CASUAL OBSERVATIONS

There are several ordinances on the city statue books that are eloquent in their verbiage, written, as they were, by a most accomplished city attorney.

One of them is the curfew ordinance. At a stated hour every evening, the big bell on the water tower is rung, ostensibly to warn boys that it is the proper time to go home and curno into their little beds. But every night, regardless of hours, or curfews, or police, a crowd of boys gather at point favorable for youthful exhuberance and rowdyism, and make the evening hideous. A recent evening general gathering at one of the churches was seriously annoyed by a crowd of young roysterers long after the peal of the curfew. The postmaster has been compelled to close the postoffice lobby, which has always been left open for the accomodation of the public, because it was made the rendezvous of this same precious band. What is the curfew for?

During the past week there has been a most distressing disclosure of misconduct, in which a crowd of boys were implicated to the extent of being too painful to relate. Five young boys were concerned in the matter and taken before the Judge of Probate. In such cases it is not the perpetrators who are most to be pitied. It is the parents whose heart-strings are torn asunder. The source of such occurrences is not in any one of the boys, but in the laxity of the culprits or it is the depravity of one or two ring leaders, with the influence of cheap trash and trashy novels and sensational newspapers.

And that leads us to give utterance to a note of another sorrowful strain in sympathy for the great contingent of the general party, who are so sorely mortified at the Champ Clark episode in Detroit last week. The good old sanctified democracy must be terribly shocked at the Speaker's lapse from the high moral standard of conduct for which that great organization has always been the ordained and annointed champion. It is bad enough to be compelled to father a hundred million "war lies" without having to father the shortcomings of the recognized leader of the party. Champ had a good time up at the Pontchartrain that afternoon with the Detroit faithful, and the great, incorruptible democracy should not be held responsible for the sins of that Detroit outfit, God knows! What will Uncle Joe Cannon say?

The Kaiser has inscribed "Got Mit Uns" on his banners, but God does not appear to be "Mit-uns" for the past two months. Notwithstanding His Majesty's superabundant piety he keeps on smashing cathedrals and churches, and lays the wicked act onpans wait and the innocent non combatants starve in Belgium. An awfully good man, that Kaiser; but what of the final judgment?

CHRISTMAS PARCELS

Should be—
(1) Mailed early.
(2) Wrapped securely.
(3) Addressed plainly.

Patrons who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of insuring packages mailed during the holiday season, will call at the office for the required tags for the purpose, instead of waiting until they reach the postoffice. This method will save a good deal of delay as the tags can be filled out in detail at home or in the leisure moments while waiting at the postoffice. Packages may bear the words—(Not to be opened until Christmas) or a similar inscription.

Mr. Will A. Stone, an old resident of East Jordan, and a leading business man, passed away Monday night after months of suffering. His health has precluded his doing any business for many years and a paralytic stroke left him almost helpless and for some months past he has been wholly helpless, and death came as a merciful relief from his suffering.

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it.

This is hardly fair to yourself; after you work for your money, it will repay the compliment by working for you if you will give it the opportunity.

Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business whom you are prone to envy, thinking they have a mysterious Midas touch. Almost without exception they began with no capital but a strong will and determination.

For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.50 a week. In six years he had banked $2500—enough to start a modest business of his own. JOURNAL—Bank your money.

THE ENEMIES IN OUR VOCABULARY

Did you ever think that many of the words and phrases which you constantly use are your real enemies, that they have their minions in your and black shadows in your mind? "I'm the dickinsy of folks we find "I can't very often, plenty of life," lots of words like "sick" and "dead," and phrases like "if I only had time or a chance like other people." How many times have you been kept from doing a good deed by such phrases as "Oh, I know I can't do that," "Somebody else can do that a great deal better," "I am afraid to try," "It haven't the courage," "I fear I shall take cold or catch some disease if I do this or that"?

I believe that those two words "I can't" have ruined more promising and have lent more ability doing the work of mediocrity than any other two words in our language.

Did you ever know a person who has a crack-near "I can't" in his vocabulary to accomplish very much? Some people are always using the words, "Oh, I can't afford to go there," "I can't undertake such a hard task, let someone else do that," "I am afraid of this or that" is a terrible hinderer, a terrible blighter of ambition, a cooler of enthusiasm. All enthusiasm and all efficiency depend upon knowing and that is easily killed by the fear words, the words which express doubt and uncertainty. "Up thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Every person indicates his strength or his weakness by the preponderance of his strong or weak words in his habitual vocabulary. Doubtful, weak words, words of doubt, uncertainty or hesitation, predominate in the vocabulary of a negative life, while the positive, plus, creative, vigorous, progressive words, which indicate mental dominion, prevail in the vocabulary of a positive, vigorous, progressive character, as they did in Webster's vocabulary.

Did you ever think that every time you say "I can't" you weaken your confidence in yourself and your power to do things? Confidence is the greatest factor in achievement, self-faith is a powerful asset, better than money capital without it. Nobody believes in the youth who thinks he cannot do things, who has no confidence in himself, no faith in his ability, because everybody knows that he cannot do a thing until he thinks he can. He must first believe in himself, must be convinced that he can accomplish it.

I know a young man who seems very ambitious in a general sort of way, but when the opportunity which, perhaps, he had been working a long time for, comes, he wilts, his stamina oozes out, his ambition wavers, and he does not feel equal to it. He does and have been his himself equal to his ambition. Of course his life is a disappointment. The man was never meant to be a decided success, was always wants to reserve his judgment or who says he doesn't know or that he is afraid, the man who does not dare to begin things, who shrinks from responsibility, or who always thinks in center do this or that, is not the man for great responsibility. But the man who says, "I can do the thing, and I will," the man who believes in himself and in his ability to carry through what he undertakes is the man, the one man who will do things, not dream about them.

THE TRAGEDY OF NOTHING TO DO.

Not long ago a rich woman was arrested in New York for stealing, and this was her excuse: "The most wretched, the most miserable being on earth is the woman with nothing to do. I believe it is dull and burdensome for me to be police station, or do anything else under the sun to keep myself from being bored to death.

"I'd rather scrub floors for a living, and go home at night so tired I could hardly climb the steps to my attic with my little child and a calf of bad humor under jingling in my good red head, than to sit all day long with the gnawing death of idleness eating my heart out and driving me to madness."

Steal! I should think she would steal or commit suicide, or get up a petition to the North pole or go down to divine hells or up in balloons, or do anything on earth or be an scoundrel or to think of besides her own little silly, whimpering, useless self, shouldn't you?

Isn't it pitiable to see so many people in the most glorious country in the world, where 10,000 opportunities and ennobling occupations are waiting for honest endeavor, resorting to all sorts of devices for diversion, just to drive away ennui, just to keep themselves from going mad?

Think of the rich people giving monkey dinners and squandering money like water on all sorts of foolish things, resorting to all sorts of demoralizing amusements, disturbing and wasting time life's most precious capital, just because they have nothing to do—just because they do not have to work for a living, because somebody else has done that work for them. Just as though all that life meant was to provide for the eating and drinking, the housing of our bodies and indulgence in luxuries.

A steady occupation is man's great life preserver, without which, if he is able to work, he cannot possibly keep from a fatal demoralization.

Our powers were given us for exercise, for achievement, and if the soul man cannot long remain a man. He will soon dwindle back to the brute.

Man's chief purpose in life, the great object of his existence is achievement. He was made to do things, and idleness is fatal paralysis.

The moment we divert anything planned, made to serve a particular purpose, we ruin it.

A watch was made to keep time. That was its sole purpose and object; and if we attempt to use it for any other purpose we rob it of its power.

When the woman was asked why she stole, she said she had nothing else on earth to do. When she was a young girl she picked up a ring on the street and gave it to a little boy with "the most shining red hair," she said, "that ever flamed." "I knew when I gave it to him, that I made myself think I didn't know, and then afterward when the red-haired boy got in trouble with the authorities I placed it on my back, and made me wear it to school for a week or more. The word 'thief' in large letters was written on the placard, and I thought I should die before the end of the week. But I did not die. I lived to hate the word thief worse than any other word in the English language." And yet in spite of all this, a life of idleness induced her to steal for diversion.

What Makes a Girl Popular.

Every girl has the perfectly natural desire to be popular with the other girls, and there is no interested in knowing the secret of such popularity. Some girls have the idea that the way to have a good time is to break away from the recognized rules of social life. The fresh-mouthed, swearing type of girl may receive a good deal of attention for a certain kind, but it is safe to say that man do not really like to be with such a girl. Certainly they do not have any respect for her. They may enjoy a summer flirtation with her, but such a girl never enters seriously into their thoughts. The girl who is kind and thoughtful to her parents is the girl whom they admire. The girl who is disrespectful to her parents will not long retain the respect of others. Men know very well that a girl who deceives her mother cannot be trusted. A good daughter has in her the making of a good wife, and a man remembers this when he begins to think seriously of matrimony.—Leslie's.

Value of the "Old Man."

How about the "old man" and the apprentice? I have always felt and concerned in my work that the "old man," as he is alightingly referred to, has a place in industry that is sacrosanct. He can be used as trainer and coach. He may not be fast, but he is sure. He may, on other hand, prove to be both skilling and rapid on certain work. At any rate, for the sake of his past services don't turn him adrift. It is too old and cannot work possibly him. If he can work find out what is best for him to do and give him a schedule with a sufficient allowance added to his wage. Let him feel that he is doing his best. It won't cost much, if anything. The apprentice should also have an allowance added to his schedule that will warrant him in exerting himself. The apprentice, the average mechanic and the "old man" will have different tasks, but so there is little likelihood of a clash on account of bonus earnings.—Engineering Magazine.

Origin of a Mark Twain Story.

Of all the witty things said or written by Mark Twain no phrase has caused more alarm than his reply to an alarmist report. Rumor of my death greatly exaggerated." The history of this now celebrated bon mot is as follows: Mark Twain was on a visit to London some years ago, and had been received at the chief guest at a dinner to be given by a literary club. On the morning of the day when the dinner was to take place the secretary was shocked to hear a rumor that Mark Twain had died suddenly. At his wife's end, he sought to verify it by a diplomatic note to Mrs. Clemens, in which he mentioned the rumor. Mark Twain got hold of the note and telegraphed the now famous reply. "Rumor of my death greatly exaggerated." From "After Dinner Stories," by N. C. Fowler, Jr.

Von Moltke's Sage Remark.

In the Life of Von Moltke, by his nephew, the field marshal, we read that at ninety he had among his reading books Treitschke's "German History of the Nineteenth Century" and Sybel's "Foundation of the German Empire." In his travel diaries he writes scornfully of the British, whom he complains of meeting everywhere—Irish. On the yacht there were 17 Irishmen, and only one Englishman among them. They seem so indispensable as the salt in our food, though they do not always season society.

Now kept to themselves, playing chess. Of a party of Americans he sees on a Mediterranean boat he writes: "Albion's stepsons are not very amiable." The Yankee turns out that after having traveled all over Europe now disagreeable must he be at home.

The case is outdoor only by "Mrs." No wonder would she prefer to be called "Mistress ——" nowadays, but to address an envelope to her as "Miss ——" would be even worse.—London Chronicle.

Publisher—Wait! I should say not. Why, if we wait until it ends the old fact may be known.—Life.

Ideal Cold-Resisting Coats

SINCE it has become the custom for women to get out of doors day in and day out, either at the call of business or for the sake of good health, they have learned to demand many virtues in their cold-resisting coats. They want clothes that will fit and look well. They affect mannish styles in the cut of these utility coats, but do get permit them to be clumsy or ill-fitting.

Manufacturers have placed on the market as smart and trim lines as the most discriminating woman of fashion could ask for. One can be quite unconscious of the cold when fortified against it with the right kind of clothing. The comfort of the cold will be enjoyed by the most delicate of women if they are protected from discomfort.

No winter season has come to more full handed in the matter of desirable top-coats for the coldest weather than this. Styles have been adapted to clothe and hold to the purpose for which the garment is to be used. The result is coats with splendid qualities—warmth, durability and smartness.

The balmacan of tweed, shown in the picture, is a fine type. Nothing would be plainer or more shapely. The lapped seams help out in the adjustment of the garment, and hemmed edge at the fronts and about the collar and cuffs make a trim, decorative finish. The coffee is of the tailored kind that may be turned up and fastened close about the neck.

Other cloths used for this style are chinchilla, corduroy, plush, cloth, velours, plaids and checks, and the various convertible coatings, besides a few fancy weaves.

For driving and for the auto, when the weather is nipping, these substantial, well-appointed coats make their wearers cozy. Take a tailored suit, they have a style of their own.

Many of the new models have a pronounced flare to the skirt, but the heaviest cloths are cut on most mannish lines.

Ruffled Handbags.

There are some new handbags of silk with a little fullness of pleated silk or crepe about the top, quite like a diminutive overskirt. And so, of course, they are charming.

A little investigation reveals that although waves and curls are to be worn in abundance, the effect of the cameo coiffure there is no telling what depth of coquettishness may be disguised. The waves are not always set in rows, and the curls always smooth. The psyche knot may be turned back from the face with part of its charm, but it is a familiar enough arrangement in cameos. But there are certain little touches and details in most of them, to make them worth while as a subject of study for the inventive on hire. "The Hair Beautiful" hairdresser.

New Moyen Age Effects.

Dinner gowns and ball toilettes show a marked effect that is extremely quaint and attractive. A combination of materials is usually employed for this type of gown, satin and lace, velvet and chiffon, or other lace or chiffon combined with one of the new brocade effects with metallic thread patterns.

Simplicity of design and richness of material is the keynote of these gowns. They are in two portions; an upper part, consisting of the corsage, close fitting, the sleeves very long and often modified to the arms, the flare of the part of the gown starting below the hips.

Mottled Pigskin.

The dictionary of the Lessington rail has waymen that they shall be addressed as "master" remitts one of the remarkable artificiality of this word. "Master" was the original English form of respectful address, representing the Latin "magister." But somehow or other "master" has slipped down to be a title for boys, while this word retains the respectful pronunciation, of which our language is still so proud, that "mister" looks hopelessly vulgar when written out.

SUICIDE BLOCKED BY SWITCH ENGINE

John Doyle Ties Rope From Trestle, Swings, Then Along Comes Choo-Choo.

Chicago.—The dodging of some would-be suicides have been frustrated, while others have been successful, but never, so far as there is any record, has a suicide been prevented in the same manner as was the attempt John Doyle made.

Doyle is a metal polisher and has been out of work three months. "I never did have any luck, said he. "I'm going to end it all." He stole a clothesline and climbed upon the Rock Island railroad trestle at Sorenson's yard street. He tied the rope where a rail, fashioned a noose of the loose end, adjusted it about his neck, squirmed down between the ties, and dropped off into space—and as he had hoped, eternity.

He had hung about ten seconds when along came a switch engine and cut the rope. Doyle was jolted up considerably when he hit the ground. Trainmen had him taken to the Michael hospital.

BARE HANDED, KILLS BEAR

After Losing His Clothes in Struggle Man Chokes Animal to Death.

Solon Springs, Wis.—After a desperate struggle, Special Forest Ranger Brown of this place killed a 300-pound black bear with his hands, according to his story. He has left the carcass substantially his clothes.

Brown's story is that while in the woods the bear visited his camp and ransacked his larder while he was away. On his return he laid in ambush for the bear, which returned at night. Brown fired at the animal but only wounded him, and the bear charged. A struggle ensued between the ranger and the bear, which finally choked to death. During the struggle most of the Ranger's clothes were stripped from his body.

EAGLE ATTACKS SHIP AT SEA

Big Bird Battles Fiercely With Crew of Boat 150 Miles From Land.

Philadelphia.—When the Lonsenar, the British steamship, left Philadelphia port from Huelva, Spain, her crew told how a brown-feathered eagle swooped down on the ship off Delaware Capes and had been with them for about 150 miles from the Delaware Capes and had every two of the crew a good fight before it was captured. Boatswain Smith had a cut over his left eye and Seaman Macpherson had hand was scratched and cut.

The eagle was seen astern Monday morning, and after a three-hour fight it seemed to apart itself for a final dash on board. Then the Portuguese Smith went to pick the bird up when it jumped on him. "The Nuts" followed

Canada is Calling You to her Rich Wheat Lands

She extends to Americans a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help to feed the world by tilling some of her soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. BALANCE KEPT BY NATURE

Increase of the Human Race Seems to Be Regulated by Wars and Other Devastations.

Every year, according to scientists who attempt to keep the general records, at least 80,000,000 human beings are born on this earth and 60,000,000 or 70,000,000 die. This indicates a dull birth rate of about 220,000 and a death rate of 180,000. The daily increase in population therefore is about 40,000. The total population of the globe is estimated at 1,800,000,000.

The ravages of war do little to increase the increase. Far more effective have been the upheavals of nature. The Franco-Prussian war killed about 130,000 in seven months. The death roll of the Russo-Japanese conflict about 200,000. A single earthquake (1737, in India) has been estimated to have caused 300,000 deaths. The fatalities of the Messina earthquake in 1908 cannot have been far short of 100,000. A tidal wave in 1896 drowned 50,000 persons in Japan, causing a greater loss of life than the whole war with China in 1894. The earthquake in Japan in 1703 is said to have killed 200,000 people. The Lisbon earthquake in 1755 destroyed 10,000 human lives, while 40,000 were lost in the same year in earthquakes in Persia.

On matters of feminine dress we seldom venture to express an opinion unless it be occasionally a word in defense of that liberalism which permits a woman or female her freedom and comfort as well as her appearance.

But we are prompted now to utter protest against the progress of American fashion designers, who, with a free field for the first time in history, can think of nothing better than to mimic the styles prevailing in Europe.

It not enough that we should have the horrors of the war thrust upon us by the news, filling our minds with horrible pictures. HOW UNCLE SAM FIGHTS DISEASE

By Edward B. Clark

ASSISTANT SURGEON GENERAL W. W. KERR

SURGEON GENERAL RUPERT BLUE

BETWEEN the people of the United States and disease and death stands the government's public health service. Perhaps it will be urged that the good body of physicians of the United States is the real safeguard of the people. This is in every high sense true, but in support of the first seemingly wide-reaching assertion let it be known that the physicians of the public health service engage themselves faithfully and with proved efficiency in the labor of prevention of which, as the time-tried saying has it, an ounce is worth a pound of cure.

The surgeons of the public health service are not only soldiers in the fight of victory against disease, but they are the advance guard of the soldiers engaged in the fight. The campaign records show that on many fields by early victories they have made great battles unnecessary. It is a large part of their duty to overcome the enemy on his first appearance, and in many instances to make impossible his occupancy in the field which he seeks to sow with the germs of diseases which are his weapons of offense.

In the popular prints one reads columns of the activities of government in preparations for possible war. There seem to be a dozen bureaus, bands and sibling interest in battalions. Of the life-saving function of the government one reads little. The work of the medical services in a divided war, which is more dangerous than that of the soldier. The doctor in his investigations, experiments and ministrations faces death in the time of peace, and in the time of war the surgeon with the soldier is on the battle field. There is a living interest in the fully work of the public health service of the United States. It is carried on for the benefit of all the people hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of whom know too little of the labor in their behalf.

The public health service of the United States is a bureau of the department of the treasury. It falls directly within the office of assistant secretary of the treasury, Byron R. Newton. The surgeon-general of the service is Rupert Blue, whose research work and whose accomplishments in lines of medical endeavor are well known to the medical profession. There are six assistant surgeon-generals, Doctors A. H. Glennan, W. G. Stimpson, L. E. Cofer, J. W. Kerr, W. Ruckar and J. W. Trask. They are all stationed in Washington and have charge of the various branches in all parts of the country.

Recently in the medical council there appeared this brief but comprehensive statement of the manifold functions of the public health service of the United States government:

"Cooperating through the health authorities of the states, the service collects data upon the prevalence and distribution of diseases, enforces interstate quarantine, suppresses epidemics, conducts research work, maintains national quarantine, examines immigrants, regulates the manufacture and sale of biologic medicinal products, enforces interstate traffic and furnishes medical treatment to various branches of the government service. Officers of the service may be assigned to duty in any part of the world."

It is the intention in the present article, to take up and describe only one of the works and fields of labor of the public health service, the control of Chesapeake bay and its inlets and tributaries form the field of an enormous industry. It is from these waters that are taken a large part of the shell fish approved as a delectable food by thousands and perhaps millions who never saw salt water. How many Americans nodding with the approving smile of satisfaction over the half shell know that it has been made a matter of government concern that the shell fish should be a food as safe to the health as it is grateful to the taste.

It has been said that the American people show great interest in a dreadnought; a big ship built for offensive purposes, but it is a fact beyond doubt strongly, mainly for the staking of other ships with the same end in view, is a stabilizing purpose. Is it not to be hoped that an equal if not a greater interest may one day be created in the little ships of the government whose only work and only purpose are saving ones?

In the control of the public health service is a little ship called the Bratton. It bears the name of a surgeon of the service who did commanding work for mankind in a great yellow fever epidemic and who laid down his life for humanity. The scene of the Bratton's work is on the waters of the great shell fish producing bay which washes Maryland and Virginia shores thereof. It is one of the ships helping to guard the lives of ninety million of people.

The work of safeguarding the shell fish beds from pollution and thereby performing the work of prevention as a source from which disease frequently springs, falls in the field of direction of scientific research, which is the work of Surgeon Cofer of the division of scientific research. To give an idea of the nature of the work of the division, prevention and cure coming under the direction of Cofer, it may be said that Doctor Kerr's division is set forth in the following paragraphs of duties as set forth in a statement of the service appear as follows: Laboratories, Hygienic laboratory, Bacteriologic laboratory, Washington, D. C.; division of chemistry, sanitary chemistry, pathology and bacteriology. Field investigations: Diseases affecting man, pollution of streams by sewage and by chemical and industrial wastes and school hygiene.

The services of the good ship Bratton are great and past conditions of health of the community, whether or not typhoid and other communicable diseases are or have been prevalent, the number of cases of such diseases and their location, the general sanitary condition of the houses, the land and the inhabitants. It is a comprehensive work and it is carried out in every locality where there is a thought that danger may exist.

At Cape Charles the public health service has an experiment station. It is well and pleasantly equipped, located building, fitted with all the needed appliances for the scientific work which then is presented. At a little distance is a building which is used for a tank house in which are placed all the materials which is to be the subject of bacteriological and chemical examination. From the beginning of crews working trip until the final results of examinations of the material collected are known, the work of the service has been in most thorough. Nothing is left to chance and nothing is omitted which might in any way help the safeguarding labor.

In this study of possible shell fish bed, or water pollution, the problem of the source of contamination, some work in the Mississippi sound, in the time to come unquestionably will be undertaken will be widely extended. The value of the service is unquestionable and it has been so recognized by the shell fish industry. The shell fish industry is an enormous one and it is of surpassing value. The public health service not only works for the people, but for the industry itself, which, of course, cannot thrive if the public becomes charged with danger to the public health. In a word, one of the great works of the public health service is to see to it that one great part of the food supply of the United States is made and kept safe.

The work of the public health service is made public and the government and the individual state profit by them. In the agricultural department there are two governmental agencies which make use of the information which the public health service supplies. There are pure food and sanitary laws in the United States and there are means of reaching offenders against them. Three departments of the government, the treasury, agriculture, and of justice requires, the attorneys-general's department, constitute a partnership of correction, and, if the case justifies, of prosecution.

The Bratton is a small ship, but under the direction of Surgeon Cofer it is commanded by scientists. It is doing a great work for the public health of the people of these United States of America.

POINTS OUT TURKEY'S FAULT

Lack of Ideals Responsible for Succession of Defeats.

At the opening of the Balkan war the Turkish government was in good solidarity, and this not alone from the political point of view, but also and chiefly. True, our hearts were not entirely unimpressed by the prospect of "victory, victory" in spite of this feeling, in spite of all the excitement, our lack of ideal. What advantages were to the only cause, it was one of the main causes of our defeat. A nation cannot be founded simply on material forces; for material things change easily. Social organisms that depend entirely on their material forces, and are entirely without any strong moral ideals, are very frail, cannot stand the standing ground at a time of change. They are easily shaken down. They cannot remain impotent, they go from defeat to defeat, as we did during the Balkan war. The unshaken faith that gives to a nation an ideal compensates for the loss of material forces, and allows one to look calmly at overwhelming adversities.—Tanin (Turkish) Istanbul.

THE DAINTY HOME TABLE.

There is no housewife who does not pride herself on her household linens. Especially proud is she of fine table linen. Simplicity of decoration and appointments is the last word today, and the real pleasure of entertaining need be swaddled by the antiquated ideas to common in days passed. Many a woman in her effort to lend some decoration at a cock, overloads her table. Today such a display is out of taste. If one cannot afford to use fine linen all the time she may surely have one set to use when occasion. The table is now so commonly used with pretty doilies that most women hail the custom as a most economical one.

For a simple luncheon the Japanese sets, which make no pretense of being anything but cotton, but which have pretty designs in artistic colorings, are well liked and are cheap in price.

Flowers for the table always add a restful look and may be the simplest little plant or a most pretentious hot house bouquet. A very pretty fernlike plant may be grown at home by planting a few seeds of the grapefruit in a small pot. The glossy leaves look like a rare plant.

When candles are used, one may have the glass candle-holders, which are very inexpensive, and the shades may be made at home of the cone-shaped Candle light is much softer and prettier when coming through dainty shades than any other light.

Even for small companies, the salad and dessert course is much daintier and may be served much more effectively as a decoration if served individually.

The steamed glasses make a most dainty receptacle for both desserts and cocktails, while the handled cups of glass can be used either for punch or sherbet.

Whatever service is used, it may be dainty, if cheap. In this age it is not the most money which buys the prettiest things. Simple designs in the dishes used, as well as in cutlery and linen, is the sign of good taste.

It is sadly amiss never to perceive how much pleasure others derive today until that lightness is diminished.—Thomas Hood.

Disappointment should always be taken as a stimulant, and never viewed as a discouragement.

THE TIN CAN DINNER.

Time was when the old-fashioned housekeeper looked askance upon her who served a dish or course, a meal, from a tin can. This prejudice is fast disappearing as time removed, for we find that many of our foods are well tinned and at a saving of energy, money and the most important of all, the time we have at our disposal.

Never leave the contents of a can after it has been opened, but put into a bowl or dish and set away in a cool place. Many of the vegetables are improved by pouring out and stirring for a time before cooking.

Through cannot gush the house wife of today may call upon the manufacturers of the world. Novelty in form and combination are appearing each month on the market. The pineapple which is the proud state is preserved where it is grown and is so much superior to any that we can procure here in bought from our markets. We may have chicken in tulip, sweet peppers, chicken livers truffled, chop suey or chilli con carne at a moment's notice.

A warm welcome is assured to the chance guest who drops in to a meal where the emergency shelf is well stocked with canned food.

Soups of various kinds are always good. Vegetables like corn may be scalloped or served in a salad and countless dishes may be evolved from combinations of vegetables.

Corn Scallop—Take a buttered baking dish put layers of corn and buttered crumbs. Pour over a cup of sweet milk and bake in a hot oven until the crumbs, which should form the top layer, are browned.

When there are two parties to a bargain it is only reasonable that the interests of both should be considered.—Oliver Twist.

There is some victory gained in every defeat, some white in every cloud.

SALAD ACCESSORIES.

Though the ingredients of a salad are of utmost importance, the touches in the way of garnishing and serving are equally so. The ingredients should be chosen as to their fitness of combination and the salad dressing accentuates the flavor. In arranging the setting of the salad bowl adds to its appearance, like crisp green nests of lettuce or cress. A most unappetizing appearance may be given to the most tasty combination if served carelessly on wilted leaves. Fruit salads are most attractive on fresh leaves of the kind itself used, if obtainable, lettuce leaves if used just before serving are also attractive and the salad hail the season as a most economical one.

Fill a half of a canned peach or pear with cocoanut crumbs, cover with a custard or whipped cream, sprinkle with a few chopped fruit.

Boil rice until tender, drain and add to pulp of an orange, some thinly sliced bananas and a few canned cherries and pineapple, if desired. When ready to serve, turn out, cover with powdered sugar and garnish with balls.

Banana Ice Cream—Scald two cupfuls of milk in a double boiler and when it is hot add a cupfuls of sugar, stirring constantly until the mixture coats the spoon, add a dash of salt, a half cupful of sugar which when the custard is cold a teaspoonful of lemon juice and three mashed bananas.

Frozen Plum Pudding—Scald a pint of milk and when hot pour over three well-beaten egg yolks, add a cupful of sugar and cook over hot water until the mixture coats the spoon; strain and flavor with melted chocolate, add a half cupful of blanched almonds and one cupful of whipped cream. Freeze in a mold. Serve with a sauce of raisins and currants and adding the juice of a canned citron after soaking in orange juice.

Uncooked Mincemeat—Into an old-fashioned crock put alternately in thin layers one pound of fresh beef suet, one pound of seeded raisins, one pound raisins, one pound of pitted dates, half a pound of mixed nutmeats, one pound of currants, one pound of figs, two pounds of sour apples, chopped, half a pound each of candied citron and citrus, one grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of salt, the juice and rind of two lemons and oranges, two ounces of allspice, cinnamon and cloves mixed. Add a pint of cider, which is cold but has been boiled. Stir occasionally for a few days. Then can.

THE WHEAT LANDS OF WESTERN CANADA AN ATTRACTION

THE EUROPEAN WAR MAKES THE GROWING OF WHEAT EXCEPTIONALLY REMUNERATIVE.

One result of the European War has been to diverts the volume of business done by many of the manufacturing institutions of the United States, commercial enterprises have been affected, business of many kinds have been hampered, and a financial stringency has been forced on almost every community. It is not only because it has brought these things about, and created a lot of hardship, but there is the considerable fact of the terrible loss of life, the great destruction of property, and the diversion of everything near and dear to those whose countries are involved in the war that makes the whole affair highly regrettable. The heart of the entire world goes out in sympathy to those within the area of the trouble. Arrangements have been made to relieve the distress by money and other means. But there is one great thing—wheat and flour—that the European countries will need. The wheat producing countries will be called upon to furnish the limit of Canada's power to give, just as it Great Britain and her Allies and their power to assist them. Absurd Beliefs About Handwriting.

In olden days the ladybird was accredited with the possession of many wonderful powers. Pilgy and afterwhile Aesian and others have related how it would climb apple and fig trees, make down the fruit and afterward fall upon and impale the fruit on its spines and carry them off upon its back. The belief that it was in the habit of milking cows during the night is likewise a very old one.

REAL GRANGE WORK

Service Should Be the Slogan of the Organization.

Illustrations of What Granges Are Doing for the Betterment of the Communities in Which They Are Located—Typical of Grange Endeavor.

By J. W. DARROW.

If the grange exists for anything at all it is to serve. Service should be its slogan and motto in its relations to the community. There is no other reason for the grange's being than that it is to help somebody in some way, and that somebody may be among its members or some one outside its membership. It may be a collection or number of individuals who constitute the community. In some way the grange must prove its right to exist by rendering community service, and this it does through educational, social and financial channels. This larger service, which will be largely altruistic in character, is the greatest service that the grange can hope to render.

I have used the term "community service." What is a community? It has been defined to be that territory, with its people, which lies within a team haul of a given center, and this center (and I am speaking strictly of the rural community) is usually a village, small or large, sometimes so small as to comprise only a few houses, a store, a church, a school and a blacksmith shop. Beyond this nearly prescribed community circle the influence of its leading rural personalities does not extend, within this radius individual affairs are of quite common knowledge. Social intercourse is very largely reinforced within this circle and families are accustomed to exchange visits with each other far more oftener than they go outside the community to visit. While this definition of the community or the individual's larger home must of necessity be quite flexible in most strictly rural sections, yet it is in reality but a greater household and the unit of social or association of local country life. It is with this people that the grange must directly deal, and to them it must dedicate its largest service. Nowhere else can its influence be so strongly emphasized. Its hasting work must be for and among the people where it "lives, moves and has its being."

To illustrate what I mean by community service let me give some instances, typical, yet real, of what granges all over our land have actually done for their respective communities.

To improve the appearance of its town a grange appropriated from its treasury money for cash prizes to be given for the greatest front yard improvement made in the village during the year. The prizes were awarded in the fall on the report of an inspector committee, and it is said the whole community took a lively interest in the matter, and it is said the whole town caught the spirit of improvement. The "front yard contest" was made an annual affair. The appearance of the town was transformed.

A village had a library, but it far from realized the possibilities of such an institution. It had a chest full of books, but they were poorly housed and had no semblance of being catalogued. The grange led the way toward having suitable quarters fitted up and the books put in proper shape for convenient handling. Then came a cozy reading room, then an increased appropriation for library purposes, and finally the grange set on foot a project for a new library building, enlisted the public over the plan, led in entertainments for the library benefit, and to due time the library was completed.

Another grange interested itself in getting a telephone project through. In fact many granges have been responsible for the prompt introduction of telephone service in rural districts. But this grange set the example to canvassers to work from each subordinate grange in its county. Within two weeks they had secured pledges for over 100 telephones in half a dozen towns, and the problem was solved and solved by the grangers of the country. They put their telephones a year or two earlier than they would have if they had waited for some one else to start the enterprise.

In a small country town there was a number of young men whose only place of resort was the village store. The members of the grange saw the need and provided for it. They opened up an uncomfortable room in their hall as a reading room for the young men and supplied it with papers and magazines. Later a piano was purchased, and other conveniences were added. This grange for four years ago, and now nearly all the young men belong to the grange, recognizing what it did for them.

In another small town the only source of water supply were the wells on each man's property. A very dry summer came along and every well failed. The situation was critical. There was a grange in that town, and it rose to the occasion. At its own expense it put in a modern driven well on the village common, and the supply of water was obtained, and it was thrown open unreservedly for the use of anybody. This was grange leadership in a community enterprise that was highly appreciated.

Now, this is fact, I'm telling you. You'll find it a good advice:

GRANGE PROGRESS

An Influential Factor in Rural Life Uplift.

Professor Alfred Vivian of the Ohio State University on the Important Accomplishments of the Grange and Its Future Possibilities.

Probably no organization during the last two decades has had greater influence in the improvement of agricultural conditions than has the grange—or, more accurately speaking, the order of Patrons of Husbandry, and certainly no organization of rural forces has before it a more promising future.

The grange is probably the most an influential factor in the great rural uplift movement which is now the talk of everywhere and is advancing in every way in country affairs. What the grange has already accomplished amounts to only a hint of its future possibilities for it has taken its place as the power to accomplish for the farmer many desirable things which can be acquired only through the or some similar organization. That the grange will rise to its opportunities those who are best acquainted with its history do not for a moment doubt. For its part has been one of conservative progress but progress nevertheless, and it has to its credit a progressive conservatism for the fact that it alone of the many farmers' associations has stood the ravages of time.

The men most prominent in the new rural uplift movement have recognized the things most needed by the farm improvement farm. Of these three stand out prominently, viz:

Better social conditions.
Education.
Business co-operation.

All three are cardinal principles of the grange.

Many of us believe that the social principle so strongly emphasized by the grange is undoubtedly its most important function. The grange opens its doors to the farmer, his wife and children, giving each a voice in its affairs and offering to each something of personal interest. Where a good live grange exists it becomes the social center of the community. The grange meetings bring together neighbors who would seldom meet other wise and forces kindness from the hard life.

The grange meetings themselves, if properly managed, are social functions of mutual importance to a rural community; but, better yet, the social friendships and good times of the regular meetings, the picnics, picnics and to the affairs which give an entirely different color to the neighborhood. It is a matter of common observation that the young people in a farming section containing a grange in which youth is well represented are more contented than those in a community where the grange influence is lacking.

The grange has always stoutly advocated the education of its children, along the line of their own life work. The consolidation and rural of the or der emphasize repeatedly the importance and necessity of education. Through its program it has itself accomplished much in the way of education, and the better, whose duty it is to prepare the programs, has in many granges become a more important personage than the master himself. But it is not only through its own program, important as they are, that the grange has advanced the cause of education. The order has always been found on the side of better schools of all kinds.

It has been a staunch friend of the agricultural colleges, of farmers' institutes and of agencies for the dissemination of knowledge. In many instances it has gone much further and provided public lecture courses and has conducted reading courses. It has been the center for correspondence courses and in divers ways has infused an immeasurably larger and fuller uplift of the locality.

The grange in its public action as well as in its private teachings has always been on the right side of every moral and ethical issue nonpolitical in principle it has fought for all the great moral reforms of the country regardless of party politics.

The grange has always stood for the best things in rural life. It already has a membership reaching into hundreds of thousands and is steadily growing. It is not too much to prophesy that it will continue to increase as an influential force in rural advancement. So long as its members keep constantly in mind the great ethical principles advanced in its ritual and constitution it is not hard to believe that the ambition of the grange to take its place beside the school and the church, as one of a trinity of force that shall mold the life of the farmer on the broadest possible basis—material, intellectual, social and ethical—bids fair to be realized.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGH UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1919, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

CHAPTER XXVI—Continued.

He became conscious of Simon's curious gaze and turned sharply on him.

"Did you you begin to admire a bar grating at about nothing steel. Look down the valley—there, on those hills. Do you see anything out of the ordinary?"

Simon looked and nodded. "I've lived in this town forty years."

Henley stared. "Humph! An epidemic. There's magic in those hills." His thoughtful glance swept them once more. "But I—I allus've magic—"

. . . . . .

The gentle, sometimes plaintive voice of the preacher had no power to distract from thought. His wanted message could not reach the man for whom it had been prepared in the hope that it would come to him with healing in its wings.

"Love would do that. . . . . His own chance weeds kept running through Mark's mind, tidying his yellow them along a new path. He followed, wondering that he had never read that verse before.

Was that, then, the evidence of love? Was there another manifestation of the miracle than that he had asked and awarded? For he had sought love, thinking to find it expressed as he had known it before, in the old romantic visionings, the rhapsodic sentimentalities, the lust to possess. Mark Truitt was not the first to make that mistake. The coast of life is littered with the wrecks of those who have taken the flickering glow of youth's blood impulse to weld or the red flame of sensuality's desire for the true light. But that morning a new perception dawned.

The poets and preachers were right. There was—there must have—a love that passed beyond the realm of the senses, that knitted souls as well as bodies, anchored hard and fast in enough, could endure but in the knowledge of a perfect, indestructible union and was gentle and to serve, when it must gave received most. Such a love would not stand against at sin, would suffer in its mate's suffering, yearn to bear that other's burdens. That love he had never seen, never met in his passion-as pilgrimage. . . . But this love he was capable of it he knew from his own soul; only in such guise could the miracle come.

The preacher was closing. Like an echo came his last words to Mark. It was "Faith, purpose, love, the trio of forces without which no life is complete. And of these the greatest is love. For love outlasts faith and hopes—seeketh not her own . . . thinketh no evil . . . endureth all things . . . never fails. Oh, my friends, open your hearts!"

The benediction had been said. Mark went quietly from his rear pew out of the church and lingered slowly along the dusty, weed-flanked pike until he came to a minor road. There he dropped to a seat and turned upon the eyes to the valley.

The afternoon quiet of noonday was about him.

Up the pike, village bound, creaked a battered old top-buggy, bearing a passenger whose grizzled head had lined face, too, showed the marks of time's battering.

The buggy drew up beside him.

"Did he find you?"

"Who?"

The doctor chuckled. "Guess he didn't, or you wouldn't have to ask. He's a vigorous party that doesn't understand the joy of talk. I took him from Number Four to your place."

"Short and stout—"

"Yes, and—"

"Let me guess—for looks." Hodges crinkled the portrait. "That's him.

Cities Unbuilt.

Henley was pleased to be facetious. "The great Utopia—in his mind—cottage—living in democratic simplicity among his village neighbors. Very pretty! I suppose you do the chores, too.

"Sometimes—what we have."

"Very pretty! The Sunday papers would like that. But it's a little too theatrical, don't you think?"

"Not conspicuously so. The place was bare, and it served my purpose very well. I don't need much room, you know. I'm not a Wall street boss."

"Humph!" grunted Henley, still a skeptic.

"What," Mark asked, "did you come here for?"

Henley grunted again. "Cordial, I must say! I came to restore your sanity. His rose, mopping his red face with a silk handkerchief. "Take me out of this sun and I'll begin. It's getting pretty far gone."

Mark led him into a cool office-room—plastered enough—and made him comfortable with a cigar and a chair by a window from which a view of the valley was to be had.

"Not sarbitric," Henley grudgingly admitted, "but good enough for a man who has no women. Now tell me what you're trying to do here."

And Mark began, simply, without enthusiasm or sentimentalizing, to set forth his idea.

Henley listened intently, studying the white, with a growing astonishment, the grave, quiet-voiced man speaking. For he saw here a marred and a mystery. Here was a man of powerful talents for which a rich, hungry market was waiting, of proven mettle for battling, who had tasted the sweets of conquest and was a footing from which he could go indefinitely farther and higher, giving himself to an idea—nay, an ideal—most remarkable of all, to an undeniably and thoroughly attractive ideal. And giving himself sincerely. Such hasty explanations as mental slave and theatrical him were put aside. The man was evidently honest, sincerely in a deep conviction and genuine purpose. Henley could not understand, but he could at once recognize that.

And "Henley could respect that for what it entailed. He judged men by instinct and instinct served him truly now, revealing to him what the speaker himself had not yet fully felt. Brilliancy and courage, audacity, even Truitt had always had in generous measure. Now he had added steadiness and bigness, strength without hardening, and therefore the power to achieve greatly as never before. Everything Henley had known of Truitt he had liked; what he saw now he liked more than ever.

What fires and pressures, he wondered, had thus forged the steel in Mark Truitt? But what an ally he would be!—and what a stunning ally!

And it is worth remembering, in view of the ridiculous later hoax at Truitt's Utopia and inspired by Henley himself, that on that Sabbath, listening to Mark's exposition, Henley saw the idea as entirely feasible, logical and practical in plan and, one factor left out, assured of success. But then Henley knew as the public did not know, of the pride of industry and the methods and concealment of distortion.

The one factor which could not be left out was that Truitt's plan was an embodiment of the ideals of Henley and his fellow familiaries of magnitude and an attack upon the divine right of exploiters.

The explanation came to an end. Mark awaited his auditor's comment.

"Of course, you know," Henley said, with an emphasis that was outward only, "you won't put it through."

"I do not know that," Mark answered quietly. "This valley is well situated with respect to the market, its transportation facilities are good. Our fuel is here, and I can get ore here cheaper than Quibby or MacGregor. I can make steel cheaper than anybody in America, and there's no plant of its size that can equal mine in capacity in ten years, with a fair field—"

"With a fair field. Exactly!—You mean I won't have it?"

"You won't have it."

"Why?"

"For one thing—profits."

"Don't make money here."

"It isn't a question of your profits nor of profits alone, but the size of profits. No," Henley shook his head vigorously, "you can't have it. I'm sorry as well you that."

"Well!"

"I have no objection to your safety appliances. They're practical. They'll save twice their cost in damages every year."

"That's obvious."

"I'll agree to the bribe. If the men want to clean up after work—why, I guess I can stand it. Don't make a habit."

Mark smiled. "The man will be grateful."

"I'm not joking," Henley reminded him sternly. "I'll go as far as to I—"

"Understand! Of course I understand. That's the fix this grips. You're a born battler; things were coming too easy for you. Your opposition, to have to extend yourself. I need that. I've got a hold in Wall street. I can tighten my hold. But I'm out of place there. I'm a builder, not a money-grubber. I've got to see things growing under my hand. What I want to be just a giant, that would be a work, the kind I need. Will you consider it?"

"Are you offering it?"

"I'm offering it as a possible alternative to putting you out of business. There may be magic in these hills, but if the thing works out as I think as I believe now it will, I'll do it. What do you say?"

"And you say," Mark insisted, "it's the only possible alternative to fighting you?"

"To bolus," Henley corrected grimly. "Yes, I'm sorry."

It was Mark's turn to go to the window. He stood there silent for many minutes, looking not upon the city that might be but upon the little village at his feet.

"What do you say?" Henley demanded impatiently.

"It doesn't tempt," Mark faced him steadily. "You were mistaken. I don't want battle. I don't want obstacles. But I do want to get that through." He nodded toward the village and the mills.

"Humph! You'll find plenty of obstacles and battles over there."

"Yes. But there would be—compensations."

"I would give you compensations to you mean," Henley demanded, "you chosen to hobble along with a little one-horse plant, pottering around when you might go with me into something really big? Compensations! You'll end in losing all you have."

"Not compensations, I have not corrected. That is possible. But I'm not worrying about the poor farm. I'm glad, when the time comes, I can find a good job somewhere."

"Then," Henley fired his last gun, gruffly, "then you choose those people over there against me—who made you?"

"They helped to make me—to make you, too—Mark's eyes swept the valley—"to make something finer. I don't like to think of you as an enemy. But this plan, this idea, is worth a good deal to me, even though the chance of success is small. It came to me before the strike. And at first it was only the shallow sentimentality you think it. Then it became a refuge. I came here because there was a thing—Henley saw the shadow that passed over his face—"a thing I wanted to forget, something I needed to forget. But now it's grown beyond that. It has a value of its own. It's my idea, the thing I must do. You've helped me to make that clear.

"You ought to understand, for you had it. It's what saved you from being like the other money grubbers. You came close to being one, I guess. Why, once when Quibby cracked his whip you—you—cringed like a whipped dog before his old blather. You felt the sting and your pride rebelled. You remember that, don't you? And then you ran afoul of him again, and you felt the same thing. Now you don't cringe. You remember that, don't you? And then you ran afoul of him again over the strike, when the same threat hung over you, and you didn't cringe. You balk like—like—"

"I couldn't let—"

"No, you couldn't. You believed opposing him would cost you much. The strike you forced him handsomely a thousands from the value of your stock. But you didn't think of that. And now you've claimed my friendship. How much does it mean to you?"

"A good deal, Truitt," Henley answered slowly. "It's the only friendship I ever wanted. It was my reason for making the trip which you saw—"

"Friendship means obligation—you've just reminded me of that. Remember, in your deliberation, I'm indebted to you that you got away whole from Quibby because of us."

"What? What's this? You never told me—"

"I wasn't. I who did it but—a woman." Henley saw the shadow again. "There was a long pause. I took for an advantage I wouldn't take for myself. Does that square what you did for me?"

"Yes."

"Good! I don't understand. But it does. It more than squares it."

"Then—you mean you have can't have you—will you stand aside and let me fight it out with the others?"

"You're asking me to let you undertake a hopeless task. I'm sorry."

"My city—I guess it was just the magic of the hills, after all. I don't want to do it without you—I'm sorry."

There was a long pause. Then Henley drew a long breath that was almost a sigh, glanced at the clock and rose.

"I'll take another cigar," he said, gritty facetious. "If you don't mind giving aid and comfort to the enemy. Then I'll go back to my money grubbing."

When they were standing on the station platform he asked abruptly, "Can you tell me about that wonder Jackson?"

"I'd rather not."

Henley scrutinized him keenly. From around a curve came the crashed methods would have us to reckon with. We'd leave Quibby and that Scotch bagpipe, grown fat on other men's brains, in the shade. By God!" Henley's voice was ringing, as he wheeled on Mark again. "It would be like biting of the century—making a city to order. And I guess for that you'd be willing to give up your three two-by-four paternalism."

"That would be stipulated!"

"Certainly! Well—" Henley seemed unconscious of the change of mood and tense. "We'll leave late to this creation. We'll build this city on a rock—on a sound financial foundation—and use the profits for extensions."

"I think you don't understand what you are at. That's the joke of it. However, the point is, you forbid me to conduct my own business in my own way. And your authority?"

"The power," answered Henley quietly, "to smash you—and the will. We've got labor where we want it in this business and we propose to keep it there. What you propose would be a dangerous precedent. If we let you succeed, we'd have the men all over the country yammering for the same good conditions. Therefore, we won't let you succeed."

"I see. And you?"

"If I made you—have you forgotten that?—and I'm responsible for you. I helped to put labor where it is, at some risk to myself, and I don't propose to have a man of my own making undo the biggest thing I've ever done. Therefore, I won't let you succeed.

"You are quite sure you can do it?" asked me?"

"Truitt, every steel company in the country will make it its business to put you out."

"And you won't stand aside and let me fight it out with the rest of them?"

"No." Henley seemed astonished at the question. "Certainly not. What did you expect?"

"I had hoped," Mark answered slowly, "that you'd stay out of it. I realize I had no reason to hope that."

Henley stirred restlessly, turned to look out upon the valley, upon the city that had not yet sinned. An uneasy quake moved his heart, continued with a sharpness that was almost akin to pain. He found himself realizing an honest, an incredible loyalty to a hopeless such as he had used to know, healthily and unadmittedly, for a young half invalid with the habit of triumphing where robust men fell, multiplied now for this man.

"Truitt, I—" Henley stopped, an embarrassment as unwonted as the impulse upon him, and turned again to the valley.

"Truitt," he began again, very gruffly, eyes still fixed on the city the magic of the hills revealed to him, "I—well, I like you. I've always envied you my friend. I don't want to have to fight you. I don't think you want to make me. There is—there may be another alternative." He turned to face Mark. "Take me in with you."

Mark looked his astonishment.

"I say," Henley went on, "I might do it. I've seen something this morning—something you've been seeing. The city out there. It's big—big! And if the figures you've given me are correct, it's possible. This place was intended for a city. And with us working together, it could be ten times bigger—epic—stupendous!"

He got to his feet, and shooting up the shade, stood looking thoughtfully out of the window.

"I do not know that," Mark answered quietly "This valley is well situated with respect to the market, its transportation facilities are good. Our fuel is here, and I can get ore here cheaper than Quibby or MacGregor. I can make steel cheaper than anybody in America, and there's no plant of its size that can equal mine in capacity in ten years, with a fair field—"

"With a fair field. Exactly!—You mean I won't have it?"

Moved by Alderman Barney and seconded by Alderman Carter that the report as read be accepted and the mayor and city clerk be authorized to issue warrants on the city depositories for $2,997.09 and the clerk be instructed to draw orders on the various funds for the amount of each respective bill. Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote. Ayes, See. Priest, Carter, Barney and Carey. Nays, none.

There being no further business the council adjourned.

F. L. SMITH,
Deputy City Clerk.

Michigan is making a vigorous effort to stamp out hog cholera. Hogs are marketable," said Governor Woodbury N. Ferris to the citizens of his state in a recent proclamation call for co-operation in the anti-tuberculosis campaign. "Our state is making a vigorous effort to 'stamp out' tuberculosis in cattle. Cattle are marketable. Why not make strenuous effort to 'stamp out' tuberculosis in man, woman and children? Human beings are priceless." Red Cross Christmas seals are a means for every man, woman and child in the United States to have a share in "stamping out" tuberculosis. Have you bought your share? For sale at the drug stores.

How to Braise Meats and Poultry Deliciously.

The value of stews in giving body to cheap meat dishes is nowhere better demonstrated than in braising. In many an American family the problem dinner is a thing to be dreaded simply because the cook does not know how to prepare a cheap piece of meat. Braising is the correct way of preparing a pot roast, and it is a mixture of boiling and baking accomplished in the oven and not on top of the stove. It can be employed in cooking beef, veal, pork or poultry when the latter is found to be tough and unpromising. A gamble roasting pan is used, and the meat almost finds it stock, highly flavored with bay leaves, carrots, onions and herbs. The meat browns while the stock evaporates, but it does not fry out, absorbing in the meanwhile the rich flavoring of the stock.

HAZEL GRIFFIT

The editors this week are Cleo Thorne and Fred Gregory.

Marie Lamimen and Ruby Hooker are on the housekeeping committee this week.

The class had a venison feast last Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs Himes. The supper was served in cafeteria style. The venison was presented to the class by Mr. Milford, county school commissioner, and the party of hunters who were at "Camp Comfort."

Hazel Richardson and Lela Gasett visited the normal room one day last week.

Mr. Milford visited the normal room last Thursday and gave a short talk about his hunting trip. He also spoke about the necessity of trained teachers.

The class was provided with a much needed broom and dust-pan last week by the school board.

The class was very successful in the sale of tickets for the Charlevoix Lecture and Entertainment Course. The total amount of sales was $237.50. The commission received by the class is to be placed in the class treasury.

The Mackinaw-Cecil (O.) grange has decided to offer a first prize of a ten weeks' course in the agricultural department of the Ohio State university and a second prize of a trip to the International stock show at Chicago to the boy or girl under twenty years of age who is a granger or whose parents are grangers raising the largest and second largest amount of corn from an acre of ground. The contestants will be governed by the rules governing the Buckeye boys' corn contest this year, except when these rules conflict with rules adopted by the grange. The minimum for either the first or second prize winner was placed at eight bushels per acre.

Less than 1,000 miles of wagon road have been made at private and municipal cost in Alaska. Here and there can be found short stretches of rail road, clearly owned and used by mining concerns. The aggressive private ownership of Alaskan territory is said to be only 1 per cent of the whole. What marvelous change may be expected when public owned railroads shall pierce to every accessible part of this great country, where men may come to settle and build towns and cities! It is claimed the climatic conditions are delightful—cool, but dry and mild in winter, equable in summer—a land of new opportunity for thousands of home seekers.

MATTERS LOCAL AND GENERAL THAT ARE WORTHY OF PERUSAL

In proportion to the number of men in the field, deer hunting is shown to claim nearly as many men as war. The toll of the hunting season in the Upper Peninsula just closed shows a casualty list aggregating 60 dead and wounded. Sixteen hunters were killed, 42 seriously maimed and crippled, two still are missing and are believed to be dead.

Upwards of $40,000,000 for river and harbor improvement is asked for in the estimates which the war department has prepared for consideration by congress at the coming session. Approximately half of this total is for the Mississippi river and its tributaries. The estimates will be cut very closely by the house rivers and harbors committee when it meets, the last of this week, and it is possible the committee will vote to limit the bill to continuation of existing projects.

That all sheriffs of the state should be placed on a salary basis, and that Michigan should establish a farm colony for habitual drunkards and inebriates, where these men could at least earn a living, probably will be recommended by Governor W. N. Ferris in his coming inaugural address. Recommendations for legislation desired by the state board of correction and charities were made to Governor Ferris in a report by Secretary M. T. Murray of that board, and included those relating to the sheriff and the farm colony for inebriates.

As a general rule the inauguration of a governor is one of the big events in January, but this year if Governor Ferris has his way this year the ceremony will be exceedingly simple and the reception and other such features will be eliminated. Owing to the fact that Mrs. Ferris is seriously ill and will be unable to be present at the inauguration, it is the expressed wish of the chief executive that the ceremony be as simple as possible. When the governor took the oath of office at the beginning of the first term, two years ago, Mrs. Ferris was able to attend and stood in the receiving line at her husband's side.

December 1st the closed season for deer and partridge began and until next November no deer can be killed. Whether it is within the bounds of probability that the next legislature will take some action prohibiting the killing of deer for a certain number of years. The open season for partridge is from October 1 to Nov. 30. Perhaps in no season in a decade have so many deer been killed in this state this last season. Shortly after the season opened there was a fall of snow for a few days that was responsible for the slaughtering of many deer that might otherwise have escaped. Reports from the upper peninsula indicate that a large number of deer were killed there during the present season and that if the slaughter continues as it has this year it will be but a short time when the deer will be exterminated.

R. T. O'Reilly, the well known Alanson fruit grower, reported lately that he has completed the sale of his heavy harvest of apples, having sold more than four thousand bushels of fruit. He said that "if farmers and fruit growers will set out such varieties as Snows, Northern Spies, Grimes Golden, Wagners, Wealthies and Dutchess they will have no trouble selling their fruit when the trees begin bearing. Fruit buyers are eager to secure apples of these varieties and pay a good price for them. I had several buyers at my farm this fall who expressed surprise that so few bushels of these apples are raised in Emmet county and that there is so little care given to orchards by the farmers."

State Land Commissioner, A. G. Carton, announced that a carload of twenty-five elk for Michigan forest reserves will arrive in the state next month. The animals will be sent to the Houghton Lake forest reserve in Roscommon county, where a large tract of forest land has been fenced in and set aside for their use. As the elk multiply, herds of them will be established on state reserves in other parts of Michigan. The animals were purchased by the state at a cost of about $600 from the Yellowstone National Park.

Michigan fruit growers and speakers at the Michigan State Horticultural society convention at Kalamazoo lately gave much of their time on the plain form to assailing the wholesale buyers and commission merchants. The general belief prevailed that the wholesaler not only fleeces the producer but the consumer as well. All speakers advocated co-operation of the growers in shipping, packing and selling of fruit, and it was declared by all that this would prove the most effective safeguard against dishonesty among commission merchants.

Michigan is one of the twelve great apple producing states of the Union, and leads in the production of the four most important American varieties, according to a recent bulletin of the agricultural department. During the years from 1909-1913 this state produced an annual average of 1,269,000 bushels of baldwins; 954,000 Ben Davises; 1,966,000 Northern Spies; 590,000 Greenings and 549,000 Jonathans. Michigan produced 17 per cent of the Baldwins, 17.9 per cent of the Northern Spies, 8.5 per cent of the Ben Davises, 5 per cent of the Oldenburgs, 3.7 per cent of the Golden Russets, 3 per cent of the Snow apples and 3.7 per cent of the Wealthies.

The fruit growers of the Grand Traverse section of Western Michigan forming a co-operative association for the purpose of marketing their orchard products. The number of trees in this section and the quantity of fruit being harvested each years is so great that it has been found necessary to begin to look for new markets and to give more careful attention to the distribution of the products offered for sale. The fruit growers have nearly mastered the art of producing extra fine goods and are now ready to begin marketing them in a way so as to bring profit to the men who have set the trees and have waited patiently for them to come into bearing. A monster meeting was recently held in which the principal fruit growers within a radius of thirty miles took part. The bankers and business men were also on hand. The meeting was addressed by F. Kern of Bayfield, Wisconsin, who is manager of a successful fruit marketing organization, at that point. The speaker showed how easy it was to form an organization, and how easy it is to distribute profits after the association is formed and how easy it is to hold the price up to a point that will permit a profit to the producer. Immediately a committee of local fruit growers was appointed and a preliminary organization was formed. Now dozens of stock are being sold and it is hoped that before the spring work begins in the orchards the organization will be sufficiently completed so that the 1915 crop will be marketed in a way that the grower will not be the competitor of his neighbor.

The Charlevoix members of the Loyal Order of Moose had a competitive rabbit hunt last Friday, in which the membership population was reduced by 109 head. On Monday night the members and their families had a game supper, in which there were 140 participants. Both events were greatly enjoyed.

A big apple is not desirable for table purposes as only one and then a person wishes such a quantity at one time as is represented by the large apples that are now common in the Western Michigan territory. However, the growers will settle this propism as they have many former ones.

The person who will tell the little children that there is no Santa Claus is an immoralist—is a great a destroyer of happiness as he who teaches the doctrine of a personal devil. There is a Santa Claus, little cost, take it from us. We will meet any man in the back alley who says there is no Santa Claus. We know there is because we have seen him.

During his address before the State Y. M. C. A. Boy's Conference Wm. Jennings Bryan took some time to consider the power of the liquor traffic in America and asked the conference to co-operate with him in securing 50,000 young men of Michigan to sign the temperance pledge with him. This week boys all over the state are canvassing their fellows for signatures to the pledge which Mr. Bryan has already signed and forwarded to the State Y. M. C. A. officials. When the forms have all been returned to the state office they will be bound and presented to Mr. Bryan.

The apple growers of Western Michigan are face to face with a new problem. It is that of keeping their apples from getting too big. It has been supposed for years that the larger the apple the better, but with the Western Michigan fertile soil, with the wonderful climate and the growing which the fruit trees are now getting, they are producing apples that are too large for dessert purposes, and the fruit growers are facing the task of finding a way of limiting the size of the apples or else of introducing varieties which grow apples of the right size. They dislike the thought of having to set new orchards and wait until the same come into bearing. They are thinking about grafting a portion of their trees to varieties that are considered dismissed on the commercial markets.

The information comes that Capt. Ave Smith was recently married to Miss Elsa Green, at Chicago. Both the contracting parties have many friends in Charlevoix who will figuratively slip on old shoe in the direction of Chicago. The SENTINEL extends congratulations.

The Majestic Theatre has booked the motion pictures of "The Spoilers," Rex Beach's great Alaskan gold field story, for January 1st. As the author was born within bounce miles of Charlevoix, the film should attract a good crowd on that date. William Farnum and Kathlyn Williams are the stellar attractions of the production.

Mrs. M. Lamphear, who was recently appointed matron of the Y. M. C. A. building at Flint, assumed her duties there Tuesday morning of this week. The work is permanent, so that she will be raised from the office of the ice cream factory next summer. Her son Charlie goes to Flint for the winter, but will return here in time to begin operations in the new factory on Clinton street in the spring.

The next issue of the SENTINEL will set much of its local readers until Christmas Day, after the stockings are emptied and the Christmas bells summon us to the sanctuary. Therefore the SENTINEL today greets its friends for the forty-fifth time on the happiest day of the year. What sort of a world would it be without Christmas? On all Christian lands it stands for "peace on earth good will to men," yet the greater part of the Christian world are at each other's throats. Let us hope that it is but the crawl that shall give birth to that peace and concord which is the true spirit of Christianity. But that Christmas in Charlevoix shall be a joyous one for old and young is the earnest wish of the SENTINEL. A Merry Christmas to all.

TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

The G. R. & I. Railroad company is planning to extend a line of their road through this section says the Benton Lake Torch, in such a way that it will pass directly through Eastport.

It is thought that the proposed line will run from Rapid City westward and continue along the Bay shore to Charlevoix.

Communications have been made with some of the Eastport residents as to the attitude of that village toward the project.

Nothing very definite can be obtained concerning the plans, and as there has been rumors off and on for years concerning a railroad through Eastport, some are inclined to doubt the authenticity of the reports. But it seems very likely that the plans will be carried out this time, as the G. R. & I. has long wanted a line in Charlevoix' and their actions seem to indicate business.

PERE MARQUETTE HONORABLE MENTION

RAILROAD BREAKS ALL RECORDS

The Five Months' Period Under the Receivership Shows the Best Gross Traffic

In the five months of the new fiscal year of the Pere Marquette railroad the company has done the best gross business for a like period since the line was organized

The road is being operated under the direction of Federal Judge Arthur J. Tuttle and the receivers, Dudley E. Waters and Paul King.

Geo. C. Conn, freight traffic manager says shippers have been contributing greatly to the rehabilitation of the road through their response to appeals for shipments.

"We have 1,900 miles of road in Michigan, and furnish the greatest distributing territory and transportation facility in the state," says Mr. Conn. "Of the 5,464,526 people in the lower peninsula, the Pere Marquette serves directly forty-five counties with 1,894,491, or about 35 per cent.

The road has begun a campaign to capture more of the eastern and southern traffic. To this end a table has been prepared showing with what lines the Pere Marquette makes connections. This table is being sent to shippers throughout the state.

In October the road showed a gain of $230,000 over the same period last year. This is due principally to a decrease of $217,000 in operating expense.

S. S. S.

Another crisis has developed in the Shiffree Shipmasters' Society that taxes the patience of the Founder.

Last spring, when navigation opened and the shippers fitted out it was found by a careful audit of the books that the society was in debt $8.42 for rent and incidentals—the latter item being peerless tobacco from Myers. Capt. Wilbur insisted that the Society should at least pay for fuel and light used at the meetings. The society adjourned without liquidating those claims, although Capt. Pete Campbell was more than the amount in arrears for dues.

At the recent meeting, Capt. Billy Finnegan in the chair, the secretary, Capt. Geo. Weaver, was instructed to notify Capt. Pete that his dues must be paid before the next regular meeting, on pain of suspension. When the above resolutions were presented Capt. Jim Sanford protested against being compelled to help liquidate obligations that were incurred before he became a member, and the chair sided with Capt. Jim.

This precipitated a hot discussion that, for a time threatened to end up in a serious row, until the founder interposed by agreeing to stand for last year's indebtedness in the interest of peace and concord.

Then some member started another row by moving that inasmuch as Capt. Geo. Weaver had gone into politics he should be relieved from membership in the society. Upon proof being shown that Capt. George yet retained his financial interest in a steamboat, and is a partner in steamboat property with two leading members, the motion was withdrawn. It is understood that Capt. Billy Finnegan being the only democrat in the Society inspired the protesting member to make the motion.

There are several other matters of vital importance that are threatening discordant results at the next meeting, but the founder is endeavoring to prevent any further dissention.

ARBUTUS STRANDED

The Booth gasoline fishing cruiser Arbutus lies on the reef at Antrim in danger of being a total wreck.

The Arbutus is not a fishing craft. The Booth Co. use her in the business of cruising about the fishing grounds where the regular traffic boats do not touch. One of these points is "Antrim City," three miles south of Norwood.

The Arbutus went there Saturday in charge of Capt. Amos Webster. About the time of her arrival the wheel slipped off the shaft, and the boat was at the mercy of a good chunk of a sea. Before an anchor could be sent overboard she drifted to the reef.

The crew of two men succeeded in reaching shore, and a telephone, and a tug was sent to the rescue of the boat. But a high sea prevented a successful effort for her release.

As this paper goes to press the Arbutus lies easily on her bilge, and efforts are being made for her rescue. It will be remembered that the Arbutus was stranded near North Point the fall of 1911, but released without damage. It is thought that with quiet weather she will be equally lucky.

Get a bottle of Sloan's Liniment for 25 cents at any druggist and have it in the house—against Colds, Sore and Stiff Joints Lumbago, Sciatica and like ailments. Yours money back if not satisfied, but it does give almost instant relief. Buy a bottle to-day.

Lighthouse Tenders Sumac and Hyacinth in List of Life Savers

Many tales of heroism on the great lakes are related in the report of the commissioner of lighthouses just made public. In no less than a dozen cases life and property were saved through the heroism of employes of the service, in every instance the vessels and men of the service took great risks in the assistance they rendered.

The roll of honor of the eleventh and twelfth districts, which include all the Michigan stations, contains the names of which Charles H. Hubbard is master, Harry W. Maynard, first officer, and George E. Brown, second officer, performed valued service in going to the aid of the dredge Marion and the tug Erie. In a terrific storm the dredge sank and the officers and crew of the tender rescued them. Later they towed the waterlogged dredge and tug into port. The tender Hyacinth, of which John K. Owen is master, went to the aid of the steamer Cepheus which had gone ashore. The steamer was pulled into deep water.

CHILD BURNED TO DEATH

A most distressing accident occurred on South South State street last Thursday in which the seven months old child of Mr. and Mrs. O'Rourke lost its life.

The mother had gone half a block to a neighbor's house to use the telephone, leaving the infant child in a high chair, with another child three years of age to watch it.

When the mother returned the house was full of smoke and the baby's clothes were in a blaze. The fire was extinguished and Dr. Wilkinson called, who found the child's back from its waist to its neck burned to a crisp. Everything possible was done to save the child but it died the following day.

How the accident happened is a mystery. It is needless to say that the parents are well nigh distracted.

CIRCUIT COURT

Judge Mayne is still grinding out the December calendar as we go to press. As stated last week, several of the cases will be settled out of court.

In the case of Morton Freeman vs E. J. & S. R. R. Co., the judge took the case from the jury and ordered a verdict of no cause of action.

Burt Turner vs Cobb & Mitchell, jury returned a verdict of no cause of action. The people vs Walter Zalinski, verdict of guilty of manslaughter.

J. M. Eaton vs F. H. Rundell, judgment of $200 for plaintiff.

Court will continue through the remainder of the week.

POSTMASTERS GET IT IN THE NECK

The administration in its efforts to economize and help out the "war tax," have dropped the salaries of postmasters.

Charlevoix is cut from $2,200 to $2,000 and Boyne City from $2,200 to $2,000.

Petoskey News: News reached Petoskey today of the death, on Tuesday, of Joseph Lewis, in Phoenix, Ariz. Mr. Lewis was widely known as "The Blind Broom Maker of Northern Michigan," and for forty years he had traveled over this section selling his hand-made brooms. For many years he resided in Hayes township, Charlevoix county, and about five years ago moved to Petoskey, locating on this street, near the paper mill. About five weeks ago Mr. and Mrs. Lewis went to Phoenix to visit a sister and while there Mr. Lewis suffered a stroke of paralysis which resulted in his death. The body was interred in Phoenix. He is survived by his wife and several children.

YET AT THE FOOT OF THE RAINBOW

In another column we print an extract from the Central Lake Torch relating the purposes of the G. R. & I., R. R. Co. building a branch from somewhere to Charlevoix. From whence comes the information which the Torch gives us?

The railroad history of Charlevoix reads like a romance. If all the railroad projects that we have named of during the past twenty-five years could have materialized, Charlevoix would now be the railroad center of Northern Michigan.

Do you remember the "Detroit Charlevoix & Escanaba R. R." and Tom Rock; a chapter in the romance that was written more than twenty years ago? About six miles of the road was actually graded from Charlevoix north, when the bubble burst. The capital stock of this project was all wind, but old some good in stirring up the old "West Michigan" into action, as that corporation (now the P. M.) bought the franchise and the grade, resulting in the rail road now operated which we enjoy.

Then Uncle David Ward built the "Detroit and Charlevoix," from Frederick to East Jordan, and Uncle David built the writer of this article that the name and style of the road involved his ultimate purpose to extend the road to Charlevoix, a distance of about thirteen miles. Uncle David died, and the road was sold to the Michigan Central.

Then began negotiations between the Charlevoix Board of Commerce and the M. C. officials, resulting in a meeting of representatives of the two interests at Petoskey from which our committee came home very much incouraged. Let's see! How long ago was that? About ten years. When we awoke from that happy dream we waked on roses and basked in the sunlight.

Then it was given out that the G. R. & I. actually had a survey party out looking up a line from Walloon Lake to Charlevoix via Bay Shore. It looked reasonable as a transport proposition that would grow upon what it fed upon in infancy. That was another railroad bluff to scare off the M. C. people, and back into its hole crawled Charlevoix.

And then came two electric shore road propositions, divided by an interval of five years. Traverse City had the matter so well in hand that a company was actually organized and eastern capitalists attracted to the enterprise. This, in its turn, became an empty fiasco. The second scheme brought a smooth talking promoter to Charlevoix with a "sure thing." This road was to be built from Traverse City to Cheboygan. The promoter had offices at each end of the line. This went to smash when the promoter was arrested for jumping a Cheboygan board bill, and losing his office outfits on an attachment for debt. The promoter disappeared and with him the "Traverse City and Cheboygan Lake Shore Electric R. R."

Now they claim there is another "hen on." Of course everybody here hopes good will come of it; but looking back at the past it is pretty hard to stimulate much interest.

Show us!

NOTICE TO THE TAXPAYERS OF THE

WHISPERING THROUGH the AIR of the ENEMY

THE war correspondents of 1898 left a coherent chronicle of the heroes of Santiago who climbed on the embankments in front of the fighting men and wigwagged signals to the foes on the other side of the stream.

Wigwag went the flags by day; spelling out orders and information, and wigwag went the lanterns by night spelling out more information and orders. In fact wigwagging was about the only method of communication with the friends on the other side of the enemy.

Homing pigeons have been used from time immemorial, and they also were used at Santiago.

Today a different condition exists. As the Germans were sweeping down on Paris the operator in Eiffel tower whispered through the very air the German war news, intended to convey information to St. Petersburg or Petrograd.

The swish of the wireless was unstoppable. The Spaniards shot down the American signal men on the embankments in front of Santiago, but the rifle bullets from the Germans could not interfere with the wireless message as it went on its way.

One of the most wonderful developments of the wireless telegraphy came at the opening of the European war when it became possible to talk all the way from Berlin to Long Island. Germany talked across the British fleet to her own ships sailing the Atlantic and warned them of the sudden rupture.

The only way to stop the wireless was to destroy the operator and he was thousands of miles away. In our last war wires were stretched all over the fields and in the fighting line. Telegraphers carried word from colonel to general where there had not been time to string the wires.

In this war wires, too, have been stretched on the fields, planes have carried word messages, dispatches have galloped back and forth, but in addition to all these methods of signaling the fighters all depended more on the invention of Marconi, the great wireless telegraph.

The wireless telegraph has proved its value right on the field of battle. The man in the front trench, or the officer miles from the headquarters, could place himself in instant communication with his chief. The wireless telegraph made it possible for a German soldier fighting his way through Belgium to talk to a German soldier defending Alsace. It made it possible for a soldier at Brussels to shout news of victory back to Berlin without an instant's delay.

It made it possible for the French and British to keep in communication with each other and map out a new line of defense when the Germans were hurling their mighty hosts against them.

Marconi had already made himself famous before the war broke out. His invention was one of the greatest boons to humanity because it could save ships ship in time of sea horror. It brought rescue to the distressed and crippled shipping. Proud an instrument of humanity and peace it spread to an instrument of war and terror.

Like the pigeon or dove, the personification of peace it became an instrument of war.

Perhaps next to the wireless stations, the most efficient messengers of war are the homing pigeons. These birds, the wisest of their kind, are employed to great advantage in English, French, German, Austrian, Italian, Russian and Japanese armies. Military authorities hold there is no better means for small detachments to communicate with their headquarters nor could they want better.

On the fields of Europe the flights of the birds are in most instances so short that they do not have to stop for a rest, the prevention of the messages from falling into the hands of the enemy. A pigeon in its flight is so high it is almost invisible to the naked eye, thus it necessitates the use of high power guns to bring it to the ground. And any man who ever makes such a shot can sell out a cinch.

"The king of England and the emperor of Germany, as well as other rulers of European nations, have their own lofts and pigeons, and it is said they enjoy their birds in races with birds belonging to their subjects. The emperor of Germany has this royal sport.

A bird equipped for flying with a message is encased in a bottleblue tube, the shape of its body.

A spy puts his message in his pocket, proceeds on his mission, quickly writes his discoveries on small bits of paper and places them in a tube. Then, in the lofts at Durban and Pietermaritzburg and in view of the great service which they performed it is of more than passing notice. The dumb messengers were used in the signal service of this country during the war with Spain. In the Powell army are more than three hundred thousand trained pigeons and more than six hundred thousand in the postal service, which can be utilized in time of war. Germany has more than two hundred and fifty thousand well trained birds at her command, and Russia has its pigeon posts that can be utilized by the government.

During the Russo-Japanese war an automatic camera was fastened about the breast of a pigeon and accurately timed to make photographs in the air.

When a homer is released, it rises rapidly into the air, flying in large circles, apparently getting its bearings. After rising several hundred feet it will circle to a point directly above the place whence it was released, then dart in a straight line toward its home, bearing the important documents to its government. A pigeon cannot be trained to fly to any point, but it can be trained to be taken hundreds of miles from its home, released on battlefields and return to its original home in a few hours.

The homing instinct is so strong that the bird will be guided by the magnetic current of the earth, which will weigh the mere fraction of an ounce.

Recently there appeared an account of the capture of a German spy. He was riding on a train in Belgium. The spy noticed that he was under surveillance and hurriedly tossed a small package he had in his possession and released his winged messenger from the window of the train. The spy was caught, but the message could not be stopped.

Those messengers of war sometimes are called carrier pigeons. They are not. Carrier pigeons take from the loft that which belongs to them to turn to their coin. Carrier pigeons are only for the purpose of display at pet stock shows.

Many nations have established pigeon posts, where birds are trained to fly from one city to another or from one town to another. They are much faster than train or steamboats and a message is much safer in their care. They are numbered today as one of the most deadly messengers of war.

The first news of the siege of Ladysmith, during the Boer war, was carried by homing pigeons. The pigeons used at Ladysmith were taken from the lofts of Durban.

When a bird is released, it rises rapidly into the air, flying in large circles, apparently getting its bearings. After rising several hundred feet it will circle to a point directly above the place whence it was released, then dart in a straight line toward its home, bearing the important documents to its government. A pigeon cannot be trained to fly to any point, but it can be taken hundreds of miles from its home, released on battlefields and return to its original home in a few hours.

The pigeons were almost displaced by the invention of wireless telegraphy, but a little carefully wireless system would prove too bulky and could never be taken. A spy can release a pigeon from the place of the enemy when he could not dare to try wireless, as the flight of the birds. The messengers are truly birds of war, not peace.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Two lives on this earth we live,
And—weigh the various qualities of them.
Decline how most are fugitive
The fitful jills at best of now and then.
Wind wavered, corpse lights, dangling over bog
The more we feel the high, stern, flagrant beauty
Of plain devotedness to duty,
Steadfast and still, not led with more or less
But firdhear emptiest recompense
For life's unpalatable expense
In work done serenely and unwasted by days

CAKES FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Sponge cakes are especially good for small people. Heat four eggs until light, add a cupful of granulated sugar and a cupful of powdered sugar after lifting together two cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and beat until light and full of bubbles. Into thereupon stirs of a cupful of boiling water put a teaspoonful of flavoring and stir into the cake mixture. Bake in gem pans. Ice or not, as desired.

Raisin Cakes.—While nuts are not good for very little people, raisins which have been seeded and chopped are excellent. Cream half a cupful of shortening, add a cupful of sugar, add a half cupful rich milk or thin cream. Dissolve half a teaspoonful of soda in a little hot water, or use two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and sift it with the flour. Beat one egg and add enough flour to roll after adding a cupful of chopped raisins.

Butterscups—Cream together half a cupful of butter and half a cupful of powdered sugar; add two eggs beaten, separating the yolks and whites; sift two teaspoonfuls of baking powder in two cupfuls of flour, mix well; add half a teaspoonful salt and vanilla and lemon extract. Roll out thin as possible and cut with a star or any fancy cocky cutter; sprinkle with caraway seed, sugar plums, pressing them into the dough.

Brownies.—Sift together two cupfuls of flour, a half teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a teaspoonful of cinnamon. Cream together a cupful of shortening with a cupful of granulated sugar and stir into the dry ingredients. Beat two eggs well and add to the resultant, add two cupfuls of raisin cake, a cupful of seeded raisins and a half cupful of well-washed currants. Mix well, then drop by teaspoonfuls on a greased baking dish.

These are good little cakes if covered with boiled frosting and chopped raisins and browned in the oven. Marshmallows placed on round thin crackers and baked in the oven until they puff and are brown are another favorite cake with the little people.

CAKE FILLINGS.

There is no manner in which variety may be given the ordinary cake like a new filling or a strange or unusual combination. The following may be tried out with good results:

Add a cupful of grated pineapple with sugar added to a whipped cream or thick jelly. Spread on the egg is a most dainty filling for any kind of cake and adds a delightful flavor.

Coconut Cream Filling—Scald a half cupful of milk in a double boiler, add two eggs beaten lightly, first adding a little of the milk to the eggs. Add a half cupful of sugar and a pinch of salt, cook until thick, then set aside to cool. Whip a half cupful of heavy cream, add it with two-thirds of a cupful of coconut. When the filling is cool it will stiff blended, then spread on cake.

Prune Almond Filling—Boil together a cupful of sugar and a half cupful of water, without stirring, until the syrup over a well beaten white of an egg, beating all the while the syrup is added. When beginning to stiffen add a half cupful of prunes which have been softened and cut in bits, and a third of a cupful of blanched and shredded almonds. Spread on the cake and spread on the cake.

Fig Filling.—Grind a pound of figs and two tablespoonfuls of sugar and a cupful of water, until smooth, then add the juice of one lemon, season well and when cold spread on layer of cake.

Maple Cream Filling—Cook together a cupful of maple sugar, half a cupful of milk and a tablespoonful of butter together for eight minutes or when it makes a soft ball in cold water. Take from the heat and stir until smooth, but put on the cake before it hardens set. Should it become too hard add a few drops of milk or hold the saucepan over hot water for a few minutes. This makes a nice frosting as well as a good filling.

One cupful of sour cream, a cupful of sugar cooked until thick and a cupful of hickory nut meats added, makes a most delicious cake filling.

SERVING PORK.

For those who have good digestions and are engaged in an active life, pork is a good, nourishing food, and is especially good for the cold winter months.

As pork is a heat producer it should be served with the muscle-building foods, such as beans peas and squash, cabbage and spinach. When serving pork chops have mashed potatoes, fried apples and squash.

Apple sauce with roast pork, bomony and pumpkin pie.

A very attractive roast may be prepared like a crown roast of lamb. Fill the center with small onions and roast, basting until done.

Spiced Ham.—In a porcelain-lined kettle put a bag of spices, cinnamon, mace, cloves—a half teaspoonful of each. Into the kettle put a quart of cider and place a well-cleaned ham which has been soaked overnight. Cook six or eight hours. Cool before taking it out of the cider. Remember the acid of cider will act on any metal like tin and it should never be put into a tin dish.

Baked Ham, German Style.—Soak a ham over night in cold water. In the morning remove the skin. Mix a tablespoonful of powdered sage, a teaspoonful of cloves, a half teaspoonful of cinnamon, and a few dashes of pepper. Rub this into the meat, then sprinkle with chopped onion. Make a paste of flour and water and spread it over the ham. Bake four hours, basting occasionally. Remove the paste before serving.

Ham With Tomato Sauce.—Slice a half can of tomato through a sieve. Put two tablespoonfuls of butter with the tomato into a saucepan. Add a quarter of a cupful of stock or milk and a teaspoonful of onion juice. Season with salt and pepper. Brown the ham on both sides and pour the sauce over it.

MORE GERMAN GOOD THINGS.

The Germans are famous for their soups of various kinds and one of the charms of Germans the soup garnishes.

Egg Crumbs—Sift a cupful of flour, with salt and pepper. Beat an egg enough to blend the yolk and white, then add two tablespoonfuls of water and sift with the flour. Turn on to a floured board and knead thoroughly; roll out as much dry flour as possible, so that a very stiff dough is formed. Let this stand for half an hour, then scrape off the dough and let the crumbs dry, after forming them out on the board. Add two tablespoonfuls of these egg crumbs to be cooked in the soup. The remainder of the crumbs, after drying, may be put into a jar and kept for future use. They will keep for months.

Potato Dumplings.—Grate four cold boiled potatoes and add to them one cupful of stale bread crumbs, soaked in a little milk, half teaspoonful of onion; add two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of flour and salt and pepper. Form into balls and steam or boil 20 minutes. Serve with melted butter and parsley. With two cupfuls of bread crumbs fried in butter.

German Potato Salad.—Boil four large potatoes in their jackets. Peel and slice very thin; add one small onion chopped very fine. Cut three slices of lemon into dice and fry with brown pork bits not fat over the potato and onion, season well with salt and pepper. Heat four tablespoonfuls of vinegar to the boiling point and pour over the potato. Mix well and allow the salad to cool before serving.

Stuffed Onions.—Parboil six evenscored onions. Remove the centers and drain as much as possible of the moisture with a teaspoon. Chop the centers, mix with bread crumbs, sage and a little onion, season well. Fill the skins with this mixture, put a piece of butter on top of each. Bake in a dish, standing with stock or water and water. Allow 45 minutes for baking.

SPECIAL TO WOMEN

The most economical, cleanse and germicidal of all antiseptics is

Paxtine

A soluble Antiseptic Powder to be dissolved in a vessel of water. It is a medicinal antiseptic for douches in treating catarrh, inflammation or ulceration of nose, throat, and that caused by feminine ills it has no equal. For ten years the Lydia E. CHAPTER XXIX—Continued.

"Flotz did not move from his corner. "Ah!" it was almost a sob. "They're all for you against everybody, against me. It was always so. Everybody was for you. You had everything. It came easy to you. It came hard to me, so hard I could never do anything or get anything. I—"

"You, you, Flotz, I know. But we're going to change that now. Come along—the rain's stopped and I must hurry."

"I've got back to her, I suppose?" Flotz sneered.

"I must get back to her. Come on."

"I don't think I—" Flotz's words came between gasps. Something seemed to be choking him. In a minute, I must get—some things."

Mark looked quickly back over his shoulder—caught by an odd change in the plaintive voice. Dusk was gathering rapidly, deepening the shadows in the shed, and he could barely see the figure crouching about in his corner. There was a pause—Flotz's speech seemed to have been successful—then a metallic click. Mark whirled sharply on him.

"What—!"

"Stay!" Flotz whispered. From his corner, a point of flame leaped out toward Mark, another—another—until six shots had rung out. At the last Mark's head dropped forward, his body swayed slowly and fell in a crumpled heap on the floor of the shed.

When he awoke he was being dragged by his wounded shoulder in such fashion that his head scraped along the floor. He did not—cared not much, merely that his pain had increased a hundred fold. He tried to cry out, but could only lie limp and silent. Presently he felt a hand pushing over his face and a voice that seemed very far away muttering fretfully.

"I wonder if he's going to—aim, telling. It would be like you to shame. I didn't mean to shoot them. I didn't want you to die until you know the suffs were—I'm sorry I shot them—they looked at me as if way, I had to."

Mark heard the words mechanically, pattering on. The voice muttered on—interrupted sentences came to him.

"Is he—is he—what I thought—I'd better go now, while I can—. You stand—I never drove a horse—. Twice, coming here, I felt. I thought I was—I'd better go—I'll go—I don't know why. I'd like to tell you about Kasia's doctor. I saw them and he said he followed—. I wish—I wouldn't believe it of her, would you? It seems—it's—it was your fault. You ran away from her—. It would be easy to drive off the road and kill the dark. . . I'm tired, and I trouble. Guess you make it worse. . . I keep wondering why they'll do to me. . . When the mile-post comes in the coming back to you, I guess you'll stay. . . Maybe I'd better stay just now—you're so lucky at stays—.

Mark felt the hand again, now at his throat, pressing hard. He tried to protest. That is quite superfluous. Has the pressure—was he in fact, he. When blackness was closing in on him once more, the grip relaxed.

But he did not quite lose consciousness this time. He heard the other move about, still muttering, then pass out. The sound of wheels and the horse's tramping through the tall weeds died away in the distance.

At first Mark lay inert. A mortal weakness held him. He could realize only the pain. He wanted nothing but to lie prone and motionless. . . A distracting thought began to tug at his brain. He ought not to be there. There was a thing he must do, some—he could not. What—what it?

"Kasia!" The name gave him a thrilling—and the memory flooded back. Not cleared his mind a little.

And the mills! The mills! Kasia and the mills! The two thoughts were inextricably linked.

With a rush came realization of his plight. Flotz, the puny whimpering madman who had crept behind him and fired six shots and was on his way to blow up the mills. Flotz must be forestalled. With an effort he forced his arms upon and drew himself into the first gridiron—stopped. He rested his head on his hands. He groaned.

"I can't do it! He groans!"

"But the mills—and Kasia!

"I've got to do it. I must stop him. I must get to—."

Then began a fight to sit up, to stand, to beat off the terrible hands trying to drag him back into the bottomless. How long the struggle lasted, he had gone in progress, he did not know; but when it was over he was leaning weakly against the door jamb. His brain was reeling, his breathed painfully, but by forcing himself desperately into the cause, recovered in the struggle to stand, he managed to hold what he had won.

His brain cleared again, a little steadiness came to the trembling limbs. Summoning all his will, he passed with uncertain staggering steps out of the shed. A cold damp wind breathed refreshingly upon him. He gripped his cane more tightly and started slowly down the weedy road. He reached the foot of the hill and sank down in a little rain pool, rested painfully and laved his hot face a few minutes, then staggered to his feet and lurched on until weakness overcame him once more and he fell.

More than an hour later he was still breathing about the road. Kasia and the mills! They were in danger, they were being taken from him; he must save them.

So he beat his way slowly along moonlit stretches of rough road, impelled by a dumb, desperate—from instinct found a path, until at last, rounding a curve, he saw the furnace looming large before him.

As hours passed and Mark did not return, in a sense of an approaching crisis, of a danger, came to Kasia. The day had dried away, full darkness had the train she was to have taken with Flotz rolled to a stop at the station and not again, and still he had not returned. The sense grew heavier, passive waiting unbearable. To escape her foreboding she went out into the village and visited about in the hope of finding some one who could tell her. There was a thing to do, some—she could not. What—what it?

"Kasia!" The name gave him a thrilling—and the memory flooded back. Not cleared his mind a little.

And the mills! The mills! Kasia and the mills! The two thoughts were inextricably linked.

With a rush came realization of his plight. Flotz, the puny whimpering madman who had crept behind him and fired six shots and was on his way to blow up the mills. Flotz must be forestalled. With an effort he forced his arms upon and drew himself into the first gridiron—stopped. He rested his head on his hands. He groaned.

"I can't do it! He groans!"

"But the mills—and Kasia!

"I've got to do it. I must stop him. I must get to—."

Then began a fight to sit up, to stand, to beat off the terrible hands trying to drag him back into the bottomless. How long the struggle lasted, he had gone in progress, he did not know; but when it was over he leaning against the door jamb.

"No, I don't understand. That's the trouble. I'm like to help him, to give him what he needs. But I don't know how. There's nothin' I can give him."

He turned his face away from him, looking up at the furnace, big and menacing, outlined against the sky. There was silence among the mills. Then the old village hollo then came faint vague sounds of life—a distant tinkle of laughter, a crying child, a neighing horse. From the new town beyond the mills came no sound but a single violin song, a wild sory chant that had been brought from another land. The song was finished. Kasia and Simon stirred, as though they had been waiting for us close to bring their strange encounter to an end.

"What's that?"

Both startled. From somewhere near them had come a sudden muffled cackle of mirthless uncanny laughter.

"Sounds a lf it come from the furnace. There hadn't oughter be anybody round here. But I guess it's just still night and echoing like that."

The voice so he spoke they saw the figure of a man crawling from behind the furnace. He scrambled to the feet and began to run, with an awkward hobbling gait, up the tracks toward the bridge. The moonlight fell full on his face.

"Flotz!"

As the cry, in a voice he knew, reached him, the man stopped suddenly, stared wildly about and saw the two figures advancing on him. He raised his hands in a frantic gesture.

"Kasia! Go back—go back!"

She did not heed his warning. "Flotz! What are you doing?"

"Go back!" he screamed. "You'll be killed. I'm dynamite."

Instantly the others guessed what impelled. Kasia heard a low moan beside her, saw Simon run, as fast as his age-stiffened limbs allowed, toward the furnace, as if he thought to avert the threatened destruction.

"Flotz, you—stopped," she cried. "Come back!"

If the old man heard, he did not obey. She fled after him, in instinctive purpose to drag him back out of danger.

They reached Flotz, passed him. He seemed bewilder, plaintiff uncertainty of the direction to take in the hope of finding some place of hiding. He quickly left the ram-paved streets and rows of pretty little cottages. Many of the cottages were dark and unfamiliar as yet, but she knew them as they would be when they were the homes of a happy folk who lived without dread of the mills, with kindness in their hearts one for another.

She left the cluster of homes behind and retraced her steps over the street that led past the mills to the bridge, started to cross. But at the entrance she stopped. Everywhere it was the same, a rendezvous of him. After all, they had gone under him Kasia, still breathing. It was not until daybreak that they came to Simon.

Kasia was carried to the village and laid in Doctor Hodges' own house. All through one night and in the morning until the great surgeon from the city came, he fought off death. Then the surgeon took up the fight with a knowledge and skill the old doctor did not possess. For two days they did not sleep but watched and battled.

In the adjoining room a man, himself the object of the doctor's care, passed through his Gethsemane. The dead, his own pain and weakness, all else was forgotten in his agony for the one who, it seemed, could not live. Something he would rise from the couch where they had laid him and come to the door and plead with the watchers there until the sight of the still, bandaged form became more than he could bear. Then he would let them lead him back to his couch. He lay moved constantly, in what words he did not know. Their burden was the cry of self-reproach.

"Let this cup pass from me."

So the miracle was made perfect.

Toward the last of that watch his weakness began to overcome him. The doctors supposed he slept, and said: "It is best." He did not sleep. He had lost sense of his surroundings but his brain was alive. He was fighting, struggling supremely, to hold her back from the precipice over which she was slowly falling. Once she seemed to be slipping from his clasp. He heard her piteous cry to him.

He rose with a start and tottered into her room.

"I called me," he whispered.

Hodges thought it was delirium and would have led him back to his couch. But Mark resisted.

"I tell you, she called me. I must see her."

"Let him," said the surgeon. "Probably his last chance."

Hodges released him and Mark went over to her. He dropped to his knees by the bedside and kissed, very gently, the arm outlined under the sheet.

"Kasia," he whispered. "My wife, my love, don't leave me! Can't you hear, dear?—the miracle has come!"

He thought that she sighed, as does a tired child when it sinks to sleep, and a that a little smile touched the pale lips.

The others did not see, but then they had not heard her call.

CHAPTER XXX.

The Ultimate Purpose.

It was an Indian summer day, when the town passed to smile gently, now over his shoulder at the earth he was leaving to winter's cold mercy, and a warm wind blew softly. Toward noon Kasia, leaning on the doctor and his buxom wife, was helped to the front porch, where the Mathe was waiting with stabbing mid shawls. In a big rocking chair the convalescent was made comfortable, with cushions for head and feet and the shawls tucked carefully around her.

"You're sure you're warm enough?" queried Mrs. Hodges, with needless solicitude.

"Quite sure. You all spoil me with kindness."

Mrs. Hodges gave a last pat to the cushion behind Kasia's head. "You take a deal of spoiling, I think, dearie."

Kasia sighed. "I'll hate to leave you." Tears, for some reason, were troublesomely ready that morning.

"Tsim," drawled the doctor, "you're thinking of leaving us!"

"I must—soon." But under the doctor's twinkling gaze a pitiful flush sprang into view—perhaps to keep the tears back.

"Too much color," chuckled the doctor. "Let me feel your pulse."

The crimson deepened and as instantly vanished.

"I'm a cake in the oven," Mrs. Hodges suddenly remembered. "Doctor, I'll need you."

"Need me?" The doctor started. "Am I a—"

"At once, Doctor," came a stern command from the hall.

"Eh? Oh—!" A light broke in upon him and he chuckled again. "Coming, my dear, coming."

The Mathe, too, would have left her, but Kasia stayed her. "Don't go," she said in the Mathe's tongue.

The old woman halted, irresolute. "He, your lover, will be coming soon." Timidly she laid a thin knotted hand upon the shawl protruding from her.

Kasia ignored that. "You will hate to leave this place, won't you?"

The Mathe nodded. "There is peace here. Even the old smile and make sorts, and they grow old easily, as a child grows into youth. And my floor is clean, my furniture shine, and hobbling gait, up the tracks toward the bridge. The moonlight fell full on his face.

"Flotz!"

As the cry, in a voice he knew, reached him, the man stopped suddenly, stared wildly about and saw the two figures advancing on him. He raised his hands in a frantic gesture.

"Let this cup pass from me."

So the miracle was made perfect.

Toward the last of that watch his weakness began to overcome him. The doctors supposed he slept, and said: "It is best." He did not sleep. He had lost sense of his surroundings but his brain was alive. He was fighting, struggling supremely, to hold her back from the precipice over which she was slowly falling. Once she seemed to be slipping from his clasp. He heard her piteous cry to him.

He rose with a start and tottered into her room.

"I called me," he whispered.

Hodges thought it was delirium and would have led him back to his couch. But Mark resisted.

"I tell you, she called me. I must see her."

"Let him," said the surgeon. "Probably his last chance."

Hodges released him and Mark went over to her. He dropped to his knees by the bedside and kissed, very gently, the arm outlined under the sheet.

"Kasia," he whispered. "My wife, my love, don't leave me! Can't you hear, dear?—the miracle has come!"

He thought that she sighed, as does a tired child when it sinks to sleep, and

NO PAUL REVERES IN WAR OF TODAY

Telephones Replace Midnight Rides With Important Orders.

BATTLES BY SEARCHLIGHTS.

Brilliant Rays Show Location of Enemy and Make Attacks More Deadly. Vivid Account of Heroic Charge by Prussian Guards Told by Wounded British Soldier.

Berlin.—The picturesque courier plays no part in the war of today. Formerly it was his duty to deliver messages and orders from one officer to another, risking the greatest risks and facing the fire of the enemy. But he has been replaced by modern appliances, and now instructions are sent from headquarters to officers in the scene of battle by telephone. Just as the scouts of the old days have been replaced by the airplanes, so the dispatch bearers have been replaced by the 42 centimeter siege guns instead of the field artillery, the telephone replaces the midnight rider with important orders.

Instead of the midnight ride of almost nightly occurrence in Flanders, according to Ernest Meydenna, the American sculptor attached to the American ambulance corps.

"Last week masses of Germans charged the British near Ypres at night," he said. "Beneath a search light they dashed through barbed wire the British emplacements, shouting with their bayonets, but the Germans never wavered and went to death heroically.

"One of the searchlights showed that the Germans were sending from Cernay over the Rugshirg into the old Alsatian town crashed through the roof of a modest dwelling on the bank of the Thur." writes a correspondent "A column of black smoke shot up through the hole and a cloud of dust and smoke poured into the street through a big hole in the front wall. The neighbors brought out a woman covered with dust sinked red by a stream that flowed from a gash in her scalp. She clutched a piece of pasteboard in one hand. While some of the rescuers washed the red stained dust from her face she watched the others lifting out her husband's lifeless body.

"If you could see what they have done to your father," she cried bitterly, gazing at the cardboard, "and what has become of your house you'd curse, too, gnum the other way."

"What she was looking at was a photograph of her two sons in the uniform of the Prussian infantry."

The following account of the rout of the Prussian guards is by Private Jackson of a Hampshire regiment:

"As soon as it was dark we heard the sound of trumpets, with a lot of shouting all along the line in front of us. We knew what this meant—the Germans had started to charge us. It was a night I shall never forget. They came shouting like mad. All we had to do was to keep up a rapid fire. They broke through our lines just below me.

"I fired about 150 rounds after I was wounded, as I could manage all right. It being my left hand, so I expect I killed or wounded a few Germans after they wounded me. When they broke through in the could see it was the Kaiser's crack regiment of Prussian guards. Well, I pity them that night, as they must have lost very heavily.

"As soon as they broke through before me an officer gave us the order to get out of the trench and be ready to meet them with the bayonet. He told the wounded to try to get back to headquarters the best way they could.

"We lost not one reinforcements up in time to make a charge, I stood and watched them a minute as they came up to help us. They filled every inch of the road, and the rest ran back to their trenches."

To be sharp—If you haven't the courage of your own opinions you will never do stock.

Northern Michigan

Mike Zool, laborer in a sewer which is under construction at Harbor Springs was buried under eleven feet of dirt by a cave in. It was an hour before he could be gotten out and life was extinct.

Boyne Citizens: On Saturday last W. F. Tindall brought to this office an orange which would cause one to look at the calendar and wonder if they were not dreaming. He had a box of insecure red ripe strawberries, sent to advantage by a fringe of the plants on which were blossoms and sound, well developed green berries.

The Bullen apple evaporator plant at Old Mission was entirely destroyed by fire last week. The building burst into flames and nothing is known of the origin. Fifteen hundred bushels of apples were in the cellar and over a carload of the finished product ready for shipment was on hand. A new gasoline engine and equipment which had recently been installed was lost. There was no insurance. The adjoining buildings were saved by the folk of neighbors.

Acreage for the 1915 planting of sugar beet seed for the use of factories of the Michigan Sugar Company is being contracted freely, according to General Manager W. H. Wallace of the company. The announcement that the company would pay the rate to farmers of $6 a ton for beets delivered at weigh stations and pitch reel cars has not yet stimulated the making of contracts, but the field men are having no trouble securing them. The sugar beet crop in eastern Michigan has reached the stage where it is a staple proposition, and there has been in the last few years little trouble in securing all the acreage wanted. The natural supposition with the price to be paid farmers advanced to $6 a ton is that they will take advantage of the better price to be paid. Mr. Wallace says 40 more than a normal acreage will be taken and that the tonnage capacity of seed of the plants will be increased to take advantage of more beets.

Mr. and Mrs. James Williams, of Central Lake, last week celebrated their fifteen wedding anniversary on the farm which has been their home during their entire married life. When they moved to their present home, 50 years ago, the only road, leading to what is now Central Lake, was an Indian trail, and the mail was brought the 20 miles from Grand Rapids, by an Indian carrier on the back of a pony. Mr. Williams was one of the few pioneers of Michigan to realize the agricultural value of the Grand Traverse region and no one person has done more than he to develop its resources and improve the condition of its people. The Traverse Bay Telephone company and the Central Lake Canning company stand as monuments to his efforts along that line. Two sons, Mrs. W. G. Judge of Central Lake and A. M. Williams, local manager of the Michigan State Telephone company, of Petoskey, together with a host of other relatives and friends, were present at the golden wedding celebration. Both Mr. and Mrs. Williams are strong and sturdy and expect to celebrate still more anniversaries.

Local and Personal Notes

Miss Etta Correll is here spending the holidays.

Representative H. I. McMillan was in town Tuesday.

A school of instruction is booked for Jan. 29th at the Masonic Temple.

Will, there is a grain of comfort in the fact that the days are now growing longer.

Vernon Payton and wife, of Traverse City, are here with their parents for Xmas.

Millard Olney has about completed a handsome residence at the west end of Antrim street.

Lawrence Ackert, of Detroit, is here spending the holidays with his parents on Park avenue.

R. S. Shapton, who has been with friends in Canada for a month or more, returned Saturday.

Capt. Peter McCafferty and John Kelly will take the tug Major to Chicago for winter fishing.

One of the big attractions of the season is "The Spoilers," which will be shown at the Majestic Jan. 1st. Matinee at 2:30.

Arthur Bennett, of Chicago, joined his wife here last Saturday for the holidays, at the home of Mrs. Bennett's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Kelly.

A nice piece of furniture is one of the most pleasing gifts that can be bestowed. There are some charming pieces at S. M. See & Sons that are waiting for you to-day.

We desire to thank our customers for making this a very satisfactory year in the history of our business. Trusting our pleasant relations may long continue, we wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy, Prosperous New Year.—CHARLEVOIX HARDWARE CO.

The Booth boat Arbutus still lies on the reef at Antrim City. She seems to be resting easy under the partial ice of an outside reef. It is doubtful if any effort will be made this winter to release the boat. There are no indications that she has been seriously injured. Truly the Arbutus bears a charmed life.

The Albion College Combination Concert Company will give a concert in the M. E. Church Tuesday Dec. 29. Preston Reed won many friends who will be glad to hear him again. Miss Lou Syram is one of the best violinists in the United States. Prof. Hydinger is head of the Piano Department of the College and is an artist in his line. This trio is one of the best on the road. Get your tickets early. Tickets 35c.

In a reply to the Progressive Herald, in which Editor Dingly asked the ex-governor for an expression of his views on political conditions, present and future, Hon. Chase S. Osborn said, among other things: "I was splendidly pleased with Secretary Bryan's speech at Ann Arbor. In my opinion the greatest work demanded in the country today is the denaturalizating of liquor. Probably next to that in benefit would be the regulation of the profit of corporations. In these two measures inside the greatest cost of living and the most money, if only half the money expended for alcohol were saved, and avaricious men were not permitted to take more toll than reasonable business requires, down would go the cost of living amazingly, and there would be a striking betterment in living conditions that make for improvement in hygienic, physical and economical life."

Miss Audrey Correll went to Chicago to spend the holidays.

Joe Howard is spending the holidays with his parents in Cleveland.

On Friday evening Dec. 25th, occurs the annual Masonic party at the Masonic Temple.

Ira Adams and wife, of Bellaire, are spending Xmas with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Smith.

The Methodist Sunday School is sending gifts to the war suffers. This is the right spirit.

Deputy city clerk Slaght, went to Grand Rapids and Lansing to spend Christmas with friends.

W. W. Campbell, of Port Huron, arrives tonight to spend Christmas with his daughter, Mrs. Ida Sears.

R. F. Sloan, A. Buttars and Harry Nichols are in Detroit attending a meeting of the board of directors of the Rock Product Co.

J. A. Dresser, the expert accountant, of Detroit, was here Saturday arranging for the audit of the county books. He will begin the work immediately after the holidays.

The cantata of "The Lord's Anointed" presented at the M. E. Church by the Methodist choir, assisted by Mrs. S. A. Rush, last Sunday night, was enjoyed by one of the largest congregations that ever assembled in that church. The cantata is a production of rare musical merit, and was rendered excellently.

We sincerely hope there is not an unhappy soul in Charlevoix this Christmas eve. Merry Christmas joy be unrestrained. Suffering, death and sorrow prevail in the greater part of the world, but the Cross yet emblazons the sky as it did when Constantine read the shining legend—"In this sign shall we conquer."

Young man, you are just entering the province of responsible manhood. The more circumspect your daily walk and conversation the more friends you will have, and the quality of your friends will be gauged by the standard up to which you measure yourself. "Year naught but God." Be yourself and be true to yourself. Malfeasance compels all else. You approach a new year. The morning you hang up the new calendar turn your thoughts inward and see wherein you have failed while the old one was hanging on the wall; then mark every date of the new one for advancement in true manliness. The sentiment wishes you a happy New Year and many of them.

Manager O. A. Solomon, of the Michigan State Telephone company, promises better long distance service this winter than ever before. He has just finished the big annual repair job of the tree trimming, wire tightening, bracing corners, replacing bad poles and cross arms. While service may be good without going to the expense every fall, the Michigan State Telephone company takes no chances. The winter with its sleet and snow plays havoc with lines not in the best of repair and the service is of too great importance to the public to ever look any precautions. Mr. Solomon says:—"Even make more bad telephone service than any other one thing. If the wires do not clear their sweetheart, service is impossible. Being part of the Bell system, which operates all over the United States, the Michigan company must be in a position at all times to handle long haul messages. This very fact forces us to keep our lines in better shape than if we handled messages to nearby points only."

TAPS FOR VETERAN

Passing Away of Henry Burr at Age of Nearly Four Score Years—Bore Scars of Many Battles

In the death of Henry Burr, which occurred last Saturday, there goes hence another soldier of the Union army whose record, if written, would fill a volume and constitute an inspiration to patriotic valor while the republic exists. Few survivors of the great civil war has or ever had to his record participation in more battles than Mr. Burr, and that he has lived thus long bearing so many gnarlous wounds is a marvel.

Deceased was born in Plymouth, Mich., August 31st, 1837. In the first call for the three months service he enlisted, serving through that period and re-enlisting in the First Michigan Cavalry, Custer's Brigade, serving in that regiment until mustered out in 1865.

Mr. Burr participated in all the battles of the Army of the Potomac from the first battle of Bull Run to the close of the war, and bore the scars of four serious wounds. During his service with Custer he carried as a 'p' at and penetrated the Confederate lines, once as a peddler of tobacco among the southern soldiers. In the performance of his duty as a scout he had many narrow escapes.

He was a pioneer of Isabella county, and represented that district in the lower house of the legislature in the years 1887-8, and has the distinction of introducing the first local option bill ever submitted to that body. His bill passed the house and was signed by the governor, but was thrown out by the supreme court on a technicality. From Isabella county he removed to Ypsilanti where he resided for ten years and until taking up his residence here a year ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Burr had just completed a cosy bungalow home on Rose street, and would soon have settled down most happily and comfortably in their declining years. Up to Dec. 24 Mr. Burr was in the enjoyment of fairly good health, but on that date he suffered a stroke of paralysis, which affected the entire left side of his body. This developed into heart trouble. He was violently ill but 30 minutes before his death.

Mr. Burr had one trait that is truly an adornment to the character of a soldier, whether he carried the musket or wore the stars of a Major General. When the subject of his own exploits was approached he was silent. Boastfulness was repugnant to him. Only on rare occasions, perhaps in the seclusion of his home or with a small gathering of comrades, could he be induced to relate his experiences during the period that tried men's souls and made history. And to the listener the story was always stored in the treasure house of memory's choicest possessions. Heroes die but their deeds live after them, and are a precious heirloom to their descendants. Personally, deceased was a most agreeable and companionable old gentleman.

He is survived by his wife, with whom he has lived happily for fifty years lacking two months. He leaves two daughters—Mrs. A. L. Coulter, of this city and Mrs. E. E. Hepner, of Mexico, Mo., with their mother, were with him at the hour of his death.

HOUSE OF DAVID UNDER SEARCHLIGHT

Additional revelations concerning Benjamin Purnell, head of the Flying Roller colony at Benton Harbor, and his alleged immoral practices were brought out lately when Attorney H. S. Whitney, representing two sisters who are ex-members of the colony, produced affidavits signed by the sisters in which they accuse Benjamin of improper conduct.

According to Lena McFarlane, one of the sisters, Benjamin excused his actions by quoting scripture.

Augusta Holliday, the other sister, in her affidavit swears that Benjamin "would take girls out of the room with him into his private room and bring them back."

Attorney Whitney also made public an affidavit signed by Edith Clark, whose husband recently sued Benjamin for $25,000 in which she charges the Flying Rollers have a picture showing Benjamin in compromising positions. It is said the federal authorities have been hunting for this "family group."

Reports coming from Chicago say the government is going to probe the colony on the supposition that the House of David is a free love castle.

PAYTON TO BE BANQUETED

As a testimonial of sincere regard and in recognition of his long years of effective work for Charlevoix county and northern Michigan, and contemplating with regret the impending departure from Charlevoix of D. S. Payton, the committee of 23 has decided to tender Mr. Payton a banquet at some date within the next two weeks—probably during the forthcoming session of the board of supervisors. Further particulars next week.

This paper is in hearty accord with the proposition. D. S. Payton deserves well of the people of Charlevoix and Charlevoix county.

CASUAL OBSERVATIONS

The papers announced last week that a German squadron had bombarded the English coast. What on earth was the boasted British navy doing all this time? A Yankee squadron of cruisers would have scattered sauer-kraut all over the surface of the North Sea before the Germans had started in to enjoy themselves.

The Germans are loud in their expressions of sympathy for the Belgians, yet seven million Belgians are in want because of German treachery. Talk about "perfidious Albion!" Perfidy, thy name is Wilhelm. But, we forget ourself. In loyalty to the executive edict, the Sentinel is neutral.

We wish some of these dog-gone automobiles, including Pete Campbell's could be transported to the European seat of war to hustle the allies toward Berlin. Pete's car is accustomed to trouble.

And now the regulars are officially poking fun at the National Guard, asserting that it fails short of war requirements. The writer has, for four years, been, as a "tin soldier," associated with regulars more or less, and man for man, regiment for regiment, brigade for brigade, there is more of manhood Americanism in a company of National Guard than there is a regiment of regulars. Discipline is a thing for discipline or efficiency. Shermans said he could select a brigadier general from the ranks of any regiment in his volunteer army.

In the conflict now engrossing the attention and interest of the world the ability of the enlisted man to "get his man" with the rifle is the chief acquisite, and the fact suggests an observation. The Michigan National Guard, under the routine regulations, would have retired an officer a year ago, were it not for the fact that Major M. J. Phillips, of Owosso, inspector of Rifle Practice, had, by his surpassing ability and pride in the service, proven himself to be the equal of any officer of the class who ever came out of West Point. We will back Major "Mike" Phillips against the whole regular outfit. Major "Mike" will be remembered as the officer who assisted the National Guard moving pictures here last summer. The writer tested, fought, bled and nearly died with Major Mike, and knows the good soldier that he is, from his brain to the crown of his head.

And this starts us going. The writer is just about to enter the ways of military oblivion, by reason of the Osler age doctrine. "Othello's occupation's gone." His tent will hereafter be in the back yard with the kiddies. But, oh, the memories that are revived as we read what Gen. Mills says about the National Guard.

The Charlevoix soldier rode just behind his general as the splendid Michigan National Guard brigade of Lansing, passed in review, before the commander-in-chief, and he thought back fifty-three years to the time when he was a drummer boy in Col. Innes' regiment at Marshall. What a contrast. We know what those soldiers did without drill or target practice; there were no "Major Mikes" then. Probably there was not ten percent of the soldiers of Malvern Hill or Mission Ridge who ever "shot at a mark" before enlisting.

But the ball—and the officers' club in where the West Point has the Guardsman beaten to a frazzle.

Next we observe that "German culture" gave another exhibition of itself Wednesday in bombarding unprotected English coast towns and killing many non-combatants, including women and children. But where was the British navy all this time? Looks as if the Kaiser has one on the British admiralty outfit.

GIRL WANTED, at the Ferguson House for general hotel work.

THE "HOUSE OF DAVID"

From what we gather, in reading the Benton Harbor dispatches to the Daily Press, "The House of Benjamin" would be a more appropriate title for the community that is just now in the limelight.

In the matter of autocratic government and fanatical subservience to false scriptural interpretation, the "House of David" seems to be patterned after the "House of Dowie," and yet it is different—Dowie could not truthfully be called a libertine.

The Benton Harbor outfit is the corporate owner of large tracts of valuable land, with magnificent buildings and parks, innumerable places of amusement, it owns a steamer and several smaller crafts. The word of "Benjamin" is the law of the cult.

The present trouble of the organization is of special interest to Charlevoix, inasmuch as it owns the larger portion of high island, of the Beaver group, and has there a colony of over a hundred people. We have it from a member of the cult that it is their purpose to make the colonist on of this more or less isolated island permanent, increasing the colony as rapidly as the clearing up and agricultural development warrants. And this report suggests itself: If the charges made against Benjamin are true, what of the future of the high island colony in relation to Charlevoix county.

This much we will say, Charlevoix has been a basin of supplies for the High Island people, and has seen much of them. They pay well for what they buy, and carry themselves circumspectly.

LETTER FROM FRED BENHAM

OLIVET, MICH., DEC. 19, 1914.

Friend Willard Smith.

We won 1st premium in Agriculture for the northwestern group of counties at State Fair District this year it is the second time besides one previous year and now we intend to have the 1st premium next year making three years in succession.

It was in a way a G. A. R. victory for two of Uncle Sam's Veterans were the principal workers, tho' we would rarely not had first premium but for the aid of such veterans of horticulture as Hon. Fred Mesch and others.

I propose to stir up each of the other counties in the northwest group to compete next year. We wish to win the 1st three times consecutively and prove that Charlevoix takes the Banner in agriculture as well as first in beauty and quality of fruits. I may write you again about the fruit display. Oceana county people had the whole of Michigan counties compete together so as to win the special premium, but before that when north Michigan counties were grouped separate from south Michigan counties then Charlevoix county won 1st premium so it did when I exhibited for Charlevoix county when rightly grouped in latitude of northern Michigan.

Hon G. W. Dickenson, State Fair Gen'l Manager says he wants to restore the right grouping of counties. The State Fair people of Illinois make three grand divisions of their state with appropriate variety varieties to each latitude scheduled for premiums therein. And so our Michigan has three grand divisions viz: Southern half of southern peninsula, northern half of southern peninsula, the northern peninsula.

The CALL of the CUMBERLANDS

CHAPTER I.

Close to the serried backbone of the Cumberland range, through a sky of mountain clarity, the sun seemed hesitating before its descent to the horizon. The sugar-loaf cone that towered above a creek called Misery was polished and edged with emerald tracery where the hollow timber threaded up its crest to pour into the sun. On the hillsides it would be light for more than an hour yet, but below, where the waters tossed themselves along in a chorus of low notes, the light was already thickening into a reflected gloom. Down there the "forbidden" would have seen only the rough river would have seen only the rough course of the creek between moss-covered and shaded borders of titanic proportions. The native would have recognized the country road in these tortuous twistings. A great block of sandstone, to whose summit a man standing in his saddle could scarcely reach his fingertips, towered above the stream, with a gnarled scrub oak clinging tenaciously to its apex. Left up on this slab the months of the seasons had clothed its base and timber.

Fidelity to the trail threaded aside from above by a cautious hand, and a shy, half-wild girl appeared in the opening. For an instant she halted, with her brown fingers holding back limb opposite limb, and raised her face as though listening. As she stood with the tree of one hand for twisting in the gratefully cool moss, she laughed with the shy, sweet trills of bird song, and started out on the table top of the huge rock. But there she halted suddenly with a startled exclamation and drew instinctively back. What she had seen had have astonished her, for it was a thing she had never seen before. Finally, reassured by the silence, she slipped across the broad face of the flat rock for a distance of twenty-five feet and paused again to listen.

At the far edge lay a pale of saddle-bags, such as form the only practical equipment for mountain travelers. Near them lay a tin box, littered with small and unmatchable-looking bites of soft metal, all grotesquely twisted and stained, and beside the box was a strangely shaped plaque of wood covered with a dome hood. That this woman was a painter's sketching pallette was a thing which she could not deny, since the ways of painters had to do with a world as remote from her own as the life of the moon or stars. It was one of these vague mysteries that made up the wonderful life of "down below." Why had these things been left here in such conspicuous place? It was a man about who owned them he would doubtless return to claim them. She crept over, eyes and ears alert, and slipped around to the front of the strange tripod with all her muscles poised in readiness for flight.

A half-capacious and utterly astonished cry broke from her lips. She stared a moment, then dropped to the moss-covered rock, leaning back on her brown hands and gazing blindly.

"Hit's purty!" she approved, in a low, musical murmur. "Hit's purtuh, purtuh beautiful!"

Of course it was not a finished picture—merely a sketch of what lay before her—but the hand that had placed these lineaments on the academy board was the sure, deft hand of a master of landscape, who had caught the spirited effect of the thing and fixed it immutably in true and glowing appreciation. Who he was; where he had gone; why his work should have unfinished and abandoned, were details which for the moment the half-savage child-woman for got to question. She was conscious only of a sense of revolution and awe. Then she saw other boards, like the one upon the easel, piled near the paint box. These were dry, and represented the work of other days; but they seemed to picture of her own mountains, and in each of them, as in this one, was something that made her heart leap.

To her own people these steep hillsides and "coves" and valleys were a matter of course. In their stony soil she labored by day, and in their shadowy slept when work was done. Yet, someone had discovered that they held a picturesque and rugged beauty; that they were not merely stony ridges where the plow was useless and the hoe must be used. She most tell Samson—Samson, who she held in an artless exaltation of bare worship; Samson, who was so "smart" that he thought about things beyond her understanding; Samson, who could read and write, but speculate on only read and write, but speculate on only prohibitionist matters.

Suddenly she came to her feet with a swift-darting impulse of alarm. Her ear had caught a sound. She cast searching glances about her, but the jungle was empty of humanity. The water still murmured over the rocks undisturbed. There was no sign of human presence, other than herself, that her eyes could discover—and yet to her ears came the sound again, and this time more distinctly. It was the sound of a man's voice, and it was moaning as it in pain. She rose and extended vaguely through the bamboo of the hillside where the rock ran out from the woods. Her mouth was open and spaniel-like her feet in the shallow creek water, wading persistently up and down. Her eyes and ears were strained. The cross was a cross of a human creature in distress, and she must find and succor the person from whom it came.

Certain scenes are baffling as to direction. A voice from overhead or broken by echoing obstacles does not readily betray its source. Finally she stood up and listened once more to "tenty"—her attitude full of tense anxiousness.

"I'm shore a fool," she announced, aloud. "I'm shore a poum-tool. Then she turned and disappeared in the deep cleft between the gigantic boulders which lay at the base of the hill and another—small only by comparison. There, too, feet down, in a narrow alley littered with ragged stones, lay the crumpled body of a man. It lay with the left arm doubled under it, and from a gash in the forehead trickled a thin stream of blood. Also, it was the body of such a man as she had not seen before.

Although from the man came a low groan mingled with his breathing, it did not utter a sound as comes from fully conscious lips, but rather that of a brain dulled into coma.

Freed from her faltering excuse of shyness by his condition, the girl stepped surely from foothold to foothold until she reached his side. She stood for a moment with one hand in leaning posture, straightened the limbs, and began exploring with the fingers for broken bones.

She had found the left arm limp above the wrist, and her fingers had diagnosed a broken bone. But unconscious, that have come from the blow on the head, where a bruise was already blackening, and a gash had trickled blood.

She lifted her shirt and tore a long strip of cotton from her single petticoat. Then she picked her bare foot and swiftly to the creek bank, where she drenched the cloth for bathing and bandaging the wound. She had to guess what she could by way of first aid she saw the bone was not badly shattered and shook her head dubiously.

Finally the man's life fluttered and his lips moved. Then he opened his eyes.

"Hello!" said the stranger, vaguely. "I seem to have—" He broke off, and his eyes settled. It was a friendly, understanding smile, and the girl, sighing, had the lip impulse to drop his shoulders and flee into the kind mashing of the bushes, was in a measure reassured.

"You must hev fell offen the rock," she ventured.

"I think I might have fallen into worse circumstances," replied the unknown.

"I reckon you kin set up after a little."

"Yes, of course." The man suddenly realized that although he was quite comfortable as he was he could scarcely expect to remain permanently in the support of her best arm. He attempted to prop himself on his hurt hand and relaxed with a twinge of exquisite pain. The voice which had been so creep back into his cheeks, left them again, and his lips compressed themselves tightly to bite off an exclamation of suffering.

"Hit's hit left arm air busted," announced the young woman, quietly "Yo'r go hit be bandit."

Had one of her own men hurt himself and behaved stoically it would have been mere matter of course; but her eyes mirrored a pleased surprise

"How'd yo git hurt?"

He shook his head.

"I was palsitting—up there," he said; "and I guess I got too absorbed in the work. I stepped backward to look at the canvas and forgot where the edge was—I slipped too far."

The man rose to his feet, but he faltered and reeled against the wall of ragged stone. The blow on his head had left him faint and dizzy. He sat down again.

"I'm afraid," he ruefully admitted, "that I'm not quite ready for visitors from your hospital."

"You jest set where yo' at." The girl rose and pointed up the mountainside. "Hit right out across the hill and fetch Samson an' his mule."

"Who and where is Samson?" he inquired. He realized that the bottom of the valley would shortly thicken into darkness, and that the trail out would soon become impossible. "It sounds like the name of a backsmen."

"I reckon Samson South." she explained, as though further description of one so celebrated would be redundant. "He's over thar' 'bout three-quarters of a mile."

"Three-quarters of a mile!" he echoed. "What case could three-quarters mean?"

"How lugg will it take you?" he asked.

She deliberated. "Samson's hoss' corn in the fur hill field. He'll hev yer catch his mule. Hit most tok a backsmen."

"You can't do it in a half-hour, can you?"

"I'll jest take my foot in my hand, yo' right out." She turned, and with a nod was gone.

At last she came to a point where a clearing rose on the mountainside above her. The great blanket was spread for its instant use from a fenced-in and crazily tilting field of young corn. Across the field, upon the broad shoulders of sandstone which threw themselves against the sky, was a cabin of hewn logs, and the girl halted at the foot of the field at last, panting for breath and breathless. Her face, the face of a young woman, looking absently down on the outstretched paraeans below him.

Samson South was not, strictly speaking, a man. His age was perhaps twenty. He sat loose-jointed and sprawled, his eyes contracted and frowning, his hands hanging over his knees, his fingers twitching. Near by, propped against the rails, rested a repeating rifle, though the people would have swore that the truce in the "South-Hollman war" had been unbroken for two years, and that no clansman need in those halcyon days go armed afield.

CHAPTER II.

Sally clambered lightly over the fence as I started on the last stage of her journey, the climb across the young corn rows. It was a field stood on end, and the hood ground was unbroken, but with the seeming of weeds hoe red grass flashed steadfastly from the green spears, and her voice was raised to shout: "Hello, Samson!"

The young man looked up and waved a languid greeting. He did not remove his hat or descend from his place of rest and Sally, who expected no such attention, came smilingly on. Samson was her hero. The slow of utterance and diffident with the stranger, words now came fast and Sharply as she told her story of the man who lay hurt at the foot of the rock.

"Hit hain't hong now tell sundown," she urged. "Hurry, Samson, an' git yore mule. I've done give him my promise ter fetch yo right straight back."

Samson took off his hat, and tossed the back back upward from his forehead. His brow wrinkled with doubts. "What sort of lookin' feller air he?" he asked. While Sally sketched a description, the young man's doubt grew grave.

"This hain't no fit time ter be takin' in folks what we hain't acquainted ter. Hit hain't safe. In the mountains any time is the time to take in strangers unless there are secrets to be guarded from outside eyes.

"Why hain't it?" demanded the girl. "He's hurt. We kn'ot leave him layin' thar. Hit wo'."

Suddenly her eyes caught sight of the ride leaning near by, and straightway they filled with approaches. Her militant love would have turned to hate for Samson, should he have proved recreant to the mission of compliance, which he was telling his time yet the coming of the day when the trace must end haunted her thoughts. She came close, and her voice sank with her sinking heart.

"What air hit?" she tensely demanded. "What air hit, Samson? What for hev yo fetched yer gun ter the meetin'?"

The boy laughed. "Oh, hit ain't nothin' perticlur," he reassured. "Hit hain't nothin' for a gal ter yet herself erbout, only I kinder suspicions strangers jest now."

"Air the truce busted?" She put the question in a tense, deep-pitched whisper, and the boy replied casually, almost indifferently.

"No, Sally, hit hain't jest ter say busted, but 'pears like hit's right smart cracked. I reckon, though," he added in half-disgust, "nothin' won't come of hit."

Somewhat reassured, she bethought herself again of her mission.

"The feller what hain't got no harm in him, Samson," she pleaded. "He jest ter git up more like a gal than a man. He's real purty. He's got white skin and a bow of ribbon on his neck—an' he paints pictchers."

The boy's face had been hardening with contempt as the description advanced, but at the last words a glow came to his eyes, and he demanded almost breathlessly:

"Paints pictchers? How do yo know hit?"

"I seen 'em. He was paintin' one when he fell offen the rock and busted his arm. It's shore as beautiful as—" she broke off, then added with a sudden peal of laughter—"ee or pretcher."

The young man slipped down from the fence, and reached for the ride. "I'm ready ter git thar," he announced briefly, and swung off without further parley toward the curling swirl of smoke that marked a cabin a quarter of a mile below. Ten minutes later his bare feet swung against the ribs of a gray mule and his rifle lay balanced across the saddlebed withers. Sally mounted fashion behind him, facing straight to the side.

So they came along the creek bed and into the sight of the man who still sat propped against the moss rock. As Lescott looked up he closed the case of his sketch and slipped it into his pockets with a smile.

"Howdy, folks, howdy, that!" he called out. "Just thirty-three minutes. I didn't believe it could be done."

Samson's face was masklike, but as he surveyed the foreigner, only the ingrained dictates of the mountain hospitable code kept out of his eyes a gleam of scorn for this frill member of a sex which should be stalwart.

"Howdy?" he said. Then he added, emphatically: "Hit mat your business be in those parts, stranger?"

Lescott gave the Odyssey of his wanderings, since he had rented a mule at Hixon and ridden through the country, sketching where the mood prompted and stopping wherever he found a hospitable roof at the coming of the evening.

"I come from over on Cripplesbin?" The boy flashed the question with a sudden hardening of the voice.

Tamarack Spicer.

and, when he was affirmatively answered, his eyes contracted and frowned searchingly into the stranger's face.

"Where'd yo put up last night?" "Red Hill Hollman's house, at the mouth of Meeting House fork; do you know the place?"

Samson's reply was curt.

"I know hit all right."

There was a moment's pause—rather an awkward pause perhaps, mind began piecing together fragments of conversation he had heard until he had assembled a sort of mental jigsaw puzzle.

The South-Hollman feud had been mentioned by the more talkative of his informers, and carefully avoided by others—notable among them his host of last night. It now flashed on him that he was crossing the boundary and coming at the late guest of Red Hollman to aid his kinsmen. The boy's voice roused him.

"Hit hain't no thing now tell sundown," he urged. "Hurry, Samson, an' git yore mule. I've done give him my promise ter fetch yo right straight back."

Samson took off his hat, and tossed the back back upward from his forehead. His brow wrinkled with doubts. "What sort of lookin' feller air he?" While Sally sketched a description, the young man's doubt grew grave.

at the stranger's good-natured nod and his quiet refusal to give expression to pain. It relieved her of the necessity for outcome.

"I'm afraid," apologized the painter, "that I've been a great deal of trouble to you."

Her lips and eyes were sober as she replied.

"I reckon thet's all right."

"And what's worse, I've got to be more trouble. Did you see anything of a brown mule?"

She shook her head.

"He must have wandered off. May I ask to whom I am indebted for the first aid to the injured?"

"Yo' kin call me what yo means."

She had propped him against the rocks and sat near by, looking into his face with a frank, unembarrassed keenness; her solemn-puffled eyes were unblinking, unsmiling.

"Why, I mean who are you?" he explained.

"I hain't nobody much. I jest lives over yon."

"But," insisted the man, "surely you have a name."

She nodded.

"Yes, Sally. Sally, I want to thank you."

Once more she nodded, and, for the first time, let her eyes drop, while she sat nursing her arms. Finally she glanced up and asked with plucked-up courage:

"Stranger, what most yore name be?"

"Lescott—George Lescott."

"How'd yo git hurt?"

He shook his head.

MIXTURE OF MANY TONGUES

Tropes of Allied Armies Find Some Difficulty in Arriving at Perfect Understanding.

The British Tommy Atkins is hard put to it these days to know where are friends and which are foes. Time was when he classed them all as "dirty foreigners," but times have changed and a certain stilted courtesy is demanded. It is told of one Irish corporal who met a new kind of foreigner on French soil and demanded his nationality.

"Hungarian," came the answer.

"Hungarian, are you? Well, I'm blowed if I know whether 'ee 'as yer to be known or kinds yer tally blowed off," remarked the chagrined defender of the Union Jack.

Many are the stories of the embarrassing confusion of tongues among the allies—French, Russian, Russian, Serbian, Indian (three brands), and several species of English. For it is rare that a Londoner can understand the Scotch dialect in its unsophisticated form, or the Cornish brogue. Canadian slang, too, and the queer idioms of Australia and New Zealand are into Australian English, or of Boer into that strikes even the Afrikander's dialect make of so-called English a dozen different languages.

Coming into Line.

Two scantily dressed young men were discussing the present economic situation with a third whose holiday spirit, straggling hair and grimy hands betokened a holiday at some distance from a hairdresser's and a hasty journey home.

"Well, observed number one, "the poor man's life's not only sensible but it's patriotic to economize just now, so he shall have my share for a fenced-in and crazily tilting field of young corn. Across the field, upon the broad shoulders of sandstone which threw themselves against the sky, was a cabin of hewn logs, and the girl halted at the foot of the field at last, panting for breath and breathless. Her face, the face of a young woman, looking absently down on the outstretched paraeans below him.

He sat loose-jointed and sprawled, his eyes contracted and frowning, his hands hanging over his knees, his fingers twitching. Near by, propped against the rails, rested a repeating rifle, though the people would have swore that the truce in the "South-Hollman war" had been unbroken for two years, and that no clansman need in those halcyon days go armed afield.

CHAPTER II.

Sally clambered lightly over the fence as I started on the last stage of her journey, the climb across the young corn rows. It was a field stood on end, and the hood ground was unbroken, but with the seeming of weeds hoe red grass flashed steadfastly from the green spears, and her voice was raised to shout: "Hello, Samson!"

The young man looked up and waved a languid greeting. He did not remove his hat or descend from his place of rest and Sally, who expected no such attention, came smilingly on. Samson was her hero. The slow of utterance and diffident with the stranger, words now came fast and Sharply as she told her story of the man who lay hurt at the foot of the rock.

"Hit hain't hong now tell sundown," she urged. "Hurry, Samson, an' git yore mule. I've done give him my promise ter fetch yo right straight back."

Samson took off his hat, and tossed the back back upward from his forehead. His brow wrinkled with doubts. "What sort of lookin' feller air he?" While Sally sketched a description, the young man's doubt grew grave.

"This hain't no fit time ter be takin' in folks what we hain't acquainted ter. Hit hain't safe. In the mountains any time is the time to take in strangers unless there are secrets to be guarded from outside eyes.

"Why hain't it?" demanded the girl. "He's hurt. We kn'ot leave him layin' thar. Hit wo'."

Suddenly her eyes caught sight of the ride leaning near by, and straightway they filled with approaches. Her militant love would have turned to hate for Samson, should he have proved recreant to the mission of compliance, which he was telling his time yet the coming of the day when the trace must end haunted her thoughts. She came close, and her voice sank with her sinking heart.

"What air hit?" she tensely demanded. "What air hit, Samson? What for hev yo fetched yer gun ter the meetin'?"

The boy laughed. "Oh, hit ain't nothin' perticlur," he reassured. "Hit hain't nothin' for a gal ter yet herself erbout, only I kinder suspicions strangers jest now."

"Air the truce busted?" She put the question in a tense, deep-pitched whisper, and the boy replied casually, almost indifferently.

"No, Sally, hit hain't jest ter say busted, but 'pears like hit's right smart cracked. I reckon, though," he added in half-disgust, "nothin' won't come of hit."

Somewhat reassured, she bethought herself again of her mission.

"The feller what hain't got no harm in him, Samson," she pleaded. "He jest ter git up more like a gal than a man. He's real purty. He's got white skin and a bow of ribbon on his neck—an' he paints pictchers."

The boy's face had been hardening with contempt as the description advanced, but at the last words a glow came to his eyes, and he demanded almost breathlessly:

"Paints pictchers? How do yo know hit?"

"I seen 'em. He was paintin' one when he fell offen the rock and busted his arm. It's shore as beautiful as—" she broke off, then added with a sudden peal of laughter—"ee or pretcher."

The young man slipped down from the fence, and reached for the ride. "I'm ready ter git thar," he announced briefly, and swung off without further parley toward the curling swirl of smoke that marked a cabin a quarter of a mile below. Ten minutes later his bare feet swung against the ribs of a gray mule and his rifle lay balanced across the saddlebed withers.

DODGING THE BEATEN PATH

Good Story as It is Related. Though It Doesn't Often Happen in Real Life.

Congressman Robert L. Doughton of North Carolina smiled when the conversation turned to retrenching the order of things. He said he was reminded of the case of Bowers.

Bowers was a conservative party on a railroad train one day, and the acquaintance ripened a bit he began to tell about the other a history of his life.

"When I was a clerk in a grocery store," remarked Bowers, among other things, "I received only nine dollars a week, and, like many other young men, I fell in with bad companions and began to gamble."

"I see," interrupted the benevolent party, easily, "you were tempted and took money which did not belong to you."

"No, no," cheerily responded Bowers. "In less than a month I won enough money to buy the grocery."

Son Doubts Dad's Marksmanship.

Dr. Dan W. Layman, who had a miscellaneous catching record, now is proud of his ability in the hunting field, tells a good story on himself. Mr. Layman had just completed reading an article in the News on the foot-and-mouth cattle disease and the possibility of rabbits being infected with the malady, when the doctor and his son

"Mother, I believe I will go hunting the rest of the week."

"I don't believe I would go if I were you. I am afraid the rabbits are all sick," replied Mrs. Layman.

Then seven-year-old Dan, Jr., spoke up: "Let father go, mother." he said. "Maybe he could kill a rabbit if they are all sick."

Saved by Gold Chain.

A gold chain that she wore around her neck, saved a little girl of Cambridgeport, England, from serious injury, recently. She was on her way to Sunday school, when a bullet exploded by the wheels of a trolley car hit her on the neck. Her mother felt a swelling on her neck and discovered a bloodless cut about an inch long. The child did not feel a blow, but was aware that the chain she wore about her neck had been hit. The bullet struck the bosom of her dress to get the loose end of the chain and passed the girl's neck. Both the tracks revealed several exploded cartridges. The police believe they may be in part of the shipment that was stolen from a freight car a short time ago.

The Inspector's Advice.

The Inspector McCluskey—"Gentleman George," or "Cheesy George," as he was known in the New York force—was a good friend and a good neighbor. The inspector, by no means vindictive, did not readily forget an injury, and one day an offender, a person who had injured him in the most heinous way, and grey has many offenders, in fact—this person, of your man just called me a spatted old mule. What are you going to do about it?" "Do? Why, nothing," the inspector answered. "I can't patch up a quarrel between the blackguards. Go and consult a vet."

MEASURING LIGHT OF STARS

With Improved Instruments, Johns Hopkins Professor Hopes to Secure Most Important Results.

A recent number of Le Radium contains a paper by Ie. L. Pond of Johns Hopkins university, in which Professor Pond describes experiments he has made of a new apparatus for measuring the light of a star. The work was done at the Allegheny observatory, the Keeler 30-inch reflector being used in the focus of the telescope, other of two small blackened tubes, one of which had the junction of a thermo-circuit, could be placed. The wires used for the thermo-element were alloys of bismuth and tin, and of antimony and bismuth respectively. They were enclosed in an evacuated capsule, closed at one end by a plate of fluorite and constituted for the eyepiece of the telescope. The thermo-current was measured by a mortling-Leeds galvanometer. The sensitiveness of the arrangement was such that a candle at a distance of 10 miles would give a deflection of one millimeter. The source used for calibrating from celestial objects were Vega, the Jupiter, 13 Aldebaran, and Aldebaran. The author hopes, by using a more sensitive galvanometer and materials for the thermo-elements, to increase the sensitiveness considerably, and in this way to open up a new field of astrophysical research.

Old Age.

"My son, you want to stop this running around so much."

"It don't hurt me, father."

"Yes, it does. It will make you old before your time."

"Well, that won't hurt me so. The world is so much more modernized and it runs around nights, don't it?"

BOYD'S SPLENDID IDEA

By MARGARET MIDDLETON.

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

"I wouldn't dream of accepting your half-price offer," said Mrs. Marvin, with all the liberal ingenuousness of a new and happy bride.

"I need work so sorely," explained Rosina Boyd, that I fear I will be to take anything."

"He was a gentleman, she saw that. His face showed cultured lineaments. "Too seem to be very anxious," she suggested, in a sympathetic, womanly way, and more than anxious was that word.

"We are hard pressed, my sick wife and two little children. About all I know is stenography. Until recently I had quite a lucrative position, photographing scenery for a railroad company. My work for them was completed some time ago and I have had to look up what business I can in this way."

"Very well, you can take a photograph of the house—yes, and another of the garden and print up half a dozen of each."

Two days later, when Boyd delivered his order, he departed from his generous dinner well paid and with the promise of more work. Within the week Mrs. Marvin sent him half a dozen wealthy friends. Then she called at his lodgings for one of the photographs to her limousine. Results followed. He invited her to provided for the children and scattered sunshine generally in the Boyd household.

Of course, Boyd was deeply grateful. "Because I am not, Mrs. Marvin, I am a pleasant, encouraging word

"I Suppose That You Wish to Sell Me These Photographs?"

for him. Her friends helped her to find work for him. Boyd's home grew happier, prosperous, happy.

One morning as he was dressed to pass the elegant home of the Marvins, he viewed a scene that at once troubled him. Mr. Marvin was departing from the house. He came down the steps with an air of determination, and he was a handsome man, but his features seemed to show traces of dissipation. Mrs. Marvin stood within the vestibule, one hand extended as if appealing to him to return. Then as her husband swung around the corner, Boyd, observing her face with her hands as if in dire distress.

"Trouble! Oh, I hope not, though it seems so," reflected Boyd, nerely disturbed on account of his good, kind friend. Then his thoughts were abruptly disturbed as a friendly hand touched his shoulder.

"Hello, Boyd, what you doing in this neighborhood?" called Ed Blake, a challenger, whom he recognized as an old time "friend."

"I am having a good deal of work in the neighborhood," explained Boyd.

"Know the Marvins?"

"Yes, sir. Mrs. Marvin has taken a special fancy to me in connection with some photos for me in her society circle."

"A sweet little lady, sir," he commented his friend. "Wasn't that her husband who just walked away? A fine fellow, but—well, Money, sir, ofttimes stands, a charming wife, but fast on the downward path, I fear."

"I had not heard of that," murmured Boyd, very greatly troubled.

"She don't know! He would give a dollar to keep her from knowing it." "Yes, sir, he would, sir—"

"Have you got in that way," said Blake, "that you wish to sell me these photographs? Well, I'm afraid the rabble are all sick," replied Mrs. Lyman.

Then seven-year-old Dan, Jr., spoke up: "Let father go, mother," he said. "Maybe he could kill a rabbit if they are all sick."

Making Artificial Furs.

Away from the fashionable centers of the north, where some of the finest furs in the world are manufactured, the artificial furs is carried on as well as in more southern places to which the natural skins are shipped.

The skins with the fur are frozen, thawed out and dried and immediately put through the necessary tanning process to make them leather.

The frozen furs are thawed slightly, permitting the points of the fur shaved from the skin to protrude from the face.

A solution of rubber is then applied, and when it is thoroughly set it is so well held together that it is proofed against water. The fur and real skins, as they are stronger and are proofed from moth.

The process doubles some kinds of fur to be sold at a lower price than if the skin was tanned with the fur

Utilizing Refuse.

In the French commune of Villers Cotterets, adjoining the city of Lorma, the city refuse is burned, and briquettes made from the residue. This has been a private enterprise, but the municipality has arranged for the purchase of the cemetery. The crematory is a model plant and answered to it in a little growing plant. The furnace serves not only to burn the refuse, but also to operate, by steam, the various machines in the factory.

BURNING GLASSES.

Powerful Lenses Wim a Few of Their Fiery Feats.

PENN'S MARVELOUS MACHINE.

The Heat Rays From This Mirror Lens Were So Intense That They Melted Garnets, Flint, Steel and Iron and Did Other Wonderful Things

It is written that when the Roman ships besieged Syracuse Archimedes focused them by means of mirrors, and Proclus is also said to have destroyed the navy of Vitalian when those galleys besieged Byzantium, by means of burning glasses. And there is the wonderful story of Ptolemy's mirror, which, placed on the tower of the Pharos at Alexandria, represented accurately everything that transpired in all Egypt, on both land and water, with which an enemy's fleet could be seen 100 leagues away.

Dewarbre branded the story of Archimedes' mirrors as fabulous. But Kircher believed it to be true and made many experiments to prove his contention. He tried the effect of a number of plane mirrors and with five or the same size, placed in a frame, endeavored to throw the rays reflected from them to the same spot at a distance of more than 100 feet, and the degree of heat obtained led him to conclude that by increasing the number of mirrors he could increase the heat to any desired degree. He made a village to Rome to cure to inform himself exactly of local conditions. From his observations he was convinced that the Roman galleys could not have been more than thirty paces, or less than 100 feet, from the place where Archimedes mounted his unique engine of destruction.

Buffon constructed a machine consisting of a number of mirrors, and in his first experiment, using twenty-four mirrors, he set fire to pitch and tow at a distance of seventy feet. Then, with a kind of polyhedron, consisting of 168 pieces of plain looking glass, each piece six inches square, boards of beech-wood were set on fire at a distance of 140 feet. Buffon's mirrors were employed 300 plain mirrors, each eight inches long and six broad, and with all the mirrors in one wood round he succeeded at a distance of 203 feet. The best machine of this nature constructed by Buffon contained 360 mirrors, each six inches square, and with the rays from this he could melt lead and tin at a distance of 150 feet.

The most powerful burning mirror of modern times was constructed by one Tschirnhausen, a German, who succeeded in producing a burning lens so less than three feet in diameter, and the cost the man who was financing the experiment upward of $2,000. Its power was astonishing, and the hardest and most solid substances, such as iron, flint and steel, melted like wax when exposed to its immense focus, only a few seconds being required. A diamond weighing ten grains was exposed to the rays for thirty minutes and was reduced to six grains by the process. During the operation the stone emitted a brilliant phosphorescence. When exposed to its immense focus only a few seconds being required. A diamond weighing ten grains was exposed to the rays for thirty minutes and was reduced to six grains by the process. During the operation the stone emitted a brilliant phosphorescence. When exposed to the rays of the sun it still bore a polish and was identical in stamp, though four grains lighter. Ten cut garnets melted and run together in a few seconds. In fact, nothing was found that could resist the terrible heat generated. This remarkable machine was afterward taken to China by an officer connected with the Brit. an embassy, and finally lost sight of.

With these modern experiments to consider, the tale of the burning of Marcellus' ships seems more probable. La Broughera, a traveler of the fifteenth century, says that at Damascus they made mirrors of steel that magnified everything "like burning glasses." The telescope was not invented till early in the seventeenth century.

THRIFTY HOTEL GUESTS.

The Mania For Stealing Little Souvenirs at Their Expense.

We often hear complaints from hotels about inattention and lack of courtesy on the part of those whose duty it is to cater to the traveling public. But there is another side to the story. For instance, the customions of pieces of historic or recent interest frequently visited by travelers are obliged to maintain constant watch against the vandalism of souvenir hunters.

What satisfaction can be found in mutilating and demolishing things of interest that value to procure a souvenir or to appropriating that well known hotel, such property as knives, forks, pepper and salt shakers, towels, towels and bath mats? The manager of a prominent hotel in New York even reports the disappearance of pillows from the bedrooms

The value of this stolen property yearly amounts to a very large sum. It has been the underlying cause for the appearance of such items as the following on menus: "Chicken en casserole in individual souvenir." or "Souvenir cocktail." in which the spritzer is served in a container bearing the house name and which contained a given to the patron.

There are numerous other souvenirs, such as silver plated trays, teaspoons, etc., for sale by various hotels to satisfy collectors

Not all things that disappear from hotels are taken with deliberate intention. The manager of one of the most fashionable hotels in New York has concluded that linen is not always purloined, but is taken away unconsciously as wrappers for shoes and other articles when packing and then is forgotten. Guests rock bur dollies in their coat pockets after using them and there are dropped at the next hotel visited.

This wholesale purloining of hotel articles has led to the formation of a linen exchange. Many of the leading hotels now have a special room of all the foreign linen in their hotels, and it is expected by this time many will sent to its rightful owners, who then return linens not belonging to them.—Leslie's.

OLD FASHIONED HINTS.

How to Aid the Housewife's Struggle For Cleanliness.

It would seem as if about half of woman's whole duty in life, if she follows the profession of a housekeeper, consists of various kinds of cleaning—fighting and struggling day after day against just plain dirt. Yet when you consider how largely our civilization depends on the elimination of dirt this doesn't seem such a tiresome duty, after all.

The baby's bath, washing clothes, cleaning rooms, "doing dishes," dusting—all these things that take so large a share of the housewife's time are simply phases of the general crusade against dirt.

Here are some old fashioned hints that may be of some assistance.

To clean grease spots from clothing or carpets, dry clean with corn meal for four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia and half as much of benzine. Apply the mixture to the spot and then rub with clear water and a cloth.

To take grease spots from rugs or carpets, place a piece of blotting paper over the spot and then press over it with a hot flatiron, repeating the process several times. Care should be taken not to press too hard or the iron will stick.

To clean blankets the old fashioned method was to use a "potcher" or long smooth piece of hardwood, or a flat stick of wood and add a tablespoonful of ammonia. Four sections laid over the blankets and then with the "potcher" work thoroughly into the blankets. Rinse in two waters. Put the blankets through the wringer and then pull into shape. This operation requires two persons, one holding one end and pulling similar another person holding the other end of the blanket.

To clean the inside of jars and bottles fill them with hot water and then stir in a teaspoonful of baking soda. Shake well and rinse.

To clean mattresses use a paste of cold water and starch. After the mattresses have been thoroughly beaten and freed from dust spread this paste evenly made on all sides and then put to the sun for several hours; then brush off the starch. A second application of this paste should be tried if the first is not entirely satisfactory.

How to Utilize Old Hot Water Bags in the Home.

Don't throw away your old hot water bags. They make excellent linings for mottled rasin, rosinge bags, etc. Cover the rubber with remnants of cretonne or colored linen from the piece box. Small pieces of the rubber cut only by 1½ inches and sewed with white thread make good protectors for sore fingers or to be worn when cutting fruit and vegetables. Save enough use for the old hot water bag to be cut round made from the edges to place under house plants. These mats are just the thing to protect polished surfaces from the moisture of the plants.

A Modest Request.

A man recently advertised in the London Times for a millionaire to intrust him with $1,000,000. He said that he desired to teach the rich how to spend. The object of his "sight" was, unfortunately, not a success.

CHRISTMAS AS A SCIENCE

"TO CHUM TO LUCK"

IN THESE latter days, when every branch of human activity has been examinated and, and we are brought whether we like it or not, under the spoil of scientific management of the "Hull Institute, what is more natural than that we should now be obliged to accept the scientific management of Christmas?

Christmas is a science! How our grandfathers would have gasped at the idea! In their time Christmas was a spontaneous holiday. Christmas eve then hung their stockings on the mantelpiece in the confidence that Santa Claus could find his way through a stove-lid. Then there was the Christmas tree, with a grandfather to distribute the gifts and a strong force of uncles and aunts to maintain peace among the cousins. And there was mating in the afternoon with the choicest sort of melee to give the finishing touch to the day.

There was no need of science there. It would, in fact, have spoiled the whole thing. But now the spirit of Christmas has changed. We still have our Christmas trees, subject to the regulations of the fire department, but we are really slaves of our Christmas shopping list. From Thanksgiving to Christmas most of us live in an atmosphere of deepening gloom. We have continually haunting over us that dreadful problem of what would be the best thing to give Soandso, and when we have made a selection our hearts sink at the awful thought that Whatshisname may give the same thing.

It is to relieve this situation as much as possible that science has been called in to our aid. Of course, even science has not yet been able to prevent two people from buying the same gift to one person. But it has been able to display unusual gifts and a larger number of them for our consideration, so that it will be easier to select a present which we can hope may be what the person would not think of. And the greatest advantage of scientific Christmas shopping is the increased speed with which the ordeal may be gone through.

There are two things which have brought about this result. The first is the establishment of exhibits of gifts for children in the schools of the large cities of the country. And the second is the scientific arrangement of gifts for sale in the shops and department stores. On one floor we have a department devoted entirely to toys and other gifts for children; in another place presents particularly suited to men; and elsewhere sections for maidens and boys and girls. It is all the direct result of the card index and the filing cabinet. You look under the particular heading you want and you find another section before you a vast quantity of suitable gifts to choose from.

The object of the public exhibits is not so much to save mothers labor, worthy object though that might be, as to disguise the latest and most ingenious products of the toy market. Child welfare is the primary purpose, and there we have another side of the scientific Christmas. It is to save the children from being deluged at the Christmas season with beautiful, unbreakable and useless gifts. Esthetic and hygienic are words that loom up larger in the vocabulary of the present than that of the past.

And so, although Noah's ark will remain Noah's ark to the end of the world, and generation after youngster whose family attends one of these exhibits will feel constrained to take home a pair of them, than or Lucky. For, lo and behold, they are entirely innocent of the familiar red and green and blue of that unsanitary century we have left behind. The sons of the patriarch and all the animals that "went in two by two" are of reasonably hygienic white wood.

By the same token, dolls will be dolls. For here again the scientific Christmas has produced a change to a more esthetic and hygienic product, instead of dolls as of old, whose features have been kissed into obliteration by several generations of admiring kin, there is a excellent, perfectly unbreakable, far more beautiful, and absolutely impervious to washing.

For older children one finds marvelous allwood dolls, again embodying the three important virtues. They are unbreakable, washable and artistic. Their naturalness is evident at a glance, and the visitor is not surprised to learn that they are reproductions of American children modeled by American artists.

And yet the thought rises, will modern Dorothys and Nancys love these charming creations one quite more than their mothers and grandmothers loved the china and wax dollies who preceded them? There was Henrietta, a gorgeous Parisian, may remember, whose pink and white loveliness is still a happy memory. Poor Henrietta! She did the victim of a bad small brother who tried the effect of midsummer bait upon her wave complexion. Then there was Juliet, she of real brown hair that combed and a warm brunette complexion, and a host of others who may have had untold attractions. But you must put them out of your mind in this scientific age. Glass hair bonnets with ribbons and complexions do not digest well in small stomachs.

Then there are other suggestions which are the result of the practicality of our time. Housekeeping furnishings, for example, such as tea sets in pewter, cooking utensils in granite and metal, an ironing board and iron which can really be used, and an iron cooking stove which things can be cooked. In the matter of musical toys, science has gone another. So pianos for the child of today are marvelous instruments. Also for the jewelry of the lady in a generation gone by! Those have from two to three octaves of the choicest notes and are accurately tuned to concert pitch.

But all such marvels cost money and are not likely to find place in the stocking of those five or six must live on a small income. So it is good to discover a case containing a number of gifts at a minimum price. Not one exceeds ten cents in cost. It is surprising how many attractive things may be had for this money, and the hard-pressed, busy mother, or doting grandma, conscientious aunt or inexperienced big cousin is very likely to find there the very thing to buy for Tommy or Sally.

The scientific Christmas has only begun and before long we will have exhibits for people of all ages and both sexes. Even it is the department stores, by their scientific arrangement and the catalogues and lists of suitable gifts, classified according to ages, have done much toward making even shopping for men a simple matter.

This, however, is a very recent institution. In the old days, a woman went to the large shop, without the slightest idea of what she wanted to buy, and after ten minutes in the crowded, heated aisles surrounded by thousands of elaborate, alluring, gaily colored possibilities with no apparent order or arrangement, bewilderment and despair would be her portion. Under such conditions, even the most conscientious of them seized the article nearest. She was at the mercy of the salewoman because she did not know what she had better get or where she could get it.

But the woman's bewilderment was nothing to the man's. He didn't even make an attempt to shop; he simply bought.

But all these things are different now. You get a list of things which such-and-such a store has to offer for man, woman and child of any given age, with the price on which it may be found indexed, and you have only to walk in calmly and deliberately and purchase it. It is literally an end of the peace and good will which you may wish to dispense. You do all your thinking beforehand and have an opportunity to remember that Mrs. Soandso's library is furnished in red, and that a Kaiser Shin vase would be more acceptable than a mop.

Then when you have made your selection you may make your way to the store with a fairly calm and tranquil mind. Of course, it is crowded with a festivity which makes progress almost impossible, blazing hot with multitudinous lights and noisy with many clamoring voices, but all that can have no effect on you. You are a scientific shopper and know just what you are going to get and where you are going to get it. Science saves time, money and nerves.

There is another way in which Christmas has become a science and that is in the methods which the big shopkeeper employs to attract the crowds of holiday shoppers. So into one of their establishments and you cannot fail to see it. They are aglow with light, heated with the colors of unmuffered fabrics and you hear far and near the clash of music from many instruments. "That is simply to lure you in and once you are there you see at first nothing but a spectacle of confusion and a conflict of sounds that would make Babel lose caste as a cacophony. But if you start to buy what you have come for you will find a remarkable state of order, so far as the things offered for sale are concerned. It is not really a store. It's an exposition.

There isn't a man in the world who has a keener understanding of the human makeup than the big shopkeeper. He knows every string of the instrument and plays diligently upon them all. He lures people with advertisements which are wonder stories. He baits the passing crowd in the street with a windowful of Christmas wonders, and once they have come inside, whether with a purpose or out of mere curiosity, the machinery is there to hold them fast.

For weeks the designers, decorators, scene painters, dummymakers have been at work devising and constructing some sort of living pictures fraught with the spirit of the Christmas tale. There is the papier-mache church, still and beautiful, with snow-covered trees about it; light shining from the tall windows, men, women and children mounting to the portal, and from away in the inside sanctuary somewhere comes the music of a nightly organ and voices singing Christmas carols.

It is expensive, but it impresses the people who enter the store. It is the idea of it all that the hearts of the shoppers be mellowed and the spirit be moved to buy more and still more for the holiday giving. That may seem a little "far-fetched" as you sit at home with a "crouch on" because something went wrong yesterday, or a man you thought was your friend went back on you, but just wait until you get to the store, where "you can't hear yourself think" of your troubles for the noise, and you will realize that it is really a very clever conception.

"THE OLD FAMILIAR FACES OF CHRISTMAS"

"THE OLD CHRISTMAS LACKED COMFORT"

Up there before the eyes is an inspiring presentment of the great Unselfishness. And here before you, behind you and on either hand are the goods, just the things for all your kith and kin. It is the shopkeeper's plan that you shall buy while the spell is still on you, while the din religious tinkle beams out and the Christmas carols burden the air. And you do. You would be less human if you didn't. You may not think that has anything to do with it, but it has. The shopkeeper would not go to all that expense, you may be sure, if he did not know what results it would bring him.

Even the small street fakers use their wits to sell all they can during the holidays. It is their harvest time of the whole year. And they select the spots on the sidewalks which will be most advantageous for sale of their particular wares. They invent innumerable little devices for the purpose of attracting crowds. They, too, are scientific.

The foreman chooses a spot where the greatest number of children will pass, and spends the day drawing the world's attention to the wonderfulness of his clockwork toys. Some sell metallic horses and drivers, his fighting aviators and climbing monkeys, and his automatic male fall of plantation vision. Almost the corners where most people pass are occupied by pickled men and women with hair and beards and bottlebrood popsies of the latest beauty. They know just how to make a woman feel ashamed of the Christmas spirit when she sees the pickled animals on a cold day and buy a little shawl rather that they may have a comfortable time. The Christmas green man with his huge bones of holly and mistletoe, and—more people are in a glorious to him—the candy man and something like ten thousand other displays their wares from all sides, entice the passing throngs with a hundred little devices, appeal to their sympathy and curiosity and coax them into hard cash. To both buyer and seller, from the biggest to the smallest, Christmas has become a science.

CHRISTMAS TREES

From ancient days Christmas trees, lighted with candles, were used in the churches of English churches. But it has been put on record that the introduction of the modern Christmas trees into England was due to the late duchess of Kent, grandmother to King Edward VII, who was credited with having brought the custom with her from Germany for the amusement of Queen Victoria when a little girl at Kensington palace.

The Christmas tree by 1846 was undoubtedly established at Windsor castle, at that period a perfect plantation, appears to have sprung up in the drawing room of the castle. In the newspapers of the time it is recorded that after dinner, at which the principal dish was a noble barm of beef weighing 180 pounds, that occupied many hours to roasting, and at which the head of the Boots Pugilistic discovered such popular airs as Auber's "Bronze Horse" and selections from "Norma," the queen and the prince, with the royal suite, retired to the drawing room, where, on tables, were gracefully displayed "several imitation fir trees upwards of six feet in height, from which branches of which were suspended a variety of French bonbons and numerous elegant presents for the royal visitors and suites." The trees, we further learn, were brilliantly illuminated with wax tapers judiciously placed among the boxes.

It is not certain, however, that the custom had not been in use for centuries in rural parts of Great Britain.

WHEN CATTLE KNELT IN ADORATION.

Many an awestricken group has waited in the chill air to see the cattle fall upon their knees in adoration at twelve o'clock. In one place the ass was wrapped in swaddling clothes. An honest old Cornwall, England, man, who lived at St. Stephen's Down, said it happened every Christmas eve during the eighteenth century, that he once, with some others, made a trial of the superstition. Watching several oxen in their stalls at twelve o'clock at night on the 24th of December, they observed the two oldest oxen only to fall down upon their knees "and make a cruel moan, like Christian creatures."

There is an old story in the Irish museum in which the oxen in the stable near the Virgin and Child are represented upon their knees, as if in supplicant posture. This graphic representation is, perhaps, the origin of the foregoing superstitious notion.

But more curious than all, is an addition to this superstition, to the effect that the Christian oxen unanimously refused to acknowledge the change of style, from the old to the new, which, coming though on old Christmas day not only would the poor dumb creatures know nothing of it, but assure would lead in their stalls to lower mangers. It was also said that to spin on Christmas day caused cattle to be mad and lame.

SOME PEOPLE DO.

"Did I understand you to say that Willoughby enjoys canned prunes?" asked the man who was slightly deaf.

"No," answered the friend; "I said 'canned tunes.' There's no accounting for tastes."

DIFFERENT POINT OF VIEW.

"When we were first married you used to admire my clothes, but you only frown at them now."

"But, my dear, your father paid for the clothes you wore when we were first married."

LITTLE MATTER OF HONESTY

According to Test, Humanity Does Not Differ Very Much in Want of Gift Be Called Little Things.

"How does to your honesty?" asks the Wichita Beacon. "Probably you wouldn't rob a blind man or take pennies from a baby—at least we want to believe that you wouldn't. But if the man at the store or candy counter by mistake hands you one too many in change and you see the error, do you call his attention to the mistake? Or if you do, do you do it with a chuckle, pocket the swag and salve your conscience by saying to yourself: 'Well, it was up to him?' The other day a business man gave a number of coins to the cashier and told her to give an extra coin to each of the first twenty persons getting change. She did so. Eight pocketed the change without hesitating, therefore, lets them out. Out of the other 12, knowingly kept money that didn't belong to them—nine men and two women. Six only stopped on and did the right thing—two women and four men. Analyzing these figures, we have 67 per cent of honesty among women to a bit over 50 per cent among men. Is that, in your opinion, about the average or man? the test decisive?"—Kansas City Star.

Walking Graveyards.

Some of the Indian princes have gone to stay: lakhs of rupees—over 41,000,000 apiece — to "Great Britain for the war.

The KITCHEN CABINET

No man can live happily who regards himself alone, who lays everything to his own advantage. Thou must live for another, if thou wishest to live for thyself.

YULETIDE CANDIES.

Instead of buying the Christmas candies this year why not make it a part of the holiday joy to prepare them at home? With the foundation for French creams made one is able to assemble a large variety of different kinds of candy.

An old-fashioned candy pull is plenty of fun and incidentally several varieties of taffy may be added to the collection.

Invitiles are the bane of all cranbies to make or spoil in the making. A well-seasoned frying pan is the best to cook brittle in. Put the sugar, one, two, or more pounds, into the clear pan and set over the hot stirring constantly so that no part is overcooked. When the sugar is melted and a beautiful golden brown, pour it over nuts in a buttered pan. If peanuts are used, a cupful to two cupfuls of sugar is none too much, but if the Brazil or walnut is used, half the nuts need be added.

Delicious Fudge.—Take two teaspoonfuls of sugar, a third of a cupful of corn sirup, two tablespoonfuls of butter, a half cupful of milk and cook together with a square of grated chocolate until it spins a long thread when dropped in water. Cool and stir, put on a buttered pan and mark off in squares when cool enough.

Cream Candy.—Take a pound of sugar and a half cupful of hot water, a tablespoonful of butter, a small teaspoonful of cream of tartar and a teaspoonful of vinegar. Boil until it bubbles when a drop is put into water poor on buttered pans and cool, then pull.

Walnut Creams.—Cook together three cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of corn sirup and a cupful of cream. Drop in a bit of water and if it makes a soft ball, remove from the heat and add a teaspoonful of vanilla, stir when cool and add a cupful of chopped nuts, spread on buttered pans and mark off in squares.

Peanut Candy.—Take two pounds of brown sugar, add six ounces of butter and cook together seven minutes, stirring constantly, add half a pound of peanuts which have been rolled until like coarse crumbs. Put in a buttered pan and mark off in squares.

SAVORY DISHES FROM ITALY.

The great national dish is polenta, which is simply more than common mush, made from white corn meal. It is made by boiling salted water, then put into a dish to cook. It is then cut and fried in olive oil or drippings and often served with tomato sauce.

Chestnut and Orange Salad.—Take a half pound of chestnuts, shell and blanch them, cut them in small pieces and mix with the grated yellow rind of an orange. Pile the nuts with sections of the orange freed from connecting skin, and a spoonful of mayonnaise dressing, all served on cress or lettuce.

Maut Polenta.—This is much stirred thick with any chopped cold meat. The mush is then set away to get cold and is fried.

Fish Soup.—Reserve the water in which fish has been cooked, or make fresh stock from the bones and trimmings of fish. Add from the latter strain carefully before using. Chop fine two leeks, a tablespoonful of parsley, two carrots, three onions and a bay leaf, add to a quart of fish stock with seasoning of salt and pepper. Ten minutes before serving add a half dozen oysters with their liquor. Sprinkle parsley over the soup just before serving.

Chicken Livers With Mushrooms.—Cleanse six chicken livers and peel six large mushrooms, chop them and simmer in a cupful of sauce a half hour. Prepare a batter of two tablespoonfuls of flour, a pinch of salt, one egg, salt and pepper, add the chopped livers and mushrooms, stir well and drop by spoonfuls in a little hot fat in a frying pan. Cook until a golden brown on both sides. Drain on brown paper before serving.

Italian Tomato Sauce.—Slice one onion and cook it in a half cupful of oil until a golden brown. Add two cupfuls of stewed and strained tomatoes, a bay leaf, two cloves and simmer half an hour. Mix one and a half tablespoonfuls of browned flour with two tablespoonfuls of water, add to the sauce and cook three minutes, season with salt and pepper and serve.

GOOD THINGS WORTH TRYING.

Baked tomatoes are not well enough known as a most desirable dish. Peel and cut in thick slices eight firm tomatoes. Put a layer of them in a deep baking dish, dot with butter or sprinkle with olive oil, add a little grated cheese and a bit of chopped onion. Repeat the layers until the tomatoes are all used. Cover with buttered bread crumbs and bake three-quarters of an hour.

Cabbage Rolls.—Take two cupfuls of seasoned cooked meat, seasoning with onion, Worcestershire sauce, or any desired flavor, depending on the kind of meat. Moisten the meat with gravy and spread a small portion on large cabbage leaves, roll up and tie, place in a pan close together, cover with stock and cook until the cabbage is tender. Have meat may be used, but longer cooking will be needed. Thicken the stock for gravy and pour around the rolls. Garnish with pickled chopped beets.

Minestrone.—Take three pints of well seasoned stock, add a cupful of cabbage finely shredded, one small onion, a half cupful each of green peas and string beans. Simmer gently until the vegetables are tender. Serve without straining. Sprinkle with grated cheese.

Chestnut Creams.—Boil and shell and blanch a pound of large chestnuts. Put them through a ricer, add the juice of two oranges slowly, sweeten to taste and stir in a half pint of heavy whipped cream. Serve in sherbet glasses, garnished with whole chestnuts or a touch of tangy jelly.

Fruit Cream.—Cook the juice of three lemons and three oranges with two cupfuls of sugar, set aside to cool. Add two tablespoonfuls of gelatine, with milk, that best over hot water until dissolved. Whip two cupfuls of cream, add the fruit juice and gelatine, stir until well blended, then pile high in a deep dish or mold if preferred.

SAVORY GERMAN DISHES.

If there is any dish which the German cook excels it is in the line of sweet soups, as well as those of a savory character.

Potato and Onion Soup.—Cook one large potato and four onions together in boiling water to cover. When quite tender put through a sieve. Reserve half the water they were cooked and add it to the remainder with enough more to make a quart. Cook the potato and onion pulp with a half cupful of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of butter and a pint of milk, stir until boiling then add the potato and onion water, season well with salt and pepper and serve sprinkled with chopped parsley. This is a most acceptable soup for a cold winter night.

Liver Dumplings.—Chop together a half pound of liver and a quarter of a pound of bacon, both raw. Beat two eggs lightly and add a fourth of a cupful of butter. Then add the meat, seasoning of herbs, parsley and salt and pepper and a cupful and a half of bread crumbs. The mixture should be just stiff enough to make a mixture which can be formed into balls. Drop into well-seasoned boiling stock in the hands and cook in boiling water 15 minutes.

Sweet Cabbage.—Remove the outer leaves of cabbage and put to cook in boiling water two whole onions. Drain and spread the leaves apart and place between them the following forcemeat. One pint of bread crumbs, moistened with soup stock, a half pound of sausage and one finely chopped onion, salt, pepper and nutmeg to taste; fill the cavities in the cabbage firmly with taps and put into a deep baking dish. Pour over it a cupful of stock and cover closely and cook until tender. Taste from time to time during the cooking. Serve very hot.

Fried Cream Balls.—Mash two cupfuls of potato very smoothly, add to them a teaspoonful of chopped parsley, one egg, one salt and pepper. Beat until light. Form into balls the size of a walnut, roll in bread crumbs and fry a golden brown in deep fat.

Supremity of Business.

There never was a time in all his history when our national life has been so interwoven in the transactions of business transactions as it does this. The basic principle of greatness and permanency of a people, of a nation, of a democratic passes when we discover militarism only a dream. The world's balance is moving to the world how inconsequential are those things which have been for so long placed in the building up of a nation, such as military power and frowning fortifications along the border, for business is something that concerns individuals and the home welfare, and requires no apology in this day of greatness. Put them in contrast with another name for "Americanization."—"How's Business?" Successful Business Men, in National Magazine.

Character Building.

A Sugar Plant.

A lady called for the natives can be found extensively cultivated in Australasia, grows wild in Paraguay. It is remarkable for its sweetness. Its name is Stevia Rebaudiana, and it is a sweet sugar, as well as a sweet medicine. It does not produce a surprisingly sweet savor, which, it said, lasts for hours. The medicinal power is much greater than that of sugar. Recent investigations indicate that the nectarous element in this plant closely resembles that of the licorice root.

To Get Rid of Pimples.

Smear the affected surface with Cuticura Ointment. Let it remain five minutes, then wash off with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing a few minutes. LIKELY TO BECOME GREATEST APPLE GROWING REGION IN ALL MICHIGAN

By H. J. DANIELS.

From present indications it would seem that the highest point in Lower peninsula of Michigan is destined to become one of the greatest apple growing regions in the union state. The highest point below the straits is six miles south of Cadillac, and is the most thickly settled rural portion of northwestern Michigan. There the ground rises to a height of 1,600 feet above sea level, which means more than twelve hundred feet above the level of Lake Michigan.

Years ago of brothers, Germans by the name of Brahm, came to Michigan and bought practically all the land included in the highly elevated section. So much of the land is so steep that it was found to be almost impossible to raise ordinary crops upon it, and it was then learned that apples were the most productive crop which could be raised. Now all of the land in the section and miles around are covered with apple trees, and it was because of the success achieved in the growing of apples in that section that the movement started three years ago to make Cadillac and the surrounding country the greatest apple growing region on earth, we of course hope.

The Brahm brothers, who own nearly all of the land in question, have always specialized on certain varieties and are getting the fruit from sale of their fruit. The great majority of Cadillac people who store away a barrel or more of fruit in the fall secure "Brahms" apples, and so great has their business in this direction become that one of them, Adolph Brahm, operates a fruit house in Cadillac which does nothing but handle home fruit grown upon his own and his brothers' farms.

There is one school in the Brahm neighborhood which has been closed for two years, and it happened that every one of them had broken for his last name. A German family lived in that district, and the pupils in that school were all of German descent. Some of them had broken for his last name. A German family lived in that district, and the pupils in that school were all of German descent. Some of them had broken for his last name. Wunsch offers were members of this family. Each one of the brothers has at least 500 acres of table, and is fall to warrant the shipment of a single car. Local dealers by the low price to increased production in Ohio and Indiana, and also inroads of Colorado potatoes into Nebraska, which not usually been a good Michigan potato market.

With the good price of beans this winter, and the likelihood that Europe will call on the United States for a good share of our beans, local farmers think that acreage of potatoes will be cut materially next spring and the bean acreage increased correspondingly.

DEMAND FOR FARM PROPERTY.

Real estate business, so far as farm

WHERE THE CRANBERRIES GROW

Cranberry Harvest at Walton.

When you have been eating your cranberry with your turkey, has it ever occurred to you where the great crop of Michigan cranberries come from? The Cranberry is at Walton junction, where the two divisions of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad cross. Thousands of bushels are picked there every fall. When the harvest is on there are lots of people journey to Walton, which is not far from Traverse City, to take part in the gathering of the juicy crop.

The gathering of the crop is not unlike the huckleberry harvest in the same part of the state. People camp out, and make a great business of the berry picking. It is a great time of the year. Whole families take part, from father down to little boys and girls. Columbian men have their representatives on the ground to buy up all the pickers will sell, for there is always large enough to afford a good profit to the pickers, three and four dollars a day being the common thing. The crews that get together manage to have a good time in connection with the harvest, which lasts two and three weeks each fall.

property is concerned, has been boming in the vicinity of Fremont this season. Many buyers and prospective buyers from several states have been visiting that town and those who have not bought have gone away with a good impression of the country, and many promised to come again in the spring.

A local company, which does a good share of the real estate business in Fremont, reports that so far as it has been concerned this has been a good year, summer, July and August were dull, with prospects mostly, but September and October have more than averaged two and three farms a week, in spite of the demand, most of the farms sold have been comparatively smaller than usual, most of the buyers being men who have made money in the business of fruit, especially apples, and do not care for large farms.

The buyers have been mostly from Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin and Iowa, and a good proportion of those who have farms in those states, the men said, are going to come to Fremont and get good land for a third and even less than the real value.

Farm Buildings of Charles McDougall Near Petoskey.

Petoskey is formed the length and breadth of the land as a resort region, Little Traverse bay, on which it is located, being one of the most beautiful shores of water in America, and the proximity of the Bliss city to the famous resort university center, play View, has made Petoskey quite worth while to thousands of people annually for years.

Petoskey is also famous as an agricultural section, there being within easy driving distance of the place scores of as beautiful farms as lie under the sun in all Michigan. Good land and good men to work it, is the story of Emmet county, a large part of the state. Diversified farming is conducted there by most of the farmers, very little specializing being in vogue yet. General good luck with the farmers of that section, I should say, been the experience of the farmers in this district.

that a good muskrat hide would sell for. Now a good mink hide sells for six to ten dollars, the fur of a skunk commands five dollars and a musrat fifty cents.

Trapping is not the only source of farmer boy living near Manistique, for he can have made between $100 and $150 last season from bounties on crows and the disposing of their hides. Much money is made by the business of harbearing animals in that part of the state in greatness, I believe, not a corresponding increase in prices paid makes the business look about as remunerative.

MANY REASONS FOR ITS FAME

Orchard Exhibit at a West Michigan Fair.

In northwestern Michigan this fall a number of orchard companies made exhibits of fine apples at various fairs, making the exhibit, in fact, another as an object lesson to the farmers of that section, the object lesson showing off in an effective manner the possibilities in fruit in that part of the state. The accompanying illustration shows with what care growers of apples sort and pack their good stock. Oceana and Washington now rank second and third in Michigan for the production of the good fruit. Michigan ranks fifth in the list of apple producing states, the fruit being in great demand, not only at home but in other states, who can come to Fremont and get good land for a third and even less than the real value.

HOW WESTERN MICHIGAN GROWS

The purchasing power of the people of western Michigan is increasing. This is because their industrial efficiency is being increased and because they are producing a greater quantity of wealth per individual. The western Michigan territory is inhabited by people who are more intelligent, alert and progressive and these people are constantly making efforts to improve their standards, both economic and social. They are continually ascending up and at the same time learning how they can maintain the higher rate of progress.

The western Michigan territory is nearly as large as the five states of Delaware and Maryland put together, although at the present time its population is only about one-third of the combined population of the two states. The square mile area of western Michigan is 11,093, and its population, at the time of the last count, was a little over half a million. The average density of population for the entire 20 counties comprising the western Michigan country is 46.6. In Delaware there are 94.7 people for each square mile and in Maryland 139.2 people per square mile. Kent county with the city of Grand Rapids has the largest population. Here there are 400 people per to average 185.1 for each square mile. Ottawa county, which is the most sparsely settled of the 20, there are but 8.5 people for each square mile.

There are 30 cities in western Michigan, with a total population of 324,304, and there are 14 villages with a total population of 52,545. There are in the rural sections of the territory, 205,218 inhabitants. These cities are linked together by a transportation system that makes each a near neighbor of all the others.

During the ten years ending with 1910, the population of western Michigan increased 89,218. The greatest percentage of gain was made in Charlevoix county, where the increase amounted to 72.8 per cent. The increases for Kent county and Muskegon were 29.1 per cent and 24.6 per cent. The county gain has come of the excess of births over deaths amounts to nearly five thousand individuals.

More than a majority of the western Michigan people are now urban. In three of the twenty counties the native white portion of the population is more than 50 per cent and in 13 of the 20 counties does the foreign born population comprise one-fourth of the total number of inhabitants. This large native white population is a guarantee of a generous American ideals and customs. Also it is a potential force for American products.

Taken as a whole, the people of western Michigan have a common school education. In no county is the percentage of illiteracy over six per cent of the population over ten years of age. In ten of the counties the percentage of illiteracy over six per cent. This is a showing that is highly encouraging the future needs of the people.

Over ninety per cent of the entire population of western Michigan lives than ten per cent in hotels and boarding houses. This means that there is and will be a large and constant demand for the raw and finished materials that go to make dwellings and to them habitable. Better than 87 per cent of the homes in western Michigan own their own homes and better than 55 per cent of the people living in the cities and towns are the owners of their homes. These figures indicate a permanent population, and one which is not easily induced to migrate in search of the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow.

The exact figures are not available, it is certain that a large per cent of the people of western Michigan, particularly the people living in the counties along the shore of Lake Michigan, are engaged in fruit growing, as well as in general agriculture. In this connection, I will be worth while to remember that some years ago the success of general farmers and farmers in New York state was analyzed and it was discovered that the fruit farmers income was larger than that of any of his brothers. This gave the fruit growing industry power and it was further discovered that many things which were luxuries in the homes of his neighbors, were necessities to him. Without question, western Michigan is going to become more and more of a fruit section, and the purchasing power of its inhabitants is going to materially increase. Eventually the western Michigan farmer will live on a farm, but he plans as the well-to-do class in the cities do today. In a few years more western Michigan will be famous because of its large orchards, its fine farm buildings, and its prosperous people who will demand the best that the world has to offer.

SEA HORSE A RARITY.

Sea horses are rarely found in the great lakes, but the above picture shows one that was wrested ashore during the summer storms. These animals are more likely to be found in the vicinity of summer resorts than elsewhere along the shores of the lakes. As a rule they are peaceful fish and give the resorters very little trouble.

Raises Fall Strawberries.

W. F. Thomas of Boyne City is developing a special industry which promises to bring him big returns. He is the growing and marketing of fall strawberries. Since the 25th day of July he has picked and sold two crates of berries, the last being marketed October 11, and these berries have brought him 35 cents a quart, which is a somewhat better price than that ordinarily paid for strawberries. Since the 25th day of July he has picked and sold two quarts of berries, the last being marketed October 11, and these berries have brought him 35 cents a quart, which is a somewhat better price than that ordinarily paid for strawberries. Since the 25th day of July he has picked and sold two quarts of berries, the last being marketed October 11, and these berries have brought him 35 cents a quart, which is a somewhat better price than that ordinarily paid for strawberries. The plants were set out about the first of May. They are of the Pearson variety, and cover a third of an acre. The blossoms were kept picked until the latter part of July, when the first berries were harvested. The berries are large, are well formed and of a glossy appearance. They are firm and have an excellent flavor even in cold weather. The indications are that Mr. Tindall will be able to make several more pickings from the patch before the season closes. He has been trying different varieties of strawberries, and has found that he has at last hit upon the right one for this climate.

Special Teachers of Agriculture.

Six schools in 13 of northwestern Michigan counties are giving courses in agriculture with special instructors. Charlevoix heads the list of counties with agricultural teachers in the Boyne City and East Jordan high schools. The other counties and high schools are: Grand Traverse, Mancelona, Bellaire, Frankfort; Manistee, Manistee High school; Mason, Ludington; Oceana, Hart; Oceana, Hart; Newaygo, Fremont; Kent, Grand Rapids; Muskegon, Muskegon High school; Montcalm, Greenville. Several other schools are giving four year courses and all will as soon as the students are ready for work. The significance of the above facts is that in a few years there will be a large number of young men and women in western Michigan who will be well informed regarding scientific agriculture.

Returns From Alfalfa.

O. F. Marsh, a successful alfalfa grower at Hollon, Muskegon county, has harvested $1,000.50 worth of alfalfa from four acres of land this year. This is a return of $250.10 an acre for the year, or a return of $125.05 an acre a year. He has kept a careful record of the six years, and he says, allowing for shrinkage, amounted to 195,850 pounds, or almost 98 tons. The hay has been valued at one cent a pound, which is but $10 a ton, a reasonable price.

Record is Great Aid.

While a milk record is a great aid in detecting the boarders in a herd it should be used with good judgement. A good cow may have an "off year." This is one of the reasons why it pays to continue cow testing year after year.

Starting With Sheep.

If you have barely tried keeping a few sheep just make the start now. They are easy to keep and return handsome profits. They also perform good service in eradicating weeds.

VITAL FORCE
Disease germs are on every hand. They are in the very air we breathe. A system "run down" is a prey for them. One must have vital force to withstand them. Vital force depends on digestion—on whether or not food nourishes—on the quality of blood coursing through the body.

FOR THE COOK.

How to Carve Out These Recipes For an Economical Meal.

(Save Scraps.)

Cold Meat Warmed up Casserole.
Lima Beans. Sweet Potato Surprise
Lemon Meringue Pudding.

Clam Frappe.

Wash two dozen clams thoroughly and put them in a stewpan with half a cup of cold water. Cover closely and simmer until the shells open. Strain the liquid and freeze to a mush. A small amount may be easily frozen in a baking powder can by nestling it in a tin pail and packing with ice and salt in equal proportions. The mixture will freeze in about half an hour and should be stirred once or twice during the freezing. Serve in glasses.

Cold Meats Warmed up Casserole.

Cold roast lamb, beef veal, chicken, tongue, etc., may be heated on delicately in the casserole. Heat the gravy that is left over to almost boil and season well and then put in slices of lamb or beef and let them get warmed through. Do not cook them. In the meantime make gravy a rich beef juice could be used. For boiled or fricasseed chicken have ready some boiled rice and put this first in the casserole. Take off the skin of the chicken and lay it place the pieces on top of the rice, pour over gravy or bits of butter and seasoning if needed and a dust of curry powder. Then cover the casserole and let the rice and chicken heat in the cooking point. When heating the lamb and beef slices the casserole must not be covered, as the steam toughens the meat.

Sweet Potato Surprise.

Season two capfuls of baked sweet potatoes that have been pressed through a colander with salt and pepper, and add a beaten egg and a little hot cream. Form into balls, and into each press a pitted prune into which two walnut meats have been forced. The prune should not be visible. Dip the balls in cracker and egg. Then brown the potato balls in deep fat. Drain and serve at once.

Lemon Meringue Pudding.

Add a tablespoonful of butter, a cupful of water, two heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch dissolved in a little cold water and stir this into a cupful of two lemons to a quart of boiling water. Heat the yolks of three eggs and add to the boiling mixture. Pour into a baking dish and bake in a pan of water until the custard is set. Make a meringue of the whipped whites of the eggs and three or four tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, beating in well. Brown, chill and serve.

Northern Michigan

East Jordan Herald: On Saturday evening Dec. 12, there passed away, at her home in this city, Mrs. Catherine Lalonde, one of the oldest residents of East Jordan. She was born in Montreal Canada, and came to East Jordan forty-five years ago. At the time of her death she was eighty-nine years old.

Bellaire Independent: Another chapter in the long litigation between Sam I Brockway et. al. and the Hydraulic Power & Light Co. was written today when the defendant company appeared before Judge Lamb of the Wexford circuit to cause why it should not be held in contempt for failing to obey the order of the court to lower its dam across the Intermediate river at this place. This time the honors seemed to be with the defendant company and on motion of Brockway counsel the case adjourned until the February term of court.

Petoskey News: The first known instance of a Northern Michigan lighthouse keeper being arrested for illegal fishing, occurred Friday when Louis Belonges, keeper of the light at Isle Aux Galets, better known as "Skillagalee" light, was arrested by Corbet Doherty, under sheriff, on complaint of Charles N. Smith, deputy state game and fish warden, the charge being that Belonges indulged in commercial fishing without first having his gasoline boat registered as required by law and without having a government fish license. Belonges was brought to Petoskey and Saturday morning pleaded guilty to the charge when brought before Justice Kreger and paid a fine and costs amounting to $41. When Mr. Smith went to the lighthouse some time ago to make a search, Belonges is alleged to have driven him off and threatened him with a gun. He refused to allow Mr. Smith to search the premises, giving as his reason that the lighthouse and grounds were government property. Mr. Smith has been at work on the case for over a year, having learned last winter that Belonges was selling fish in large quantities. Shortly after Mr. Smith's visit to the lighthouse Belonges is alleged to have secured a license and in other ways conformed to the rules and regulations for commercial fishermen. The case has attracted wide attention among fishermen all over the lakes.

Boyne Citizen: A wire was received this noon that F. F. McIntyre died this morning in St. Petersburg, Fla., of apoplexy. Details of the death are not known but it is reported as coming without warning, he not having been ill previous to the stroke. Mr. McIntyre will return with the body to this city for interment leaving Florida tonight. Mr. McIntyre, who was a gentleman well advanced in years, came to this city thirty years ago in March. He opened up a hardware store on Main street and through his ability as a financier soon had a comfortable savings which was invested in real estate about the city and sound securities. He was one of the largest realty owners in the city and a director in the First National Bank. For many years he had held an office on the school board and was considered one of the most conservative business men of the city. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church in which he was an earnest worker and one of the principal supporters. The hardware business which Mr. McIntyre launched thrived and about ten years ago was sold to Boylan & Green. Later Chas. Moore purchased the Green interest and shortly after took over the Boylan stock. He, in company with Mrs. McIntyre have gone to Florida for the past several winters, returning in the spring and dividing the summer between here and Bay View. He left this city en route to Florida on his last trip, December 2. Besides the widow, the deceased leaves a son and daughter of this city, and a brother of Eldorado, Kansas. The son, L. A. McIntyre is at present conducting a hardware store at the former location of his father's store.

THE MAKING OF A HARBOR

Among the improvements that have been made by the people of Charlevoix and vicinity, to add to and make available, the many attractions and natural advantages so generously bestowed by nature, there is perhaps none that has been more far reaching or that has demanded in its accomplishment more prolonged exertion and determination than has the improvement of the rivers connecting Pine and Round Lakes and Lake Michigan.

One who has not seen the conditions as they were in the old time can hardly imagine the great changes that have been made in our river and harbor since that day. Pine River is said to have the distinction of being the shortest river in world. In a state of nature it was from 50 to 60 feet wide and in places affording not over two feet of water. It was also quite crooked, having been materially straightened below the Argo Milling plant and again at the mouth, the outlet prior to 1870 being about where the present water works building is located, the shores at that time bristled with trees that had fallen out over the water the tops of which had been removed so as to allow canoes and small Mackinaw boats to pass up into Round Lake.

The fall from Pine Lake to Lake Michigan was four feet, being about equal between the two rivers. This fall produced a very rapid current on the shoals and navigation, even by canoes and small boats, was very laborious.

A tow path had been cleared along the south bank of the river and a team used at the mouth and a man put ashore with a line and canal boat fashion they would work their way up into Round Lake, even the sturdy and accomplished boatmen of those days, being forced to avail themselves of this aid to navigation.

The surveyors in the original survey called Pine Lake by the name of Long Lake and the upper river, Round Lake and lower river were collectively denominated "the outlet." There appears in the notes of the original survey the following, "The soil of this township (T. 34 N. R. 8 W.) is sandy, the S. W. part is mostly swamp, the outlet to Long Lake widens about midway its course to Lake Michigan, it however affords two feet of water entirely through but in some places very deep."

Certified this 22d day of Oct. 1841

Ch. W. Cathcart, Dep. Sur."

The difficulty of getting boats up the river was the cause of the early fishermen locating their plants between the river and north or two mile point, one plant was also located to the north near the present Scott cottage the remains of which could be seen only a few years ago.

During the year 1854 Fox & Rose had constructed a pile dock about 900 feet long running out to the north of the present north pier and a number of steamers between Buffalo and Chicago touched regularly at this dock. The immediate vicinity of Charlevoix, even most of that now within the city limits was at that time densely timbered and cord-wood was gotten out during the winter and hauled to the wood yard which constituted the entire frontage on the mouth of the river and the Beach Hotel.

In 1857 it was found desirable to extend the field of operation in the wood line by obtaining a supply from the shores of Pine Lake and a small tug, the Commodore Nutt was purchased and in May 1857 was hauled over dry ground, at about where the present channel is located, and placed in the river nearly in front of the present Harris (Baker) cottage, from that point was sufficient water to just float the bridge, where the tug was harnessed and made to dredge her way into Round Lake, the whole length of the upper channel had to be dredged out in like manner and it was the first part of July before the tug was forced through into Pine Lake; the cord-wood was then loaded on scows and towed down through the old river and landed to the east of the present Charlevoix Lumber company's lumber office and thence was taken by a team (ox), with a horse for motive power, out onto the dock.

In 1860 Rodington Nelson & Co. erected the present saw-mill of the Charlevoix Lumber Company and the local demand for lumber being quite limited and the demand soon supplied there arose a somewhat urgent demand for facilities to mark the surplus products and the improvement and deepening of the river into Round Lake attracted the first attention. It was recognized that any improvement of the channel, to have any degree of permanence would require a protection or breakwater to keep the sand from filling the channel during the frequent storms. Accordingly about 200 feet of the Fox & Rose pile dock was filled with slabs from the mill, the tug was stationed in force a cleated or some five or six feet of depth to lake of equal depth and on October 5th, 1860 the little vessel Mendota was towed into Round Lake and soon cleared with a full load consisting of a few thousand feet of lumber. The period of navigation even in this limited way was extraordinarily lived for the fall storms played havoc with the slab protection pier, that without notice or apology to the management distributed its component parts far and wide along the beach.

Upon the floor to my left hand
No sunbeam through the window streamed
To cheer my soul—I was sad and dreary

Local and Personal Notes

"Bud" Nordrum, of Detroit, is a holiday home-comer.

The board of supervisors will convene at the court house next Monday.

Olaf Nordrum made a flying trip to the upper peninsula last week on business.

The steamer Beaver made a trip to Old Mission Monday with a cargo of hay.

Otto Hines returned home from Florida last week—from magnolia blossoms to snow drifts.

Chas. Gordon, who has been an engineer on a Chicago tug, is home to remain until spring.

Harvey Campbell, chief engineer of the steamer Omaha, has arrived home for the remainder of the winter.

Mrs. Henry Buelling, of Woodland, Mich., is spending the holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Newman.

The steamer Beaver has laid up and the St. James tug Two Sisters will make mail trips as long as navigation conditions will permit.

Jos. Shores has established a camp near Phelps where he is getting out 1,000 cords of Rock Product Company stone on the Charlevoix Lum ber Company tract.

Mrs. Eva Cummings, of Dowagiac, who has been visiting her parents, Capt. and Mrs. A. G. Aldrich, was called home Saturday by the serious illness of her sister, Mrs. Ball.

After an illness of about two weeks, with what was considered a slight attack of typhoid fever, Dr John M Hall, the founder of Bay View Assembly, died Sunday at his home in Detroit.

The Festival of St. John the Evangelist was celebrated by the Charlevoix Masons Monday night by the installation of officers, followed by a perch supper, and the event was a most enjoyable one.

Homer Brady and wife, of Leland, are here for a month with their parents Mr. and Mrs. High Brady and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Woods. Mrs. Woods also entertained her daughter Mrs. Mary Zoss, of East Jordan, on Christmas.

A house on the south terrace occupied by a family named Thorp, and owned by Martha J. Ayers, was destroyed by fire Saturday noon. Most of the contents were saved. Sunday night another alarm from the same vicinity called out the fire department. This time it was the home of Thos. Taylor. A lace curtain caught fire, but the blaze was extinguished before much damage was done.

The Christian Science Monitor still continues to come to our desk, undiminished in its fullness and cleanliness, and unalloyed in its editorial brilliancy. When we have done with its news and special columns, we find diversion in reading its pages of English and Paris advertisements, which testify to its cosmopolitan patronage and influence. The Monitor is a marvelous newspaper. It has its own style of "make-up" which devotes the last page entirely to editorials—suggesting the thought that the best is reserved for the last. Its review of the various phases of the war are the best that we read, and the page devoted to South American affairs, which are just now of special interest, is doing much toward bringing those interesting sections nearer to us.

SLEEPING BEAR IN LAND SLIDE

Party of Life Savers Had Passed Over the Spot Few Minutes Before the Land Made its Disappearance

One of the queerest freaks of nature that has occurred in this region in years, says a Glen Haven special, happened Sunday morning when a portion of the extreme end of Sleeping Bear Point, a mile north of here, disappeared into Lake Michigan. A number of the lifesavers of the station had been attending a party in the town and had returned by the path up over the point at two o'clock Sunday morning and on reaching the light house had looked back and had failed to see the land over which they had come. They started out to investigate and found that a large portion, estimated between fifteen and twenty acres had gone into the lake. A fisherman's shanty that was about five rods from the shore had been carried with the sand. The owner lost nearly $200 worth of nets that had been stored for the winter. The next morning a number of people were in a boat with a fat pike pole and no evidence could be found of the shanty or its contents. There is no reason given for such an occurrence, as there is no live water on the land. It is thought that the strong lake currents might have caused a heavy swirl that in some way had undermined the sand and so had weakened the seemingly solid land. The appearance is now as though some giant hand had carved the sand off, molding a sheer cut of from twenty-five to sixty feet of the land that has been in this peculiar position for ages.

Ever since the French fur traders began to travel up and down the shores of Lake Michigan in seventeenth century this "gigantic dune has been referred to. It is interesting because of its historical significance and geological formation and possibly have been viewed by those in search of wonderful sights more than any other object on the Michigan shores. In some places it is over six hundred feet above the water line, and at one has ever been able to account for the peculiar shape.

REGION MADE GOOD

FUTURE FORETOLD BY LATE ALEXANDER WINCHELL

Climate in Early Days Was Found Suitable For Growing Peach Crop

Michigan's great geologist, Alexander Winchell, says the Traverse City Record-Eagle, spoke in words of approval of the Grand Traverse region as an agricultural section as early as 1869. In May of that year he made a trip along the east shore of Lake Michigan from Grand Haven to Northport and while waiting for a boat for Charlevoix. During his stay at Northport he recorded in his daily journal his observations and conclusions, which viewed in the light of present facts, are remarkably accurate. Forty-five years ago he predicted that this would be an agricultural section and he argued the matter with a stranger whom he met at Northport. He also noted at that time that the peach could be grown here. His exact record for May 24 of 1869, as copied from his journal, is as follows:

"At this place I find that the peach buds, which had been reported entirely killed by the early cold of last fall, are slightly in bloom. The cold was worse at Traverse City (usually is, they say here) than at Northport, and consequently the fruit tender growth has been killed in both places. Have had here a long discussion with a gentleman named J. C. Waterbury from Sanilac county who asserts, and has predicted, he says from the first, that the Grand Traverse region is not, and never will be, a good agricultural district. His views are based on the lightness of the soil together with the severity of the winters. He also asserts that the kind of timber with which a region is clothed in the natural state is no criterion whatever of the strength of the soil or its usefulness for agricultural purposes. He says that facts sustain him and that great numbers are leaving the country after repeated failures of their crops, everybody being willing and anxious to sell their land. I claimed that the soil has never yet been known to become exhausted, especially when farmed with ordinary skill and foresight, that the winters observed for a series of years by meteorological instruments are shown to be less severe than at Grand Haven, or even Hillsdale county; then anybody will sell out in even the best agricultural district if they can find buyers at their price; that the first occupants of a new country rarely remain long enough to see the best condition of our farms and that the census reports instead of showing a retrograde, are contributing the best proof of the rapid settlement and growth of the region."

MOUNTAIN CLIMBING.

It is a Great Tonic After a Life of Physical Inactivity.

In several respects mountain climbing is a peculiarly wholesome form of athletic sport for the large number of persons whose vocations are sedentary. The indoor life which these people commonly lead and the protection from even the slightest rigors of climate which their mode of business and pursuits or work afford them are not likely to render them oversensitive to the extremes of weather. It is perfectly such inclement weather that an occasional trip to the backwoods and an Alpine excursion be most refreshing recuperation and stimulation, according to physicians. The heart is called on to exert itself to a degree which, in an otherwise healthy subject, will be followed only by the invigoration characteristic of most exercise. The advantage is not confined to a single organ, for the respiratory mechanism, the entire nutrition of the body as well as the cardiac and circulatory apparatus, and the general metabolic processes (a parently benefit in ways not readily definable in scientific terms. In addition to an inalienable feeling of well being considerable skill is required in certain of the performances of mountain climbing or other feats of athletic sport. The combination has shown its wholesome and invigorating influence on many an individual suffering from the "ills" of a life of physical inactivity.—Journal of the American Medical Association.

An Argument Against Mail Orders

One of the best expositions of the evils of the mail order habit produced in a long time comes from the men of a German farmer in Iowa, who shows that this habit, if followed, is likely to spell disaster for the customers. His story, given to a farm paper, is as follows:

"We farmers need awakening to the fact that we have unmistakably reached the period where we must think and plan. I am one of the slow German farmers that had to be shown and I am now giving my experience that others may profit, for knowledge is more expensive now than ten years ago.

"Twenty-three years ago I began my farm career. I had an old team and $50.00. Our furniture was mostly all home-made—chairs, cupboard and a lounge made from dry goods boxes, neatly covered with ten-cent cretonne by my girl wife. We rented eighty acres. Being a boy of good habits, I got all I needed on credit, and got cords of our home merchants on credit, until fall crops were sold. The first year was a wet season and I did not make enough to pay my creditors. I went to each on date of promise and explained conditions, paying as much as possible, and they all carried the balance over another year. They continued to accommodate me until I was able to buy a forty acre piece of my own.

"As soon as I owned these few acres the mail order houses began sending me their catalogs and I began sending my loose change to them, letting my accounts stand in my home town, where I had gotten my accommodation when I needed it.

"We then had one of the thriftiest little villages in the state—good lines of business in all the branches, merchants who were willing to help an honest fellow over a bad year, and a town full of people who came twice a week to trade and visit. Our little country town supported a library, high-school, band, base-ball team and we had a big celebration every year.

"A farm near a live town soon doubles in value. I sold my forty at a big advance and bought an eighty, gradually adding to it until I had 240 acres of the best land in Iowa. I then felt no need of asking favors and found it easy to patronize the mail order agents that came almost weekly to our door. I regret to say that I was the first in the country to make up a neighborhood bill and send it to a mail order house. Though we got bit every one in awhile, we got in the habit of sending away for stuff. Gradually our merchants lessened their stock of goods—for lack of patronage. Finally we began to realize that when we needed a bolt quickly for machinery, or clothing for sickness or death, we had to wait not days but weeks for which we wasn't patient. One by one our merchants moved to places where their wares were appreciated and men of less energy moved in. Gradually our town had gone down, our business houses were 'lacky' in appearance, a number are empty, our schools, churches and walks are going down, we have no business done in the town, and therefore no taxes to keep things up. Hotel is closed for lack of travel, go down into the depot when the train pulls in and you see the sequel in mail order packages.

"Nine years ago my farm was worth $125 an acre, unimproved, today I'd have a matter to sell it at $187.00 an acre. It is too far from a live town—my grain farmer has said that wants to buy. He wants a place near schools and churches where his children can have advantages. I have advertised to the fact that in helping to pull the town down, it has cost me $5,000.00 in nine years."

Northern Michigan

Raymond Wallrecht, of Central Lake, has been appointed postmaster for the local office. He will take charge in the course of a few weeks, or as soon as the postmaster can be attended to. A. J. Gibson, who has been postmaster for several years, will probably remain in Central Lake, having decided of late to be a resident of that place.

In every town, village and city, sadness is mingled with the glad Christmas spirit and East Jordan is no exception as one of her well known citizens was burned to death in a fire Wednesday morning which destroyed the livery barn of William Lanway. George Rose, proprietor of the barn, was asleep in the office and was overcome with smoke and so badly burned that he died shortly after being rescued.

John McNamara was instantly killed in Boyne Falls last Friday when his clothing became caught in a shaft, throwing him with great force against the wall and badly mutilating him. McNamara had gone up the conveyor to break up a "choke" when the front of his coat caught in a sprocket which drove the shaft. There is but six inch space between the shaft and the wall. One arm was torn completely from the socket.

Boyne Citizen: Lyle Elsworth, employe of the Boyne City Lumber company of this city, narrowly escaped instant death yesterday morning when his clothing became caught in the coupling of the shaft driving the live rollers at the mill. He was endeavoring to push a slab from the rollers, and leaning over them came too close to the revolving coupling. His clothing became fast and he was drawn in until his body was severely torn about the abdomen. The injury did not reach to the vitals, he becoming tired before drawn in far enough.

AFTER THE WRECK

By ARTHUR CLEVES.

Jim Driscoll found himself upon his feet, staring at the wreck of the train in which he had been traveling. All about him lay the dead and injured, and the carriages, which were beginning to catch fire, illumined the night with a lurid glare.

It was in the middle of the mountain district of Pennsylvania. Jim could hail his little town in Illinois to go to New York. It was his first journey in ten years. A discovery of oil upon his property had given Jim the promise of wealth, and he had set out to negotiate with a company.

Jim Driscoll, at fifty, was spotted the crabbedest old man in Boxville. If Mary and he had had children he might have discovered things is not wholly a tale of tears. As it was, he was a cross-grained. He knew it, too; knew that Mary shrank from him and feared him. Jim was loyally proud of her. He knew that his presence anywhere chilled the mirth that the children based also, that his solitude bore gloaded him.

He glorried in it. He had the reputation of a vindictive man, and he gloried in that. He was cold, fetched hard as nails, and he hugged his sinister reputation to his breast.

The wreck had come suddenly. It had unsettled him. Of course, he was not going to relieve himself in any of the injured. That was not Driscoll's way. But the physical shaking had unsettled the habits of years, and for the first time in years Driscoll began to speak much of himself.

His thoughts were changed by hearing a child's cry at his side. Stooping down, he saw a pretty little girl of eight or nine years, lying beside the track. Near her lay the body of a man. He had been killed in the disaster, and the girl, who seemed only slightly injured, was screaming out her grief in hysterics and sobbing.

Dausach his hard exterior Driscoll had a heart tender in one respect. He loved children. That was why he scowled at them, to hide his feelings. A straight, plain undershirt of satin, with under a cloth tunic, has solved the problem of changing many dainty and velvet dresses of last winter into styles introduced for the present season. The tunic of plaited chiffon worn over the skirt of last year's silk gown and the introduction of a wide girdle about the waist have helped cut immensely in altering afternoon dresses.

Nothing has been more helpful to the economically inclined than the very fashionable band trimmings of fur and for cloths. By means of these tunics have been lengthened, the fashionable collars and cuffs reproduced on jackets, pretty turbands to match suits made possible. All the patterns books abound in suggestions for clever remodeling.

An attractive dress shown in the picture may be copied, using a last year's dress as a foundation if the owner had the forethought to buy a little extra length of goods with a view to remodeling her gown. Where a provision of this kind has not been made, it is best to make an undergirdle of satin and convert the dark skirt into a tunic. Or if the cloth skirt is very narrow the undergirdle may be finished with a panel of satin up the front and the cloth tunic set in at each side of this.

Very wide silk braids are fashionable for trimming and like the bands of fur and fur cloth, have been most useful in the remodeling of gowns. Roman striped ribbons have been used to make the handsome collar and cuff sets with which many brighten up their dark cloth tailored suits. The collar and one cuff of one set is shown in the picture. Pretty stunning collars of these striped ribbons are made by folding the ribbon crosswise on one edge is about an inch higher than the other and laying the folded edge into box plaits. The plaits are stitched down near the bottom and in another line of stitching an inch or more higher. The plaits do not extend quite to the bottom of the ribbon at the sides and back. The ribbon is laid in folds across the front and fastened at the left side under a row of little, flat silk-covered buttons. The buttons are represented on the right side.

Many pretty ornaments for the dressing table in the form of pincushion covers grace the holiday ribbon counter, and these are in the form of beautiful girdles and sashes in greater numbers than ever.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Love is a very important factor in the costume of the day. Not only does it dictate the choice of material and coloring, the bodice and skirt, but it makes modern or ancient tapets and tunics.

Something new in doll babies is making its way into the nurseries, the recent invention of a German. The baby is built on a spring, which maintains the body part in a distended condition. When this is collapsed by a squeeze of the hand the air is permitted to escape readily, but in Opened His Eyes and Stared into His Wife's Face.

If Mary and he could have had a child like this!

He spoke gruffly to the little girl, but she did not seem to notice his presence. And at last, with a shrug of the shoulders, Driscoll turned his back on her.

He stared away—not in the direction of New York, however, but back toward his home. A new idea had come to him. He would remind that he had been killed in the wreck, and return home secretly, to discover what people were saying about him. He anticipated the jeers, the scoffs, the consolations, and his own triumph when he suddenly appeared in the midst of them.

The news of the disaster had spread rapidly, and, five miles down the line, Driscoll passed a wrecking train, with a medical car attached. Behind it, alone in a spacious berth, there lay a man in a buggy, who pulled up his awesting sied.

"Have you seen the wreck?" he shouted.

"Yes," answered Driscoll. "I was aboard. My friend, Jim Driscoll, was killed, and that's enough for me. Are you a reporter?"

"Yes, I'm a newspaper man," answered the other. "Give me a short account while I rest my horse. Quick!"

"I will if you'll put Jim Driscoll in jail as dead," answered Driscoll. "Say Jim Driscoll of Boxville, Ill., was killed by breaking his neck, because I'm not agoing to break the news to his family."

The herdsman was struck and Driscoll gave the other a five minutes' account of the wreck. Then he hurried along the line.

He caught a branch train at the junction, and, reaching Boxville at o'clock the next evening, attired in a shabby suit which he had purchased at a pawnbroker's, he made his way in the dark through the streets of Boxville. Nobody who knew him in the gathering darkness recognized Driscoll in the shabby, dilapidated stranger.

He paused upon the garden gate and crept to the outside of the parlor window. Inside he saw a small crowd of neighbors, but his wife was not there.

"Will be a hard blow for Mary," one of the crowd was saying. "Poor Jim!"

Driscoll recognized him as the local druggist, with whom he had been on bad terms for years. He clenched his fists. He hated the man's property even more than his business.

"Now there's many talks against Jim, but he wasn't such a bad fellow," broke in the shoemaker. He was a man named Austin, with whom Driscoll had had a feud of several months' standing, on account of a barbarous sewer installation. "When a man's cranky folks makes allowances for him. I tell you, a man who can keep the love of a woman like Mary Driscoll must have some good in him"—it stands to reason."

"It's a pity there wasn't no children," sighed Miss Hemans, the sister of the butcher. "That's what side into their hearts like acid. But I guess that if he had Mary Driscoll will be so overjoyed that she'll take on a laugher look for her."

"No chance of his recovering, is there?" asked Austin.

"A small one," said the butcher. "The doc says that if he recovers consciousness he'll most likely get well. It seems there's a splinter of pine pressing on his brain, and they can't tell how much it's injured him. If he recovers consciousness, the brain's all right; if he don't—well, he won't, that's all."

"Old Mary Driscoll writes that?" asked Austin.

"Sure. She wrote to Miss Hemans here."

Jim Driscoll was conscious of mingled emotions. The first was of shame and humiliation. Of all the neighbors gathered there, not one had a bad word for him. But the second was of disgust. Could it be possible that his wife had gone to the hospital and actually mistaken another man for himself?

He was somebody lying. That was a more probable explanation. Of course! It was a lie. His impulse was to run into the room, but he restrained himself, and he heard another speaker say:

"I tell you, Miss Hemans, when I saw Mary Driscoll stiff off the floor like the locked actually pretty in that black dress of hers, in spite of her sorrow. She was crying, and she couldn't hide it, but she looked like a queen. Jim Driscoll ought to bring back the youth to some people."

"Shut bad scrow enough," broke in the first answering voice that Driscoll had heard. "Living with a man like Jim is enough to make any woman wish she was dead."

"Nobody knew the croaker. He was the cashier of the local bank, and about the only friend he had in Boxville. And the sudden realization of the fellow's treachery almost unstrung the watcher at the window.

He, Driscoll, had been so wrapped up in his hatred and bloodiness that he had never been able to tell his true friends from the false ones. He had acted like a fool. An overwhelming sense of remorse came over him. If he could see Mary now, and tell her what a fool he had been!

And, unable longer to restrain himself, he sprang for the door, opened it, and rushed into the middle.

"I'm here, and I've heard every word!" he shouted to the assembly. "You, Mr. Devine—" he turned to the cashier—"were my best friend, and you can walk right out of my house and never come—

"Wait, Jim Driscoll was a good man in his way," said Miss Hemans, wiping her eyes.

"They had not heard him! Nobody had heard or noticed him! And, even as he stood there, bewildered, Devine walked straight into him—and through him!

In an instant Driscoll understood. He was dead! He had died in the collision, and he was in his own house in the spirit, while the mangled flesh lay in the hospital, no doubt, where his patient wife was watching.

"I agree with you, Miss Hemans," the butcher answered.

Jim Driscoll turned slowly away, and with the realization that his last chance to redeem his life was gone, an agonizing sense of hopelessness crushed him.

"Jim!"

Jim Driscoll opened his eyes and stared into his wife's face.

"O, thank God, Jim! You are conscious. You are going to get well Jim, God has answered my prayers. I have prayed for you night and day these ten days past, and the doctor said if you knew we again you would recover. Jim, my dear—Jim, O my dear!"

And, kneeling at the bedside, she flung her arms round the sick man's neck.

"Jim, everyone is talking about it," she said later.

"About what?" whispered Driscoll feebly.

"The little girl in the cast bedlook at her, Jim! Don't you remember? The poor little thing was thrown the car which had fallen on her father and killed him. Nobody knows how you freed her, but it left back on your head and injured you terribly. And, Jim—"

Driscoll could read the hope in his wife's eyes.

"Yes, my dear," he answered, pitying her hard. "If you like, Mary."

"You'll adopt her, Jim? He has nobody in the world."

And that the Mary Driscoll read the answer in his.

Certainly Not His Hat.

The good parson was preaching out of town and he went into a barber shop and got a shave. The barber brushed a hat and handed it to the parson, who was dozed off in an absent minded way. The parson dined at the home of a pillar of the church that evening and the parson was asked to asks church members. When the guests were leaving the host handed them their hats. He looked inside one hat to see the name and seemed slightly shocked. "Is this your hat?" asked the host. "Yes," replied the parson, "that is mine." The host handed the hat to the parson and he glanced at the inside of the hat before donning it. And there, pasted into the crown of the hat, was a card bearing this legend: "No; you do—— fool, this ain't your hat."

Measure Knitting.

Always make a swatch before beginning any important piece of knitting. Cast on about twenty stitches with the needles and wool it is intended to use. Knit about a dozen rows, withdraw the needles and measure how many stitches go to the inch. Then cast on according for the piece of work that is to be done. In following directions that call for so many stitches to the inch, change the needles—fine or coarse—until the right size is found.

EXCESSIVE ATHLETICS HURT

Coach Courtney of Cornell Recommends That Universities Take Entire Control of Sports.

Mr. Courtney, the Cornell rowing coach, who for many years has been actively identified with university athletics, has spoken out strongly against the system under which university athletics are conducted. "If athletics are not a good thing, they ought to be abolished. If they are a good thing for the boys, it would seem to me wise for the university to take over and control absolutely every branch of sport; do away with the boy management, stop this foolish squandering of money; and see that the athletics of the university are run in a rational way."

Besides making those criticisms and recommendations, Mr. Courtney has commented on the declining standards of university athletics, as measured by their class work. According to him, an increasing number of men who engage in university athletics show a mediocre rank in scholarship. Formerly the university athlete of Cornell was desired and sought for upon graduation by business men; he was presumed to have qualities that would make him exceptionally useful in business. Now the athlete is no longer in such high demand; instead, it is the man who has the ability and capacity in the more technical or scientific branches of his college training. The celebrated athlete, it begins to appear, is to specialized in athletics as not to seem qualified for any other pursuit. He is no longer the "all-around" man, and the officers whom he used to succeed in business are not wholly fair to the present-day athletes or to present-day athletics. They are significant, however, as indicating a gradual change that is taking place in public opinion.

PARTICULAR USES FOR FLAGS

Black Banner From Time Immemorial Has Been Adopted as Flag of Piracy—Red Denotes Danger.

"Strike the flag" is to lower the colors in token of submission.

"Dipping the flag" is a courtesy and hoisting it again in salute to a vessel or fort.

A "flag of truce" is a white flag taken before an enemy to indicate a desire for consultation.

The black flag from time immemorial has been adopted as the flag of piracy.

A yellow flag flown from a vessel is a sign of disease and denotes quarantine.

A star at half-mast denotes mourning. When a man is lost at sea the vessel returns with its flag at half mast to announce the tidings of death.

When the president of the United States embarks in his barge the Anacostia flag is hoisted to the bow and at the main of the vessel.

Flags are everywhere used as the signal by which the officers whose ships are indicated by them are called "flag officers."

The flag is a sign of defiance and is often employed by disturbers of the peace. It is also used to denote danger.

Light the Fires of Good Cheer.

The trouble with a good deal of social entertaining and and kindness of that it is "put on." Instead of being the spontaneous expression of what is seething in the heart, it is assumed to cover up what is in the heart. Instead of trying to look as if you felt happy, when you are really miserable, light the coals of cheer in your heart and let them shine out in smiles.—Christ Companion.

ANTS TALK WITH "FEELERS"

One of the Most Interesting Discoveries of Insect Life Is That of the Antennae Language.

Of the many discoveries that have been made about our insect friends, perhaps the most interesting is that of the antennae language. Many boys and not a few girls have watched the movements of a large bevy of ants, and have been struck by the fact that they seem able to communicate with one another by means of the long, stem-like objects protruding from their heads. These are called in science "antennae," but a good name for them is "feelers," and a very fitting one it is, for when ants are awake and in action, these organs are kept continually moving in front and on either side, touching the various objects in their path, as though they would "feel" their way.

These "feelers," at least in the case of ants, are even more important than eyes. They determine the form of objects; they locate the individual trail or path of their kind; they distinguish friends from foes, they test the quality of food and of all other objects, and, in an elementary way make records in their memories for future reference and comparison.

Ants "Talking" by Crossing Their

OVERCOMING SPIRIT OF WAR

First Thing for Boys to Do Is to Recognize Heroes Men Display Their Race or Country.

When this hideous war is over all the nations will be filled with the spirit of hate, for without hate there could be no war, writes David Starr Jordan in the Ladies' Home Journal. It is the duty of our university to teach our boys to try and overcome this spirit, to help each man and each coner to realize that one man is just as good, that he may live or whatever language they speak.

A boy in one of the continental countries, when he was told one day that his war soldiers of a neighboring country going away on the train. One soldier leaned out of the window, put his hand on his mother's shoulder and reached down to kiss her. The boy was greatly surprised. He had been taught to hate the people of that neighbor country and he thought that was the right thing to do. He did not know they loved their mothers just as he did. When he saw that, he did not want to fight them, but wanted to make their friends.

If a nation is victorious, it has at the end the same troubles it would have had if it had been vanquished. War is a two-edged sword without any hilt, and it cuts every one that wields it. And are bad as the sting of defeat is the curse of victory. The defeated nation wants to fight again, to revenge itself; and the victorious nation wants to fight again because it feels sure that it is strong enough to whip anybody. And each of them blame the other, without sense, without reason.

Mountains of Rock Salt.

Near Jelfa, Algeria, is to be seen a mountain of rock salt, 200 feet in height and nearly a mile in diameter. Two other hills of this character are known in Algeria, both being near Biskra, and in all cases the salt is surrounded by tissues, marls and clays. A curious feature of the Jelfa hill is the fact that in spite of the enormous pressure the material with composing it it stands up in high relief from the surrounding clay and contains no valleys or other sign of cracks. It does however, contain a number of sink holes, as in a limestone country. When the brief torrents of water occur the water sinks almost at once into these cavities and emerges through the numerous salt springs.

WHERE THE PEACH IS KING AND THE APPLE HIS TWIN BROTHER

Fruit Exhibits at Empire Fair.

By H. J. GANIELS.

How would you like to be the peach man—the fellow who grows the old peach orchard, with trees like the one in the picture? That orchard is on the land of the Hughes Lumber company in Leelanau county, where peach orchards are old and many growths on cut-over timber lands that in earlier years were abandoned as valueless. Thousands of acres have been set out in and around Empire in the last few years, and it will be but a few years more before there will be no other sight to greet the eyes than can lay one over Empire as a peach valley.

The peach may be one also up around Empire, but the apple is his twin brother. At the Empire fair this fall the apple showing made was wonderful, and the best part of it was that the best exhibits came from that immediate neighborhood. The growers in that section of the state have learned what many another section of farmers has not learned, that is, how to sort and pack apples. The exhibit was one of the most attractive ever seen in Michigan, and that is saying something—for the last year or two, Oregon and Washington apples can scarcely look better than those at the Berlin fair, exhibits from that village and nearby Honor, and everybody knows that apples from the Pacific slope are not "in it" for a moment when one considers flavor and quality.

Hereafter there will be no fruit routing on the ground in Grand Traverse county orchards, because of inefficient methods in the grading and the naming of fruit, and practically all of the Empire growers will sell their crop under a certain brand name. The idea of a growers' association has been enthusiastically received by the Grand Traverse county fruit producers, and it is expected that every grower of any importance will become a member before next spring.

HOLDING THE POTATOES.

Farmers in northwestern Michigan are holding their potatoes, and it is estimated by O. A. Swehm, a Cadillac buyer, that less than one-quarter of the last crop has been sold. Warehouses in Lake city contain about fifty thousand bushels of potatoes, while the warehouses in Cadillac are said to hold 90,000 bushels. The best well located dealers were offering 35 cents a bushel, while in some places but 30 cents was offered. That the price of potatoes will remain somewhere near the present mark is the belief of all Cadillac buyers, who feel that potatoes are so plentiful that there is little danger of a big rise. A number of farmers in that section of the state have their own storehouses and many have from three thousand to six thousand bushels "salted up."

CLEAN BILL FOR CLARE.

Dr. H. Cohenour of the United States department of agriculture has just completed a most searching investigation of the cattle herds in the vicinity of Clare, some of which were recently received from Buffalo. He declared that he found every head in the finest condition, and with no indications that the foot-and-mouth disease had entered that neighborhood. Among the most extensive herds inspected were 47 head for William H. Gates, of Vernon; 80 head for John Doodle of Grant; 56 head for James H. Dockery of Clare, and in no case was there even a trace of the disease. Doctor Cohenour is one of the leading experts sent out by the department, and he declares that the danger of spreading the disease is practically over, due mostly to the vigilence of the state and national departments. He also stated that the nearest point to Clare where the disease exists, even in a mild form, is in Genesee county.

STOCK RAISING IN OTSEGO.

That stock-raising is becoming a common and profitable industry in Otsego county is evidenced by the large number of horse sales reported in various sections of the country and the frequent shipments of stock to the big market centers.

Shipp & Haight, who recently engaged in this business, have grazed several hundred head of two year-olds on the plains south of Gaylord, and a few days ago drove their herd from the plains to the Haight farm for winter quarters, or until such time as the market will warrant their disposal. Seventy-five head of the herd, which constituted one bunch that were driven through to-to, and they presented a noted and picturesque sight.

Nicholson & Sheridan, of Johannesburg shipped a carload of cattle one day recently to Detroit. Yulil Brothers of Vanderbilt have been shipping cattle almost regularly for the past several weeks and various small shipments are made from time to time by the other owners.

Many of the owners of large herds of cattle are lumbermen who own vast tracts of cut-over timber lands, and they are utilizing the land now for grazing until such time as they have gradually sold off the land for small farms.

MINT GROWERS NOT DISCOURAGED.

Stewart Anderson is one of the mint growers on the muck lands north of Hudsonville, who is not discouraged over the low price which oil is bringing. He has 60 acres of much land and this year he had eight acres of mint, some of which gave him 18 pounds to the acre. His later plant, he yielded only 10 pounds to the acre. The total for the acreage was over 300 pounds. This he has sold for $1.15 per pound.

Mr. Anderson will plant another field the coming spring and will depend his acreage as fast as his means will permit. Mr. Anderson has owned his property several years, and has built a comfortable home and got his farm cleared from which he feels that he has worked his' and prospered. He knows the swamp from one end to the other, and remembers when wild turkeys were plentiful. The last one he saw was 15 years ago. He got seven that season. None have since been seen there.

OIL IN WEXFORD.

Indications are that there is oil in paying quantities beneath the soil of Wexford county, and that it will be the ambition of the Cadillac Oil and Gas company, who have expended upwards of $25,000 in the last two years in an effort to discover oil in the county. Work has been in little progress for about well, but members of the company say that the work will be resumed later. The difficulties that have been encountered in drilling for oil have been so great that it would not appear to be worth while to continue the work. The Michigan northern Indiana sand was said by the operators to be the worst proposition to bore through which they had ever met with. The sand would come up in the pipe a great distance and would cause the drillers to be spent pumping this sand out. It is said that one drill lost a quarter of the time spent in the work was on actual boring.

GO IN FOR PICKLES.

John Noldin, representing the William W. Vaughn company, has been very successful in securing farmers to contract for an acre or more of cucumbers for pickles for his factory at Alma. The farmers, realizing the extra profit it means to them, have responded to the call and the acreage of the new concern is assured, so far as the 1915 season is concerned. About one hundred and thirty acres have been contracted for. A few more farmers will be needed and it is expected that by December 10 150 acres will be signed for. The company, whose headquarters is in Detroit, is planning to put up 20 tanks, 10 by 14 feet, covered with a roof, and a large warehouse, calling for the expenditure of at least $5,000. The pickle industry at Empire will give employment to several men almost the whole year round.

PUPILS WOULD HELP.

The class in agriculture in the Big Rapids high school has asked the farmers of Mecosta county that they be very desirous of being of real service to them and have invited them to submit their agricultural problems to the class for solution. The class possesses apparatus for testing skim milk, whole milk, cream, testing for water and preservatives in milk, and many other tests which ought to be of real benefit to the farmers. They are prepared to make an analysis of corn, sample, germinate and make recommendations of the germinating power, power to the bushel, and other important facts concerning it.

Gather Squashes and Pumpkins.

Squashes and pumpkins should be gathered as soon as frost has killed the vines and placed in a dry place protected from frost. If the Hubbard squashes are not ripe they may be ripened in a dry, warm place. If they are stored where it is cold and damp they are apt to rot before they are ready for use.

Quality Counts Most.

Egg production is not measured so much by the quantity as by the quality of the food.

Two-Year-Old Peach Tree in 25-Acre Apple and Peach Orchard at Empire.

WORKING IN A BERRY PATCH

Fall Plowing Saves Time and may be Done When Other Work is Not Pressing—Protect the Canes.

If manure is to be applied this year it should be hauled from the wagon any time between now and spring that is convenient. The rains will wash the fertility from it, and much of it will be available as a plant food the following season. Commercial fertilizers, however, should be applied in the spring, when the ground is warm and moist. This is a time when the right indicating keys on the drum and then turn the handle, meanwhile the drum revolves. These indicator keys have their counterparts, into position, strike other mechanism on the registering wheels and form a combination, which is ready for your addition or multiplication or whatever it may be.

Western Michigan

A Region that is Rapidly Developing as a Fruit Growing and General Farming Section

IRRIGATION FOR THE STRAWBERRY BEDS.

While western Michigan has an annual rainfall that is approximately 30 inches, still there are certain crops that can be profitably grown with more or less irrigation. This is specially true of the strawberry, because this fruit is largely water, and when it commences to ripen it is very difficult to get some moisture into what the berries can take up. In fact, the more water that can be led to them, the bigger the berries, and the bigger the profits. Several strawberry growers in western Michigan have worked out different systems of irrigation, and there is no doubt but that the system that is usually successful. He has overhead pipes with which it is possible for him to spray practically his entire strawberry patch. The pipes are arranged so that they can be turned, first this way and then that, and the water can be sprayed on any one section of the patch. The water is supplied by a pump operated by a gasoline engine. The general rule is to do the spraying at night, sending the spray one way in the first half of the night and the other way the last half. When the sun rises in the morning the ground is well wet down and the strawberry plants soon look up the water, and the berries in consequence are larger than what they otherwise would have been.

PUT NEW BLOOD INTO YOUR BUSINESS.

A medical journal reports an experiment upon a very feeble horse twenty-six years old. The blood of four lambs was transfused into the animal and he immediately showed marked signs of new life and vigor and seemed much younger. The younger, more vigorous corpuscles of the lambs rejuvenated the old horse and imparted a new vital force.

There are business houses which have become feeble from the loss of the old time vigor and vitality. Sometimes because the proprietors have gotten along in years or because they have made their money and are inclined to take things easy. But when over the reason of a declining vitality in business, if it is not resuscitated and rejuvenated with new blood, the low vitality, if it is not reinvigorated in some way, dry rot will set in and it will gradually peter out.

I have in mind a proprietor who has been running his business on the same old plan, on the same old ideas which he first used. He sees progressive young men moved to his vicinity, and have created the success of business, and although he sees his customers gradually slipping away from him he does not realize that competitors are doing doesn't interest him. He is wrapped up in his own ideas in the same line of business are doing, what competitors are doing, what they are adopting. The result is that he is hopelessly in a rut and his business is gradually dropping off.

A business must be fed just as much as the human body, and it must be fed on new food; it must be fed on new ideas.

The progressive man keeps in touch with his competitors.

The junior member of a firm recently established was asked by an old business man how he managed to get their store so quickly into fine, so fully equipped, and in such excellent working order. "Young man he replied that he had been "on the road" for some time, had visited food fairs and model stores in different sections of the country and that he had brought put into practice the points he had gained while traveling. He then added, in him some entirely new and attractive features which they were about to introduce as the result of his observations while "on the road."

When a man says to himself, "Now I can breathe more freely, I can let up a little, I have a field, I am head and shoulders ahead of my competitors and I can afford to take things easy," he is in danger.

Overconfidence is the first sign of a decline, the first symptom of deterioration. We do our best work when we are struggling for our position, when we are trying with all our might to win our ambition, to attain that which the heart longs for.

Ambition is the very mainspring of efficiency, for without it there is no room for the necessary effort to achieve. It is possible to run the efficiency of ambition, but the enemies of ambition are always at work, discouragement, fear, and laziness, the temptation to take things easy, to slide along the line of least resistance, the feeling of satisfaction in one's achievements — all these things, if not generally watched and guarded against, will gradually undermine the ambition.

This is true of the teacher, the preacher, the merchant, and the specialist in every line. If they do not keep up with the times, if they do not keep in the very van of progress, always on the lookout for the new and the progressive, they quickly become behind, and have to be passed by and everywhere is crowding out the old methods.

WHAT DO YOU SEE IN OTHERS?

"The image of God is in the lowest criminal, and we do not see it, we do not care for it and be a neighbor of that man," says Dr. Lyman Abbott.

One of the finest fruits of culture is the power to see the man or woman whom God made in his own image and not the one who is scarred by sights and sections, the one who is awarded by vicious living. It is only the generous, loving eye that ever sees in this degree of culture.

Most of us are inclined to judge people by their faults, to see in them their mistakes, their shortcomings, their perversities. It is only the broad, charitable, great-hearted man or woman who is blind to the defects of others and who can see only the good upon their good qualities. They reason the truth that there is a God in the manger of men, a philanthropist in the slightest, a hero in the big great coward, which an omnipotent grace enough might call out.

A faithful friend, a good disciple, finds in detail to all evidences. Nothing is so quick to discover good in others, so ready to see, discover and manage the good in others as a true friend. Nothing is so quick to see, discover and manage the "hardly safe." "Well, well, there is a good in it, and I can see it myself," said the man who was the first to see the Ohio, the Gulf stream, the Mississippi, fought at Bunker Hill, shared the pain of Scanlon or stood with Perry at the stake. "Gentlemen—these fleets are time and place." Life has always been commonplace to commonplace people. It has been sublime only when men have lifted themselves above it. "Self-Culture Through the Vocation," by Edward Howard Griggs.

Realistic Scenery.

Realistic scenery and stage settings are not being used in an endeavor to make them more realistic and so, in some cases, unnecessarily. Nevertheless and convenience of the present type of flat and built-up paper and wood forms. This is made of a rubberized fabric and so arranged that it may be inflated quickly and easily about with ease. The idea has been worked out in reproducing trees upon the stage, with the result that they appear very real from a short distance. A very large oak tree may be collapsed and packed in a small space for shipment.

Victory.

Victory was heard to use intense language, under her breath, concerning her foe, failure.

"Will I ever," she exclaimed, "learn to control my temper? Never things so that when I get ready to perch on one or another of these banners, the wind blows and I don't look asinine and wonder if it's really a moral victory?"

LAY NINE DAYS ON FIELD WOUNDED

German Officer Fell Between Trenches; Kept Diary.

WAR STORIES KEEP ARRIVING

Every Day the Cable and Mail Bring Tales From Europe's Battlefields. Sanguines Had Frozen Toes Amputated Without Even a Groan—A King Albert Incident.

New York.—Strange stories keep coming from the battle front in Europe. Tragic tales of heroism and death are so numerous that only the most striking ever be printed. Here are some that have just reached this country.

A correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle in Flanders telegraphs the following:

"The Germans had been attacked and driven back during a certain engagement to their trenches, 400 yards from ours. Between the lines a German officer fell wounded by a bayonet. He was nearer the British trenches than the Germans, but whenever our men began to go out to carry in the wounded man the German snipers got busy. They would neither succor their tortured comrade nor let the British do it.

"For nine days the wounded officer lingered. Finally a British noncommissioned officer and one of two privates crawled to the fallen man at night and brought him in. For nine days he had lain there pierced by a bayonet from breast to back without food or drink. He was unconscious when rescued and died soon after. Throughout his purgatory the poor last man, unable even to crawl, had kept a diary, a record of physical and mental anguish borne like a noble gentleman. On him we found a photograph of his wife and two little children.

"A British officer translated the diary to our men and with a catch in his voice held up the German officer as a hero to whom they should bow their heads in reverence. The diary was sent to headquarters and perhaps has by now found its way with the picture to the widow of his mate."

A King Albert Story.

A Belgian soldier in northern France, severely wounded, said a correspondent.

"The other day I saw my king. He was ragged and stained. As all else with him wanted to remove the mud from his clothes.

"'No,' said King Albert: 'let it stay. If my own and among king does not let it stay. It is better so.' he laughed.

"We all cheered him. He bade us take heart, as brighter days are dawning."

The Hardy Senegalese.

Mrs. Harry Flagg, chief commissioner of the French wounded emergency fund, who has just returned to London from a visit to French hospitals, tells of the suffering of the soldiers from the troops in the Belgian trenches. She says some of the hospitals need anaesthetics, bandages, surgical instruments and all goods.

"In one hospital I saw Senegalese operated on without anaesthetics," said Mrs. Flagg. "Their toes had been frozen and immediate amputation was necessary.

"All the toes of one Senegalese were removed, and he did not even groan. Nothing in the world from the operating table and began searching. He found a spare stick to set his teeth down, smoking to deaden the pain. Then he began to pray in a low voice. Presently a nurse offered to help himself, but he refused. He walked to the convalescents' table and ate his full share.

"The courage and heroism of these men are simply beyond belief. They always urge the nurses to attend to others. But their suffering in the wet climate are painful."

Sad Fate.

Kriss—Who would be for him when he married? Kross—Nobody. They all called him an idiot. Smart Set.

VON HAESELER IS SEEKING LOST RIB

Famous Old German General Sees Service In Four Wars.

SEVENTY-EIGHT, STILL ACTIVE

Veteran of War With Denmark, War With Austria and War of 1870-71, Goes Back to Battlefields and Lends Valuable Aid in Directing Destinies of Army Operating in Belgium.

Berlin—"You ingloriously, in the war of 1870 I left a rib in France. Now I want to go back and get it."

Thus Count von Haeseler, "father of the modern German army," the sole surviving leader of the old school of militarism and now attached to the general staff of the German crown prince's army operating in Belgium, requested the German emperor to assign him to new duties on the outbreak of the war.

Von Haeseler is a great organizer and has done much to retain the prestige as laid down by the elder Von Moltke, uncle of the present field marshal.

He belongs to an old Prussian house of the nobility which was ennobled more than two centuries ago. His name is Gottlieb Count von Haeseler and he was born on Jan. 19, 1836. Completing his education, he was made lieutenant in the lancer regiment at the age of seventeen and soon attracted attention by his decision, ability and his remarkable skill as a rider.

In the war against Denmark in 1864 he served with distinction and was rewarded with a promotion by the king

COUNT VON HAESELER.

Where the war against Austria began in 1866 he was with the army of the crown prince.

In the war of 1870-1 he distinguished himself upon many battlefields and was decorated with the Iron Cross of the second and later of the first class in 1873. Later he was given the order Pour le Merite.

He continued to take an active part in German military affairs until 1901, when he was raised to the rank of field marshal general, and having completed fifty years of distinguished service asked to be retired. As Kaiser Wilhelm did not wish to dispense with such an his services he appointed him lifelong member of the Prussian upper house of parliament, where he took an active part in all debates on military questions.

When the present war broke out he was one of the first volunteers to offer his services to the fatherland and, although seventy-eight years old, is now doing active duty at the front, sharing the responsibilities and carrying strategic movements of the army of the crown prince operating against the allies.

The following story tells of an interesting incident in connection with the army to which Count von Haeseler is attached.

Since the German occupation of Malmedy the inhabitants have been much interested in a massive young officer whom the Germans treat with the greatest deference. He is generally believed to be the Kaiser's cousin, Prince August Wilhelm.

A complaint was raised by a townsman that the Germans had seized his wagon without payment. The complaint the young officer, who said then had been unsolicited, came forward and proffered a load for the value, which the paymaster honored without demur.

Later another citizen expressed a wish to change 20,000 francs in five-franc pieces for paper. Suddenly the young officer appeared, produced the francs, gave to that amount and entered a passing another to take the money to headquarters. The soldier obeyed without reverently.

Finally, a German general visited the youth, who was quartered at the home of a local councilor, and the latter heard his guest say, "General, I promise that I give orders not to shelve them."

"No visitor then departed.

The Call of the Cumberlands

By Charles Neville Buck

(Copyright, 1915 by W. J. Watt & Co.)

SYNOPSIS.

Jim Morris, college graduate, returns from Harvard to his home in the Cumberland mountains and discovers that his father, Samson Morris, is a moonshiner. Jim's family, who tells them that Jesse Perry is a revenue officer.

CHAPTER II—Continued.

"I hain't a-wantin' ter suspicion yo', Samson, but I know how ye feels about revenuers. I heerd that Jim Hoiter come by hyar yiddlin' plumb full of liquor an' a-cussin' ye. Ef Jake an' Asberry a-talkin' ter gither jest ahere yore pap was a-by, he broke off sharply, then added: 'Ye went away from hyar last night, Jim, an' ye hain't ha'ed ary word ye jest heered the news, an' come ter look fer it.'

"Ah yourself lowin' that I shot the shoots from the laurel?" inquired Sam, smiling quietly.

"Ef ye'll hain't lowin' ter, Sam, ye kin jest ha'ed ter lowin' ter Jesse Perry's folks will 'low hit. There's jest a-bolstin' you up ter lie ter Jesse fer Perry's sake, ef he dies they'll try ter git ye."

The boy hesitated a challenge about the group, which was now drawing from at Hoiter pointed Sam's good faith. His kinsmen sat their homes and women were sullen, but he made no answer.

One of the men who had listened in silence now spoke:

"In the old days, Samson, we hain't asayin' ye done hit. In the aas' place, ye're alone, an' ye ain't a-bossin' yo'-much. But I reckon them days don't lie, an, if they hain't in hyar yo'll need 'em. They're why we've done come."

The boy slipped down from his saddle and helped Lescott to dismount. He deliberately unbuckled the saddlebags and slung them on the top step of the stile, and, while he held his peace, neither denying nor affirming, his kinsmen set their homes and waited.

Even to Lescott it was palpable that some of them believed the young man no slab leadership responsible for the shooting of Jesse Perry, and that others believed him innocent, yet none the less in danger of the enemy's revenge. But, regardless of divided opinion, all were alike ready to stand at his back and all alike awaited his final utterance.

Then, in the thickening gloom, Sam son turned at the foot of the stile and faced the gathering. He stood rigid and his eyes flashed with deep passion. His hands, hanging at the seams of his jeans breeches, clinched and his voice came in a slow utterance through which throbbed the intensity of a mental struggle. Lescott.

"I knowed all 'bout Jesse Perry's a-jobin' over thar at b' house I was a little shaver ten years old Jesse Perry kept a-ridin' ter see Jim. Ever ye'd jest ever that

AUTUMN WORK FOR GOOD ROADS

All Obstructions Should Be Removed.

TRIM THE GUTTER LINES.

Dead and Dangerous Trees Should Be Cut Away and Burned; Also Brush, Briers and Other Growth should Be Destroyed.

To be quite plain about it, says a writer in the Farm Progress, the less annual digging and plowing, ditching and piling up of dirt done during the fall months the better for the roads. That is one of the things that have made American country roads about the worst in the world.

Road work ought to be well out of the way before midsummer. Of course it is not for us to say what would be the best way of getting the highways in the best of shape. Plowing, scraping, grading and filling ought to be done early enough in the summer to give all the newly moved earth time to settle down.

What this is done about all that is necessary to do in the fall is to run the drag over the road and pile up with the wheel tracks. To attempt anything more is to make it a certainty that the newly worked stretch of road will be a regular quagmire soon after before the first of the year.

Of course there is always some repairing that can be done unless the culverts and bridges have all been rebuilt lately. During the summer the earth may have been worn away from a culvert or a bridge approach, and where this happened it should be refilled and the approach put into good shape by the use of a great deal of broken rock and gravel. To put in dirt will merely make a bad matter worse, as soon as the road gets soft.

Other work that can be done with profit now is the clearing off all obstructions from the right of way. Trees and dangerous trees may be cut away and burned now as well as at any other time. Brush may be cleaned off the right of way and destroyed and briers and other growth taken out. It will do little good to cut and burn the weeds at this time in the year, since all of them have matured and are ready to scatter seed.

Trimming of the gutter lines and the cutting of the side ditches is work that may be done in the fall and, in fact, should be done then. The gutters and culverts will handle roots, water and little good to cut and burn them and if they are clean and lined up as they ought to be there will not be so many washed out places in the highways next spring.

AMERICAN ROAD CONGRESS.

Wide Interest Is Displayed In Next Meeting During November.

At least six national organizations are expected to hold distinct sessions at the fourth American good roads congress, which will be held in Atlanta, Ga., during the week of Nov. 3, under the auspices of the American Highway association and the American Automobile association.

A session devoted to the discussion of the interest in the management of public roads will be held by the National Civil Service Reform league. As there are more than 100,000 petty officials having authority to road matters throughout the United States and as there is an annual expenditure well over $200,000,000, at least $500,000,000 of which is wasted every year, according to expert judgment, the field of usefulness for the league is a broad one. Ways and means of bringing about an efficiency of merit system in lieu of the present home political organization will engage the attention of the delegates. If the time for any one full session, Richard Henry Dana president of the National Civil Service Reform league, will be one of the presiding officers.

As a sort compilation of every existing road law in each of the forty-eight states is nearing completion and will form the basis for analysis and proposed revision at an exceedingly important session of the congress to be directed by special committees of the American Bar association and the American Bankers association. It is expected that this session will result in a comprehensive system of simplified and efficient road legislation, which may be presented through the governors of the states to each legislature at its next session.

CONCRETE ROADS GAIN IN FAVOR

Especially Popular In Rural Districts.

DURABLE AND ECONOMIC.

Ideal Roadways For the Farmer Because at All Seasons They Are Easily Traversed by Both Feet Passengers and Vehicles.

The concrete road, especially in rural communities is winning its favor because it stands for durability and economy, and farmers favor it because of its low cross and gritty surface on which the slipping of horses or motor cars is almost impossible.

For a time they hoped that the old macadam type would continue to serve their needs, especially if thoroughly well built and cared for, but they have been forced to realize that in the case of every macadam road subject to automobile traffic destruction is inevitable. In the old days of horse and wagon traffic time and hoofs and steel tires constantly created new building material by wearing down the stones, but under automobile traffic the rapidly revolving tires divorce the rock dust and binding material in clouds, and the stones, upon exposure, are flipped out and hurled aside. The situation has become acute, and thus it is imperative for every community to decide whether it will submit to and raise, pay excessive annual maintenance charges or pay for a road so solid that it will never get out of repair. In many localities farmers have demanded the first two propositions as impossible, and they are building durable roads. And some of them believe it is better to do this by cooperation than to have to take over and control the roads, thus depriving them of the right to say what type of road shall be built.

It was the farmers who defeated the proposed $50,000,000 bond issue in Pennsylvania. They wanted the expenditure made through roads that would not be utterly destroyed long before state or county bonds should mature. In Connecticut, Maryland, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania both state and local communities are turning to the concrete road as the solution of their problem, and with excellent results.

Taking a sixteen foot concrete road as a basic highways of this character have cost on the average about $12,000 per mile, while maintenance costs have been practically nothing. For example, in Bedlefontaine, O., a concrete road put down twenty years ago has cost less than $25 per mile for yearly maintenance, while the average maintenance cost of macadam roads in the eastern states in 1912 exceeded $800 per mile per year. The former is adopting concrete has figured the matter in one way. A road is a business. The most conservative estimate of maintenance cost on macadam per mile per year would be certain to reach $300 if the road is subject to motor driven traffic and kept passable at all seasons. An equally conservative estimate for construction is $1000 per mile.

But aside from moderate first cost and practically negligible maintenance costs, the popularity of the concrete road in rapidly growing in rural communities due to the experience of those who have used it. For the farmer it is the ideal highway. This type of road appeals especially to the farmer and his family because it provides them at all seasons with an excellent place to walk as well as a thoroughfare for vehicles.

Wherever farmers have used these roads they are enthusiastic in their recommendation, not only because of their great durability and low maintenance cost, but because in every sense they represent the ideal highway and therefore the solution of the road problem as it applies to rural communities.

Poor Highways.

Poor highways lessen the profit of labor, increase the cost of living, burden the enterprise of the people, dull the sensibility of our citizenship, and hold down the educational attainment of the country.

DUMDUM BULLETS.

They Get Their Name From the Town Where They Originated.

Dumdum bullets have their name from a little town in India, near Calcutta, where the ammunition factory for the British government in India is situated. For the benefit of Afghanistan Indian matters, negroes and other barbarians the British had a better manufacture here which is half covered with steel, but with a soft leaden nose. When discharged from a modern rifle of high power this soft nose expands, or "mushrooms, turning the bullet in the air into a horrible lacerating object, which tears through the flesh of a man, surely bleeding him to death.

The purpose of this bullet is to kill the man every time. The purpose of the ordinary jacketed bullet of modern warfare, which is wholly incased in steel or nickel, is merely to put him out of the fight. It makes a small, clean wound. If it does not strike a vital part the bullet may go entirely through the man without wounding him seriously. But it shuts him out of the fight for the time being.

The British military authorities in India considered that a humane bullet like that would be of little use to fight savages with, and therefore, at Dumdum they manufactured the soft nosed expanding horror. But the international conference at The Hague in 1899 decided against the use of this bullet in war and adopted a rule forbidding it.—New York Mail.

ONE VIEW OF WAR.

And the Question of the Manner of the Soldier Boy.

When I but consider the word war I feel a shock, as if one spoke to me of old age, infirmities, some dead and distant thing, abominable, impossible, not to be endured.

When we hear of casualties we smile with pride—we exhibit our superior fitness over these savages.

Why, these savages, real savages, those who fight to eat the victims or who fight to be not eaten themselves.

Those youthful soldiers of the time does almost consider are destined to death, lost as the flocks of sheep driven along the roads to a butcher. They are sacrificed as fast on a plain, their bodies left by a stroke from a sword or their throats pierced by a bullet. And there are young men who could work, produce, be useful. Their fathers are old and I am their mothers, who during twenty years have loved and nourished them, as mothers can nourish, will learn in six months or perhaps a year that the son, the child, the big child, brought up with so much trouble, with so much money, with so much care, was thrown into a hole like a dead dog after his body, riddled by a bullet, has been trampled and crushed into pulp by the charge of cavalry. Why have they kilted her boy, her noble boy, her only hope, her pride, her life?

She cannot tell. Yes, why?—Guy de Maupassant.
